RED SQUARE AT COLUMBUS CIRCLE

Big Arena Grosses Giving Imports Edge Over U.S. Brand of Showmanship

Many American showmen are wondering whether the native entrepeneurs are losing their touch. Showmanship and top boxoffice attractions throughout the world, once regarded as a near U. S. monopoly, seem to have transferred over to imports. This obtains even in the U. S., which has long been able to build attractions and shows that made pygmies out of foreign counterparts. Now the alien incomers are able to command sizable leads at the boxoffice, which is the ultimate payoff.

Shows such as the Hurok imports of the Bolshoi Ballet, the Moiseyev Ballet, the Black Watch and a few others seem to have raised a new standard of coin return. Travelling American outfits with similar reputation have been unable to come up with gates nearly as impressive as those brought in by foreigners.

For example, the Bolshoi Ballet has been able to smash records in many situations. In three nights starting June 11 in Toronto, this outfit nabbed an astounding $240,000 for four shows. The Moiseyev Ballet scored $101,000 in two shows in Boston. The runs of these two shows were SRO at the Metropolitan Opera House and Madison Square Garden in N. Y.

Previously, the Black Watch, also imported by Hurok, brought tremendous returns, of the calibre that used to be normal for Liberace during his b.o. heyday. Liberace, for example, scored $65,000 in one night at the Garden, and got $43,094 in one night at the Boston Garden.

All these grosses were done in arenas, where large seating capacities are able to produce these king-sized takes. Significantly enough, all these takes were pulled by concert attractions. Another big grosser, although not as huge as the Bolshoi, is the Metropolitan Opera tour which has hit as much as $201,000 in Toronto.

Arena men say that it is possible to get these kinds of grosses with homegrown products. They feel,

Opera Seat Deductible If Warmed by Foreigner On London Biz Trip

London, June 30.

Companies which have bought either seats or boxes for Covent Garden Opera may claim the cost as an income tax relief if they use them for entertaining business visitors from abroad. The cost is $1,500 a year for an orchestra stall seat and $4,500 for a box.

The price allows holders to claim a seat at every performance except Government or charity galas. Associated TeleVision is among the companies which has bought a seat.

Journalism's Purpose

"Get your latest Journal-American," the newsboy hawked outside Yankee Stadium on the rainy night of the Floyd Patterson-Ingemar Johansson chamiponship fight, "the seats are wet in there!"

Blockbuster A Romantic Word To Wall Street

As the public has become selective about the pictures which make the hit parade, investors in picture company securities are becoming equally selective. It adds up to this: A production company with one or two blockbusters on the market all of a sudden gets the investor attention on the upbeat. And vice versa.

Case in point is Walt Disney Productions, which last week hit a new low for the year of $42, after a high of $57. Disney for a couple of years had been the darling of the stock buyers, having gone up and up ahead of all picture company stocks. And now the pendulum has swung. Disney has the widely successful "Shaggy Dog" but also has the more expensive, and commercially unhandsome "Sleeping Beauty" on its release schedule.

The stock buyers are in the know—they know that "Beauty" is going down on profits because the nearly $6,000,000 in production costs are not likely to be recouped. Further, they no longer expect an "extra" above the 40c annual dividend rate.

There's no fear that Disney is going on a continuing downslide, earnings-wise. But, too, there's now no longer any anticipation of a bigger payoff to stockholders.

LAS VEGAS COP FILES AS TV-TALE FEEDBOX

Hollywood, June 30.

Lanark Films has acquired rights to Las Vegas County sheriff and city police files for a series of 39 tv half-hourers. Filming tees off Oct. 1, mostly in Nevada resort town.

Series, created by Jack Gariss, who will co-produce with Donald MacLean, will be tabbed "Las Vegas."

SOVIETS' SAVVY SHOW BIZ PITCH

By ABEL GREEN

If the Russians erred with their "hard sell" at the Brussels Exposition last year—if error it was because, by contrast to the overly soft sell of the Yanks at the American Pavilion, the USSR perhaps eclipsed the U. S. in the eyes of some Europeans — they're not guilty of that in New York. Far from it. The Coliseum's press preview Monday (29), even without the fashion shows which will be a marathon display on the ground floor, produced two giant floor displays of top-drawer Russian life and the pursuit of culture, science and education if perhaps lacking in displays of love and the pursuit of happiness. In short, chums, it's a good show and will do boffo biz at $1 a head, 50c for the kids.

The sell, circa '59, may be softer but there's no denying its boffola impact in the Coliseum to an extraordinary turnout of press, radio-tv and general coverage. No denying that the Soviets are good copy in anything.

As part of the cultural exchange, which will see an American Expo-

RCA 2d Quarter Just as Bullish

Philadelphia, June 30.

Earnings of Radio Corp. of America are expected to show an increase of 40% for the second quarter of this year over the same period in 1958, a spokesman told financial reporters here. Sales should be up at least 15%, he said.

The gains are virtually the same as those clocked up in the first quarter of this year. Net profit for the second three months is estimated to run around $6,500,000 compared with $4,450,000 last year, which was equal to 27c a common share.

Profits after taxes for the first half of 1959 should reach between $19,000,000 and $20,000,000 compared with $13,500,000, or 86c a share in the comparable 1958 period. RCA sales in the current quarter are expected to exceed $300,000,000 compared with the 1958 first quarter's $264,000,000. Sales for the first half should be in the area of $625,000,000, compared with $542,000,000 for the corresponding months last year.

First quarter net profit was up to $12,931,000, equal to 88c a share, from $9,004,000 or 50c a share last year. Sales rose 16% to $321,800,000 from $278,300,000. All major segments of RCA's operations are enjoying improved sales this year over 1958, the spokesman declared.

State Dep't Sees Red in Yank Pix ('World,' 'Beach') on Atom Disaster

"Two large hydrogen bombs dropped near the Brooklyn bridge on a typical mid-October day would kill at least 6,098,000 persons in the New York area."

—From N. Y. Times, June 27.

The U.S. State Dept. takes a negative view of the release abroad of American films dealing with the dangers of a thermonuclear war. The Department particularly opposes the showing of such pictures in the socalled "neutral countries" and within the Communist orbit.

The Department's view has been communicated in connection with two Hollywood films—"World, Flesh and the Devil" and "On the Beach." Former deals with N. Y. following an atom bomb attack and shows only three people left. Latter concentrates on the dangers of radiation following a hydrogen or atom bomb war. Its message is that civilization will perish in the aftermath of such a war.

The State Department doesn't minimize the casualties that are likely to result from the dropping of the bombs. It does argue that (1.) films with such negative themes tend to instill "fear" in the neutralist countries and (2.) they play into the hands of Communist propagandists who have long propagandistically connected the Soviet cause with an anti-war pitch while maintaining ‘the world's largest forces.

'Salad Days' Really Is

London, June 30.

"Salad Days" notched its 2,000th performance last Thursday (25) and on Aug. 5 next will begin its sixth year at the Vaudeville Theatre. It has played to almost 1,250,000 people and grossed around $1,800,000.

The wife of Derek Holmes, who plays the lead, has had three children since he joined the show just after its London opening.

Prolific Israeli Show Biz Impact On the U.S. Scene

An Israeli influence is taking hold of the U.S. show business scene. Although Israel is only in its 11th anni year, its nationals have been making strong inroads in America's cafe, tv, recording, pic, concert and legit outlets. Bestseller on an Israeli theme, Leon Uris' "Exodus," is slated as an Otto Preminger (UA) filmization in 1960.

The Israeli push here will be further spotlighted in the fall when New York's Radio City Music Hall presents an all-Israeli stage spectacular as part of its regular "live" show. The Hall is currently working on the project with no date set yet. Dinah Shore also has scheduled an all-Israeli hour when she returns to her NBC-TV stand this fall. Upcoming also is "Hatikvah," Israel's first full-

PLAY MARKS BERMUDA'S FOUNDING 350 YRS. AGO

Hamilton, Bermuda, June 30.

The production staff for the presentation of Constance Bainbridge's "This Island's Mine" at the Festival Theatre, Prospect Park, Hamilton, here includes John Kaufman, theatre-stage designer and technical co-ordinator; Andrew Trimingham, costume designer; George Wagner, production stage manager; Rick Demling, Jessica Langton and Ann Trentham, stage managers; David Yeddeau, lighting designer, and Marian Graham, pressagent.

The play, being presented as part of the celebration marking the 350th anniversary of the founding of Bermuda as a British colony in 1609, has been directed by Basil Langton, who's also appearing in the offering.

Helen Hayes Beat Jinx That Child Stars Later Can't Act—Lee Strasberg

Minneapolis, June 30.

Here to teach the Actors' Studio technique at the U. of Minnesota Theatre, Lee Strasberg told his workshop that the members should not do as he does—watch such television things as "Gunsmoke" and "Paladin."

He said that he has nothing against video if his pupils will watch "the good old feature films" on it.

Among the "beautiful things" for drama students to see on tv's old pictures, he said, is "a beautiful scene acted by Margaret O'Brien in 'Meet Me in St. Louis'."

However, Miss O'Brien "has become a victim to what happens to young actors and actresses when they mature too early in the theatre," Strasberg believes. "They acquire bad habits and have acting problems later on," in his opinion.

"Helen Hayes is one of the few people who started young and is still a star today," he told the

U.S. Needs Film Fest in 'Typical City,' Not Miami or D.C.: Carl Foreman

London.

Editor, VARIETY:

A recent issue of VARIETY reported that Charles Einfeld strongly advocates an American International Film Festival—which is good—and that it be held either in Washington or Miami—which is bad.

"I feel that there would be a great deal of interest in such a festival and it would contribute to creating additional new interests in motion pictures," Einfeld says.

This, of course, is exactly what a handful of people have been shouting to deaf ears for the last few years. But Einfeld then suggests that "San Francisco was too distant a place for a full scale festival." Too distant from what? New York or Tokyo? The main value of a festival surely is the effect it has on countries throughout the world, through their representatives who attend, rather than on the country originating the fete.

The big chance which waits our industry—if we can adjust our thinking to truly international levels—is not so much the audience in America for American pictures as it is the audiences for American pictures in Japan, Southeast Aisa, Africa and Europe. While we concern ourselves with a falling graph at home based, in part, on the inroads of television, the sale of millions of outboard motors and sports cars and a consequent interest in outdoor weekends, the rest of the world, wherever the standard of living is being raised and the educational level elevated, is developing as a prime market for our product.

Films are so closely identified with America that, paraphrasing a recent White House executive, what's good about America is what's good about our films and,

Nucky Johnson Files $1,000,000 Libel Suit Vs. Saturday Eve. Post

Atlantic City, June 30.

A $1,000,000 libel suit against the Curtis Circulation Co., of Jersey City, has been filed in Trenton Superior Court by Enoch L. (Nucky) Johnson, once ruler of the South Jersey Republican Party. Johnson is soon to publish his memoirs.

The former GOP boss, who served a prison sentence in 1941 for evasion of $125,000 income taxes, alleges that he was defamed in a July 26, 1958 article in the Saturday Evening Post. The suit said the article quoted actor David Niven as telling about a trip many years ago to Atlantic City on a polo pony promotion.

Niven got into trouble, it added, when he refused to go along with a man who said he was Nucky Johnson. The suit says the Curtis

Shreveport (La.) Fan's Joy's (?) of Filmgoing

Shreveport, La.

Editor, VARIETY:

Last night, June 5, 1959, I had nothing particular to do. I usually find nothing on tv to watch on Fridays. I had no book to read, etc. And someone suggested we go to a picture show. Well, nothing good was on but we spotted a double feature at a drive-in, which none of us had attended for almost a year. (Joy Drive-In, Shreveport, showing "Stalag 17" and "Place in Sun"). So we decided to go see that.

We went early (6:30) and sat and talked (show didn't start till 7:45). But about the time the theatre started filling up with cars, a pickup truck pulled up and parked in front of us. Naturally being ordinary human beings we couldn't see over a pickup truck, so we moved. Well, (so I'm told), for the first time in months there was a good crowd at the show. Probably people like us who hadn't been in a long time but wanted to see the shows. As the show started more cars came in. Late. And they kept their bright lights on as they drove around to see where they wanted to park.

These many cars, plus a smokescreen from a nearby dump, ruined our visit to the theatre. But added, to these small problems, were the mufflers (or what ever you call them) that the young men had as they raced down the aisles as if they were at a drag strip. And lots of the young men parked would turn on their car lights as the girls walked past going to the refreshment stand. And they honked at the more well endowed ones. They hollered at each other. And if there had been no noise the speakers were so poor that I don't think I would have heard one-half of the show anyway. And a gang fight was broken up at the refreshment stand. And they invited you to come to the stand both during the show and during the 10-minute intermission. And if a boy wanted to call a girl to meet him at the stand he merely interrupted the sound and asked her to come to the stand, about 15 times I counted. About five minutes before the second feature ended the cars started racing their motors and left and put their lights on the screen as they crowded at the exit.

What I've said is that people are inconsiderate, and that the theatre management is poor: and I shall not pass in their doors again.

Also the same thing is driving me, plus the high prices, from the indoor theatres. Lack of ushers to quiet the young kids and teenagers and delinquent adults, the cut-up seats, and the false advertising are just signs that the owners don't care if I come to their theatre or not, and I've almost reached that stage myself. One theatre would

It's Benny Junior High

Waukegan, Ill., June 30.

A new junior high school here, which opens in the fall of 1960, will be named after this town's most famous son, Jack Benny.

The Waukegan school board has voted unanimously to name the million-dollar school after the comedian because, as board prexy James A. Rust puts it, "he's the man who put Waukegan on the map." Benny has always made references to his home town on his radio and tv shows.

The comic visited Waukegan last week to take part in its centennial celebration.

Liberace (Money In the Bank) On Royal Charity Bill

By DICK RICHARDS

Manchester, June 30.

Following his click vaude tour (plus a profitable seven-day appearance in the law courts) Liberace was one of the toppers of a starry bill at the first Royal Variety Show to be held in Manchester (23). The shindig was staged by Jack Hylton and Charles Henry at the Palace Theatre, was honored by the presence of the Queen Mother and netted around $33,000 for the Variety Artistes' Benevolent Fund and the St. John Ambulance Fund.

Emceed by fast-talking Tommy Trinder, the bill was brisk and lively and covered every form of light entertainment from the Halle orch to rock 'n' roll and including dancing and comics. Hylton drew heavily on talent lined up at the nearby Blackpool summer shows and three or four theatres were shuttered for one night to release

Blasts Dialog In 'Anger' Film

London, June 30.

Allegations that dialog in "Look Back In Anger" was "pure unadulterated filth for the sake of it" were made in the House of Lords during a debate on the Obscene Publications Bill. Lord Amwell said he saw the picture the previous week and in it were two "gags" of a description that one could not call Rabelaisian.

When people said it would go over the heads of the pure-minded, that simply was not true, he asserted. He had no objection to the double meaning, but those "gags" were pure filth of the most unutterable description.

Lord Birkett explained that the bill did not touch ordinary film production and he had always understood that the film industry had its own censorship, and before any film was produced it had to pass a severe test. He was astonished that in "Anger" there were passages that justified the strong words used by Lord Amwell. Although that kind of performance was outside the scope of the bill, he felt, nevertheless, that the common law was powerful enough to deal with it.

Armstrong on Mend, But Fest Dates Cancelled

A series of festival dates have been cancelled for Louis Armstrong, who was taken ill last week at the "Festival of Two Worlds" in Spoleto, Italy. Satchmo was hit by an attack of virus pneumonia, but is now on his way to recovery, having been discharged from the Spoleto Hospital. He'll fly to N. Y. Friday (3).

His manager, Joe Glaser, Associated Booking Corp. president, has cancelled out on several important dates to insure that Armstrong "takes it easy for a while." Among the stands knocked out are a performance at Lewisohn Stadium, N. Y.; Berkshire Music Festival, Newport Jazz Festival, and a stand at the Music Tent, Lambertville, N. J.

Toot-Toot-Toots Shor's Goodbye

By ABEL GREEN

As of today (Wed.) Toots Shor's restaurant at 51 W. 51, for 19 years a New York landmark, is no more. Last night the curtain came down. A week ago last night (June 23) they came from near and far, at $25-a-head, for a valedictory dinner to the boniface. The upstairs private dining room was SRO with 290 attendees. Scotch-and-nostalgia was the prime dish as a VIP turnout from all walks—show biz, industrialists, Shor's unashamedly preferred sports world, even the clergy and many politicos and barristers—came to honor the "saloonkeeper" (his own favored connotation) on his Farewell to 51st St.

The Scotch-and-nostalgia turned to unashamed affection for the restaurateur as the studiously sardonic script lost its veneer and veered to honest, adult approbation for a unique personality on the Gotham scene.

With a $1,500,000 buyout from the Zeckendorf-Mutual Life interests for his key acreage, to complete the new proposed $66,000,000 48-story hostelry as an extension of the Rockefeller Center-Radio City development, Shor's next problem is a new tavern roof over his exchequer. Obviously he'll "be out of action for six or eight months," as he puts it, and possibly more as the observer sees it unless Shor buys some already established restaurant. The proposed new Shor's is at 31-33 West 52, site of the old Leon & Eddie's (now a parking lot) which, as the midtowners know, has yet not seen one bulldozer in action.

Shor's own speech was a forthright recognition (1) that he "sees nothing but love in this room," referring to the affectionate turnout; (2), an unashamed appreciation of what friendship and kinship among the faithful disciples of the Shor clan really mean; and (3) a frank confession that "when they start tearing down this place they're tearing down part of my life, but they'll never tear me down or the memories and the love that is reflected here tonight."

The personal salvos played well in counterpoint as the dais, toastmastered by Tom Meany, spoke their pieces. Among them were Don Ameche, Bob Considine, John Daly, J. C. Flippen, Ford Frick, Jackie Gleason, Jack E. Leonard, Germany Can't Get Rid Of Hitler, Goering & Co.

Frankfurt, June 23.

Just after the German government had banned all copies of the "songs and speeches of Hitler era" LP here that was apparently copied from an American record, a new German-made disk with the voices of Goering, Hitler, Goebbels, Stalin and others has cropped up.

Unlike the first which was dubbed by German officials "a thinly veiled attempt at offering anti-Semitic feelings," the new one has the approval of the German government.

It's called "The Story of the Brandenburg Gate in Documents, Anecdotes, Original Music and Scenes." Concerning the famed Brandenburg Gate which today separates W. Berlin and E. Berlin, it was issued on June 17, the solemn anniversary of the 1953 uprisings of E. Germans who made a desperate and unsuccessful revolt against the Communists.

The platter includes the story of Berlin and Germany from 1789 until 1959. Voices of Wilhelm II, Hindenburg, Stresemann, Benito Mussolini, Churchill and Roosevelt are reproduced on it, with a special introduction by Mayor Willy Brandt of W. Berlin.

Stone in on D.C. Culture

Washington, June 30.

Edward Durell Stone of New York has been retained as consulting architect for the proposed National Cultural Center here, expected to cost $35,000,000 or more.

Stone has, among other things, designed the pavilion and theatre at the Brussels World's Fair, New York's Museum of Modern Art and the Victoria Theatre.

'Steps in Time' a Good Memoir of Fred Astaire's Show Biz Life & Times

"Steps in Time," by Fred Astaire (Harper; $4.95), is the rollicking memoir, not only of the author, but also of the life and career of his equally famous sister, Adele (Lady Cavendish); of the gilded age of show biz they decorated as a top terp team; and of Astare's ensuing, brilliant career in films and tv.

As relaxed as one of the dancer's popular routines, and delivered in his customary impeccable taste, this book tells of two toddling tots from Omaha who hit Broadway via the Claude Alvienne school of the dance, and by way of a vaudeville act written for them by another instructor, Ned Wayburn.

With parental encouragement, Adele's career began before she was six, and the gifted child was brought to New York for training. Fred came into the act with understandable boyish reluctance, but soon found his own dancing feet. Big time success didn't come overnight for the Astaires. There were endless tacky dates to play. "We died the death of a dog in Woonsocket," Fred recalls. Poli and the Gus Sun time followed, and, eventually, the "horrible No. 1" spot at the Palace, Chicago. In 1916, the youngsters played all the Eddie Darling-booked houses in New

MAJORS: 'BUILD STAFF PRIDE'

A Curb Which Helped Theatremen

[PER BRAZIL'S LUIZ RIBEIRO]

Longstanding price control law in Brazil, which was lifted only as of last January, hurt Brazilian exhibitors but—in a larger sense benefitted them. Luiz Ribeiro, prominent Brazilian circuit operator, explained in Gotham last week. Ribeiro runs some 125 houses in Rio de Janeiro and north of the capital.

What the law did, in effect, was to force Brazilian exhibitors to diversify instead of plowing their earnings back into the theatres, Ribeiro explained. "Some of us, myself included, invested in real estate," he said. "That's a good thing to do in an inflationary economy. So we in fact diversified even before the time came to do so."

However, Ribeiro hastened to add, the control law did cost Brazilian exhibitors a lot of money. Law has now been struck from the books and a price control system based on the types of theatres involved has been instituted. It leaves new and modern houses free of any controls.

Seven U.S. Distribs Draw Straws; But Share Costs and Receipts In Soviet Films Under U.S. Deal

Warner Bros. and Columbia got the plums last week as the Motion Picture Export Assn. members drew lots on who should get what Soviet film for U.S. release. However, neither WB nor Col will benefit individually since it was agreed to share both receipts and expenses among seven companies.

Warners will release "The Cranes Are Flying" and Col will handle "Swan Lake." These are considered the potentially most interesting among the Soviet pictures which the MPEA purchased under its deal with the Russians. Latter bought ten Hollywood pictures.

The Soviets will show "Marty" as their first American picture. Preem of "Cranes" is expected to be held in Washington in September, with "Marty" bowing in Moscow at the same time. There will be an exchange of personalities to liven up the respective premieres.

The seven Soviet films were divided among the companies as follows: WB—"Cranes Are Flying"; Col—"Swan Lake"; 20th-Fox—"The Idiot"; Paramount—"Circus Artists"; Universal—"Othello"; Metro—"Don Quixote"; United Artists—"Quiet Flows the Don."

All expenses and receipts on these films will be shared by the distributors on an equal basis. Committee of five will be appointed to supervise the arrangements. It'll consist of three domestic and two foreign sales managers. Despite the pooling, each distribution outfit will make its own decision as to whether to subtitle or

Japs Wanna Say How U.S. Permits Will Be Divided

American film companies once again are faced with a Japanese demand that Tokyo be permitted to allocate licenses to the individual U. S. distributors. The Japanese pitch has aroused concern in N. Y.

The Motion Picture Export Assn. has been working hard to retain its global license formula as the base for any division of permits. In the most recent instance, in France, it was able to work out an arrangement where the division of the Centre National was supplemented to give each U. S. company what it would have been entitled to under the formula.

The Japanese, some years back, allocated permits when the American companies found themselves unable to reach an agreement on division. Since then, the global formula has been worked out. Last year, the Japanese again did their own allocating, but in effect conformed to the formula.

Attempt will now be made to come to a similar understanding.

Poolside Flickers

Hamilton, Tex., June 30.

The remodeled 281 Drive-In Theatre has been reopened here by Mrs. Harold Strand and her son, Harold Jr. The ozoner now features a swimming pool, wading pool for toddlers and poolside speakers so patrons can swim and enjoy the pic at the same time.

The concessions building was remodeled with provisions being made for the charcoal broiling of hamburgers and hot dogs. Provisions have also been made for dancing on the patio.

Stanley Warner: 4/5th Girdles

Stanley Warner, third largest theatre circuit in the land (U. S.), derives slightly more than one-fifth of its profits from theatrical operations and nearly four-fifths from the subsidiary International Latex.

In terms of product the two would make the most distant of cousins. S-W is strictly film exhibition—a company linked with Hollywood in the closest sense. Latex deals in ladies' undergarments, plus drugs and chemicals. S-W bought out Latex a few years ago at $15,000,000.

An analysis from Shields & Co. provides the information that Latex and other non-theatrical enterprises gave S-W 78% of its profit before taxes, and theatres chalked up the rest. Importantly, theatres dropped almost $10,000,000 in gross operating profits but the "outside" fields almost made up for this.

Last year's S-W gross was $113,000,000. Theatre gross was $59,812,000 and merchandise $63,506,000. The margin of profit in the merchandise field obviously was better, according to Shields.

Fowley Touts Brazil, But France, Germany, Italy First in Co-Production

Hollywood, June 30.

Douglas Fowley, vet actor who returned last week from Sao Paulo, where he produced and directed "Macumba Love," a two countries' joint production venture, will rep Brinter International, Brazilian production firm that's lining up American producers to make films in South America.

Brinter isn't so interested in cofinancing as in having U.S. producers venture southward, so Brazilian film industry may benefit by Hollywood know-how, according to Fowley, who said there's plenty of coin available there for whatever

UNITED ARTISTS AS THE MODEL

In their eagerness to compete for the outstanding independent production talent, the companies are once again plugging their corporate entities and are building pride in individual trademarks.

This is something fairly new in an industry where, for many years, it didn't seem to make very much difference who delivered the product. Now, with the competition as much as the boxoffice as for contributing talent, a new emphasis is emerging.

Though there is a tendency to discount competition between the established majors for the top indies, the fact is that it exists. Columbia, having patterned itself somewhat after the United Artists example, is seeking to attract producers, Paramount's in there now and so, to a rising degree, is 20th-Fox. The attempt to lure the best men doesn't stop with the offering of the best terms. A great many other factors enter into it.

And this goes hand in hand with the new consciousness that the indies must be sold on the aggressiveness and efficiency of the organization to which they entrust their product, even though that product may be financed by the company itself. So the word's out to "build pride" in the organizations.

UA is way out in front in that drive, which it has pegged partly on its 40th annivershary celebration. But other companies aren't far behind, and there's a degree of back-biting, with some pointing to their own setups and comparing them with others which have contracted. It's an open secret that several outfits would economize on the distribution level if it weren't for the competitive spirit which, if they did cut corners, would put them at a disadvantage vis-a-vis the indies.

Col Pfd. Pays $1.06

Columbia's board of directors at a meeting this week declared a regular quarterly dividend of $1.06¼ on the company's $4.25 cumulative preferred stock.

Melon is payable Aug. 17 to stockholders of record Aug. 3.

Brando, 'Ugly American'

Marlon Brando has taken on the starring role in the film version of "The Ugly American," the book which roused Washington via its sharp criticism of the U. S. State Department. Picture will be shot on location. According to Brando, the essence of the story hasn't been "diluted."

Actor is currently before the cameras at Milton, N. Y., shooting "The Fugitive Kind." He said his own indie production, "One-Eyed Jacks," will eventually run a little over three hours. It's currently scoring and editing. "Ugly American" will be released via Universal.

'Chatterley's' B.F. Is Constitutional

There was a good deal of confusion in N. Y. Monday afternoon (29) in the wake of the news that the U. S. Supreme Court had struck down the N. Y. State censorship statute. Report was quickly followed by doubts as industry executives studied the published text of the ruling which made it plain that the decision wasn't as sweeping as originally thought.

Nevertheless, the men closest to the censorship situation said the ruling was highly significant, not only because it narrows further the censorship base, but also because it is likely to create additional sentiment for some sort of classification system.

Hugh M. Flick, assistant to the N. Y. State Education Commissioner and the former N. Y. censor, said he was frankly hopeful that the Court's ruling would have that effect. He opined that there was no reason why, for the moment, the motion picture division, i.e. the censor, couldn't continue to function with "obscene" as the sole

Says American Legion Sounds Off Vs. Academy in Ignorance of Facts

Hollywood, June 30.

Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences, answering an attack heard Thursday (25) at the California state American Legion convention, has stood firmly behind its January repeal of the controversial "blacklist" amendment which barred known Communists from Oscar eligibility.

B. B. Kahane, new prexy of the Academy, said, "We regret very much that the local group of the American Legion has seen fit to adopt and publicize resolutions condemning the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences without apparently knowing and understanding the facts and problems involved.

"We made our position clear in the statement we issued last January when the bylaw was repealed," Kahane went on. "This position has not changed."

The 17th District of the Legion, comprised of 59 Los Angeles area posts, adopted a resolution stating the motion picture industry is being re-infiltrated by Communists and their fellow travelers. Resolution continued, "An important part of the motion picture industry, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences, recently took a backward step by rescinding its former ban on permitting known Communists to receive its coveted Oscar." Resolution noted the Academy action was "deplorable" and urged the convention to take action alerting interested parties. The resolution was introduced by Adolphe Menjou.

The bylaw in question was repealed five months ago because, according to the Academy board of governors, "experience has proved the bylaw to be unworkable and impractical to administer and enforce in view of the fact that control over the engaging of talent for films does not rest with the Academy, but is the sole responsibility of the producers, both major and independent, and the proper function of the Academy is only to honor achievements as presented."

The bylaw had been adopted Feb. 6, 1957, following the "Brave One" incident when an Oscar winner for best original story, the King Bros.' "The Brave One," was one "Robert Rich," who never appeared and who, it was strongly suspected, was a blacklisted writer using a pseudonym. Even at that time there was pro and con among the board members, those in opposition feeling politics had no place in the Academy structure and that Oscars should be awarded solely on merit.

Silverbach Heads 20th's O'Seas TV; Posts to Raphel, Turnbull Puts Company in Pioneering Role

By FRED HIFT

Alan Silverbach, foreign sales supervisor for 20th-Fox, has been named managing director of the newly-organized Twentieth Century-Fox TV International Corp., which will be engaged in providing programming to tv stations abroad.

David Raphel, formerly assistant Continental manager for 20th, takes over as managing director of the tv company in Europe and England, and Ernest Turnbull heads up the operation in Australia. Both will function under Silverbach, who will continue to headquarter in N. Y. but is expected to extensively tour the field.

As reported in VARIETY several weeks ago, all of 20th's facilities abroad will be put at the disposal of the new subsidiary, according to Spyros P. Skouras, 20th prexy. Company will offer its services to independent tv film producers and also will handle the 20th-produced tv shows abroad. Furthermore, it will be "actively engaged in foreign coproduction and will consider tv investments."

This makes 20th the first company to "officially" recognize the growing potential of the tv mart overseas. Significantly, no mention is made of the release of theatrical films to tv stations abroad. Observers close to 20th believe that such sales will be made when the

Loew's Theatres' On-Own 1st Qtr. Net Is $375,100

Loew's Theatres Inc. for the 12-week period ending June 4, its first quarterly report since it was officially separated from Loew's Inc. on March 12, 1959, showed a net profit of $375,100 after the provision of $480,000 for taxes. The profit is equivalent to 14c per share on the 2,668,389 shares outstanding. Gross revenue for the quarter amounted to $10,207,000.

At the same time it was revealed that the board of directors at a meeting held June 19 approved a restricted stock option plan (subject to the okay of stockholders) for its key personnel. The plan provides that the company reserve 130,000 shares of its common stock, of which options for 85,000 shares were granted.

Levin Twits Einfeld For Downgrading Frisco As Film Festival Site

San Francisco, June 30.

Irving M. Levin, director of Frisco's International Film Festival, says Charles Einfeld, 20th-Fox ad-publicity chief, ought to study his geography more closely.

Levin, irritated because Einfeld referred to Frisco as too "remote" for a film festival, wrote the 20th-Fox exec late last week that "your opinion . . . behooves us to instruct gently that you return to your global map."

And Levin, who's had plenty of troubles in getting the Frisco Festival underway principally because of lack of Hollywood co-operation, also blamed Einfeld's slur on the "traditionally insular concept" of "folk of the U. S. East about the U. S. West."

The San Franciscan wrote:

"With careful scrutiny you will discover . . . that the Western Coast of the U. S. stands ever so

Berlin (West) Film Fest Calm As USSR's Ultimatum Slides, and Red Pix, Too

By HAROLD MYERS

Berlin, June 30.

Just one month after the expiration of Khrushchev's original six-months ultimatum, the ninth Berlin film festival opened last Friday (26) in an atmosphere of apparent calm. The Russians declined to participate for the second year running, much to the relief of the local organizers who didn't relish flying the Red flag along the Kurfurstendamm along with the flags of other participating nations.

While there is a surface calm, however, the urgency of the Berlin situation is pressed home in all the festival propaganda and the city authorities as well as the invited nations are combining in a display of solidarity to make this year's junket the most active and virile of them all.

The need for a special effort has, for example conditioned the thinking of the Motion Picture Export Assn. As Eric Johnston and Griffith Johnson are due in next Friday (3), local MPEA topper Leo Hochstetter would have preferred to follow the pattern established in Venice last summer and repeated this year in Cannes, of small intimate gatherings with the top brass of various national industries. However, it was felt that in the special circumstances a more elaborate effort was called for, and the MPEA will host a barbecue at the Hilton Hotel on Sunday (5) after the screening of the official American entry, "Ask Any Girl."

With Van Heflin as the official U.S. delegate, the American star contingent this year is more in keeping with the political importance of the fest. The roster includes Esther Williams, David Niven, Gary Cooper (currently filming on location in London) and possibly Sophia Loren and Rita Hayworth. Cary Grant had promised to attend, but has been obliged to cancel out.

Aldrich As Foreman

Robert Aldrich, himself a Berlin award winner, has been named chairman of the 11-man jury, which includes four reps from Germany and also one each from Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Denmark and the United Arab Republic. O. E. Hasse, the actor, is one of the German quartet, John Bryan, producer of "The Horse's Mouth" is the British nominee, and Johan Jacobsen of the Flamingo Studios represents Denmark.

A technical innovation which is proving invaluable to foreign newsmen, is a multi-lingo earphone which, at the flick of a switch, gives the choice of an English, French or Spanish translation of the German sub-titles. The device, already in existence at the Congress Hall where the opening and closing galas are staged, has now been installed in the Zoo-Palast, the venue for most of the fest presentations.

35 Nations Entered

Some 35 nations between them have entered 28 features, five full length documentaries and 46 shorts varying in length from three to 42 minutes, and to accommodate them all within the limited schedule there are a minimum of three screenings a day, and occasionally four. As always, but even more so this year, Berlin provides something of an endurance test for the conscientious critic and buyer.

For the first time since the Berlin fest was launched in 1951, a German film has copped the honor of being selected for the opening gala in the Congress Hall, as well as for the simultaneous presentations at the Zoo-Palast and the Film-Buhne Wien. This is "Und das am Montagmorgen," an adaptation of J. B. Priestley's "Mr. Kettle and Mrs. Moon," with O. W. Fischer and Ulla Jacobsson in the leads. Germany has two other entries, Kautner's Hamlet film, "Der Rest ist Schweigen," and a color documentary on Israel entitled "Paradies und Feuerofen."

The United States has three entries. Apart from the official industry choice of "Ask Any Girl," the fest authorities invited the Sophia Loren starrer, "That Kind of Woman," while Walt Disney has entered "White Wilderness" in the feature documentary category. Disney, it will be recalled, has

Customs Again Censoring

U.S. Customs went and did it again, last week, refusing to admit a French picture because of a five-second scene showing a husband passing his hand over his wife's bosom. The picture involved was "Les Quatre Cent Coups." The distributor, Zenith International, immediately demanded a review of the ruling and got it.

Ironically, just a few weeks ago, Customs passed, without a cut, Zenith's "Les Amants," which contains some highly erotic passages. In "Quatre Cent Coups," both man and wife are fully dressed.

The picture got the prize of the International Catholic Office in France. It was one of the main contenders at the Cannes film festival.

Johnston Reminds All: USSR Swap Was Dulles' Idea

Motion Picture Assn. of America went out of its way, last week, to emphasize the degree to which the U. S. Government stood behind the Soviet-American film deal. It was a subtle reminder that, in concluding the arrangements, film trade association president Eric Johnston had acted at the behest of the U. S. Government.

MPAA released letters to Johnston from the late John Foster Dulles and from George V. Allen, director of the U. S. Information Agency. It also quoted the then Acting Secretary of State, Christian A. Herter, when he appeared before exhibitors last November to enlist their active support of the film deal.

The Dulles letter, dated May 27, 1958, thanked Johnston for his contribution in connection with the negotiation with the film deal and asked him to convey to the film industry his "gratitude for their willingness to assist in this endeavor to make it possible for the people of the Soviet Union to see American films for the first time in years." Dulles praised the industry's "assistance to the Government."

Allen conveyed President Eisenhower's sentiments, i.e., that the purchase and sale of pictures "can make a significant contribution to the better understanding which we all seek." Allen called the deal "an important step forward."

Herter is quoted as telling the exhibitors: "I think we appreciate some of the difficulties you may have in your mind in connection with the working out of this exchange agreement, but I want to assure you as far as we are concerned we want to do everything we can to make it as easy for you to overcome such difficulties as you may have from the point of view of the governmental attitude." He called the deal "a real landmark" and stressed its "completely reciprocal nature."

There has been considerable printed criticism of the exchange agreement, with some columnists going as far as charging that the U. S. would be "swamped" with Red propaganda. This comment has taken into account neither the fact that American films would be shown in Russia, nor that the industry made the deal under considerable pressure from the Government.

RETURN OF MARCO POLO

First of the Travelling Salesmen In Orbit Anew

Hollywood, June 30.

That old Italian merchant, Marco Polo, is getting hot again. He's up for bioging in three mediums —screen, stage and video—after having lain dormant since Samuel Goldwyn starred Gary Cooper in "The Adventures of Marco Polo" in 1938.

Producer-director Stanley Donen is the latest to project the Oriental traveler, with four registrations with the MPAA, although Austrian actor Curt Jurgens also has plans for doing a picture under his own production banner, in Europe. Latter has been toying with idea for several years, but lately has thought of reactivating plan.

Donen has registered "The Loves of Marco Polo," "Marco Polo, Adventurer," "Marco Polo, Wanderer" and "Marco Polo's Travels." He also has put the title, "Marco Polo," on a reserve registration basis.

W. Lee Wilder also has plans for doing a teleseries based on exploits of Polo, to be produced for Allied Artists' tv subsid, Interstate Television.

Leo McCarey likewise is prepping a legit musical version, and reportedly has penned the musical book and has a complete score.

Soviet Festival Wants Foreign Film Critics

Washington, June 30.

Lofty motto has been coined for Moscow International Film Festival, as follows: "For Humanism in Cinematographic Art: for Peace and Friendship Among Peoples."

This word comes from Vladimir Surin, general director of the Mosfilm Studios and chairman of the Festival's Organizational Committee, in a statement made public by the Russian Embassy here.

Surin's statement said: "We shall be happy to welcome to the festival as honor guests outstanding workers from all countries in the arts and the film industry . . . Organizational Committee has invited J. P. Frogerais (France), president of the International Federation of Film Producers Assn., to attend the festival as the guest of honor."

He also stated: "Several years ago the number of feature films put out by Soviet motion picture studios did not exceed two or three dozen in all, whereas now upward of 600 films are released annually in the USSR, including 140 full-length pictures. The Seven-Year Plan for the Development of the Economy of the USSR provides for the annual production of 700 films, including 210 full-length films."

Surin commented he "hopes" foreign newsmen and art critics will come. They will be "given every opportunity to report on the festival proceedings," he stated.

Stroll On The Kurfuerstendamm

(Berlin Film Festival Bits)

By HANS HOEHN

Berlin, June 30.

"Brennender Sand" (Burning Sand) will be the first German-Israel (yes!) feature film. Berlin's Aero-Film (Raphal Nussbaum) in collab with Israel's Ran-Film will produce it in Israel and Jordania. It's gonna be a tinter (Eastmancolor) revolving around an adventure yarn (but a more fastidious one, search for archeological secrets in Petra, the Jordanian temple town). Hildegard Knef (Neff) may take over the female lead. Budget is to amount to 1,000,000 D-Marks to which Aero-Film is contributing the lion's share. Producer Nussbaum says pic has also an ideal task: To promote understanding between Israel and Germany.

Artur Brauner (CCC)-has allegedly hired Anita Ekberg for "Mistress of the World" which William Dieterle will direct. Some scoop: Pola Negri will have a role in this film.

Guest Dept.: Karl Freund, the great cameraman who left Germany in the late 1920's, is around. He revealed that he's just in the middle of his memoirs. Local oldtimers remember that he lensed such German classics as "The Last Man," "Metropolis" and "Variete." His Hollywood credits include "The Good Earth."

Another ex-Berliner, Bruno Bernard famous glamor photographer of Hollywood, celebrated here as the "discoverer" of Marilyn Monroe, is here too. After an absence of 22 years. Both he and John Harris (the producer-promoter-importer) will produce a pic in Germany ("Operation Glamor") and use some of this country's most gorgeous gals. Harris says "this film should do a hell of a lot of business all over the world."

Britain's George Turner, head of the Information Services Branch, said that also Jack Hylton (the London impresario) will show up here. Someone put Hylton the question where he's gonna stay in Berlin. Said Hylton: "What a question! At the 'Hilton,' of course!"

John Harris said that Marlene Dietrich is quite upset about the German press, the way they always run her down, especially over that article which "that jerk" Bert Reisfeld, H'wood correspondent for many German fan mags, wrote, where he told them that Grandmother Marlene cannot get any work in films here and would like to return to Germany to collect some of those D-Marks. Marlene told him (Harris) that she would like to come to Germany and make a pic (provided she'd like the script and the director) and to show the German people what she can do and that she has no grudge against them.

Some Berliners remember that Katina Paxinou (member of the short film jury here) appeared on the stage ("Elektra") of the local Schiller Theatre shortly before the outbreak of WWI . . . Madame Paxinou insists that she's a stage actress in the first place. Her next legit job will be in Brecht's "Mother Courage" in N.Y. Rehearsals start in August . . . When she heard that her countrywoman, German film-star Chariklia Baxevanos, is currently in "Bettina" at Theatre am Kurfuerstendamm, she immediately said: "I must see that kid. She was one of the first nominees for the Anne Frank screenrole."

Curt Oertel, German member of the short film jury, about Miss Paxinou: "It's a good thing we have a woman in the jury. There must be someone who has common sense. She's the 'correction of men.'"

William Dieterle attending the festival as a guest of honor. He'll be given a press conference at which he is going to talk about his German plans.

Does or does he not arrive, meaning Gary Cooper? If he does it'll be the third time he has attended the local fete. The entire press here wrote he'll come for sure. Strangely enough, Katina Paxinou dined with him just a few days ago in London, but nothing whatsoever did he say about his forthcoming Berlin visit.

Nina & Frederik, Danish singing duo, just filming here in Arca's "Mandolins and Moonshine." Their big (Danish) commercial hit, "Richest Girl On Earth" due to be released here by Constantin.

Alfred H. Jacob (editor-in-chief of a Munich trade service and mgr. of actor O. W. Fischer) plans a film version of Eichendorff's "Aus dem Leben eines Taugenichts" (Life of a Good-For-Nothing). Since a great part of the film had to be filmed in what became Soviet-German territory after 1945, he needs East German assistance.

Silents Still Potent

Minneapolis, June 30.

A combination of silent days' oldtimers, "Son of the Shiek" and the "Charlie Chaplin Laff Show," is doing big in local neighborhood "fine arts" houses. Starting out in the Campus, it hit a nifty figure.

The Chaplin end of the twin bill comprises a collection of the comedian's shorts.

SOLOMON & SHEBA'S' SPECIAL BALLY UNIT

Setting a precedent for itself, United Artists is establishing a special unit to promote "Solomon and Sheba," the Edward Small spectacle starring Yul Brynner and Gina Lollobrigida. UA plans to spend $1,000,000 on the global promotion campaign for the picture.

Plans for preselling the film were outlined in N. Y. yesterday (Tues.) by King Vidor, who directed; Arnold M. Picker, UA v.p. in charge of foreign distribution, and Roger H. Lewis, national ad-pub and exploitation director.

Heinemann and Picker said special release patterns for the picture, both in the States and abroad, would be worked out to realize the spectacle's full earning power in every situation.

In reporting establishment of a special promotional unit, Lewis said it'd be headed by Jonas Arnold and Louis Weber and would function under the supervision of Fred Goldberg, Lewis' exec assistant. Trio already is at work preparing materials and promotions to be aimed at special audience segments. Unit will be supplemented by various promotion experts in the fields of religion, art education, literature, etc. Some 25 exploitation specialists will be used in all.

Stressing the global outlook, Lewis said that, in promoting the picture, UA was planning a truly worldwide effect to sell the film. In the course of the next five months, intensified local level campaigns using all media will be developed in three separate stages in some 50 key cities throughout both the U.S. and Canada. Painter Symeon Shinin has been commissioned by UA to create a huge mural featuring scenes from the production.

FILM STATISTICS REMAIN CLOUDY

The film industry is in the midst of a new version of the "numbers game." Conflicting statements about the number of pictures that will be produced and released during the year are being issued at intervals by various segments of the business.

Samuel Goldwyn says only between 100 and 125 pix will be made.

A Theatre Owners of America estimate indicates that 53 pictures were in production to April 30 and if that pace continues 159 pictures will be made for the full year.

Warner Bros. says it will make 34 pictures through 1959 and 1960, but includes in its total 14 pictures previously announced.

Although exhibitors continue to be concerned about a product shortage, an appraisal of the situation by distribution company execs reveals that the fears of a drastic cutback in production may be grossly misleading and founded on misinformation.

To be sure, fewer pictures may be made, but the gloomy predictions of a dire product scarcity is not completely accurate, according to distribution sources. They point out that the total product released in a given year (September through August) or the calendar year is not governed entirely by the number of pictures made in Hollywood or shot elsewhere by American producers.

A 'New' Season

In the first place, one distribution official notes, most companies go into a new season, or calendar year, with a good backlog of unreleased films—sometimes as much as half a year's supply or more. If filming of new properties is reduced or temporarily slowed up, distributors can draw on these backlogs to maintain normal monthly quotas of releases, and when inventories get low due to a production lull it is easy to build them up again by step-up in shooting. Lately, with steadily mounting production costs, film companies are not so disposed to carry big backlogs of finished pictures for distant future release because

Finger-Point at Balaban & Katz Doubling-Up of Blockbusters; Say Exhibs Make Own 'Shortage'

If the exhibitors' cry of a product shortage is sometimes accepted with derision, the blame is often that of certain theatreowners, both distributors and fellow exhibitors agree. In the midst of howls about the lack of playable top product, many theatres are dissipating the value of blockbuster entries by double billing them on a single program, it's charged.

Perhaps the most glaring example of this practice, which is said to be ruining the Chicago area, is the type of coupling that many theatres, including the top chains, are currently offering. Some weeks ago Balaban & Katz put together the combination of "Some Came Running" and "Auntie Mame" in their outlying theatres. Other theatres were quick to follow the leader and such combos as "Shaggy Dog" and "Rio Bravo," "Imitation of Life" and "Compulsion" were recently available in the best neighborhood houses in Chi.

Eddie Silverman, head of Essaness Theatres Corp., is staunchly opposed to this policy. He points out, for example, that "Shaggy Dog" is the biggest boxoffice attraction of the season, "and when exhibitors couple that picture with 'Rio Bravo,' it is an example of lack of showmanship at its worst." Silverman wants to know how theatremen can plead with the producers to give them a steady flow of product "and then wastefully book important pictures in this fashion."

The Chi exhibitor notes that the practice is an example of the exhibitor being his own worst enemy. He contends that other than the release of the post-'48 pix to television, "there is nothing more destructive than the pursuit of this policy."

Tri-State Exhibs Meet

Memphis, June 30.

The annual Tri-State Theatre Owners powwow will be held at the Gayoso Hotel, Sept. 21-23. Exhibitors from Tennessee, Mississippi and Arkansas will attend. Plans call for a national name speaker to address the group during the three day session.

Lloyd Royal of Meridian, Miss., is prexy and general chairman.

'Three For The Showman' Columbia's Pitch at The Young Summer Crowd

Among the 14 pictures Columbia plans for release for the last third of 1959, three pictures, designated as "Three for the Showman," have been keyed specifically for summer audiences.

The package consists of "Have Rocket, Will Travel," starring the Three Stooges; "The 30-Foot Bride of Candy Rock," starring the late Lou Costello, and "The Legend of Tom Dooley," featuring young Col pactees Michael Landon, Jo Morrow and Jack Hogan.

In outlining the company's plans to sales execs at a New York meeting last week, sales v.p. Rube Jackter termed the three films as "ideal attractions for young moviegoers, who make up the major segment of the summer audience." The three films are being offered to exhibitors as a package for individual bookings.

In addition to the showmanship package, the Col sales meeting emphasized the release plans for "Anatomy of a Murder," "Middle of the Night," "It Happened to Jane" and "They Came to Cordura," all of which will be released during the last four months of this year.

National Boxoffice Survey

Trade at Fast Summer Clip; 'Horse' No. 1, 'Story' 2d, 'Earth' 3d, 'For Me' 4th, 'Girl' 5th

Despite some extremely hot weather in many sections of the country, additional playdates for new, strong product are proving enough to provide a fine upbeat in numerous key cities covered by VARIETY this session. The same blockbusters which arrived last stanza are providing the backbone of this upswing.

"Horse Soldiers" (UA), just launched this stanza, is forging ahead to No. 1 spot. It is being closely followed by "Nun's Story" (WB), which indicated last week to have a high b.o. potential on its preem engagement at the N. Y. Music Hall. Third money is going to "This Earth Is Mine" (U) on its showing in nine keys. In some of these initial playdates "Earth" is equally or topping trade done by "Imitation of Life" (U).

"Say One For Me" (20th), champ last session, is finishing fourth. "Ask Any Girl" (M-G), second a week ago, is landing in fifth position. "Don't Give Up Ship" (Par), which hinted nice possibilities last stanza, is copping sixth place.

"Room At Top" (Cont) is capturing seventh money. "So. Seas Adventure' (Cinerama) is taking eighth spot. "Mysterians" (M-G) is winding up ninth.

"Gigi" (M-G) will land 10th place on the basis of four big playdates. "Gigantis" (WB) will be 11th while "Diary of Anne Frank" (20th) rounds out the Top 12 pix.

"Young Philadelphians" (WB) and "Love Is My Profession" (Kings) are the two runner-up pix in that order.

"Porgy and Bess" (Col) looks to have real potentialities, based on its showing in first four days at the N. Y. Warner where practically capacity. "Darby O'Gill and Little People" (BV) is rated busy in first date in L. A. "Middle of Night" (Col), also just getting around, is socko in L. A. and still great in second weeks in two N. Y. houses.

"Hole in Head" (UA) still is great in second week in Washington, Chi and L. A. "Five Pennies" (Par), which opened up smash last week at N. Y. Capitol, is still great in second round at this big house, and torrid in Chi as well as boffo in Boston. "Hercules" (Indie) is heading for a new house record in Balto.

"Some Like It Hot" (UA) continues its amazing run at the N. Y. State with great takings in its 13th round. It now is in the 14th week there. "Happened To Jane" (Col), sock in Washington, is slim in Denver and Buffalo.

"Sleeping Beauty" (BV), smash in Omaha and St. Louis, is fair in Pitt. "Imitation of Life" (U), big in Louisville, looks hotsy in Philly.

"Around World in 80 Days" (UA), smash on popscale run in L. A., is good in Seattle. "South Pacific" (Magna) is boff in L. A. and fast in Denver.

DISNEY AT IRELAND 'DARBY O'GILL' PREEM

London, June 30.

Walt Disney was gifted with a Connemara pony in Dublin when he went there for the world preem of "Darby O'Gill and the Little People" last Wednesday (24). Some 4,000 attended the initial screening at the Theatre Royal in Dublin. Film started its regular run at the Metropole in that city, June 26.

Preem was on a major scale, with scribes flown over from the U. S. and London. There also were diplomatic notables and U. S. and British show biz stars in attendance.

Program teed off with a reception at the Theatre Royal. Screening was preceded by a stageshow and introduction of visiting show biz personalities. Latter included Janet Munro, Albert Sharpe, Jimmy O'Dea, Kieron Moore, Sean Connery and J. G. Devlin, who are in the pic.

About 400, including the Lord Mayor, were hosted after the show by Disney at supper in the Mansion House. Preem garnered $5,600 for the all-Ireland charity, Society of St. Vincent de Paul.

SET VICTOR HUGO STORY

Subotsky of U.S. and Pallos of Britain Co-Producing

An American company, Vanguard Productions, and a British company, Pendennis Pictures Corp. Ltd., will co-produce a feature based on an old Victor Hugo book, "The Man Who Laughs." Planned for British shooting in color.

Milton Subotsky is in Britain discussing the script with author George Baxt and producer Steven Pallos of Pendennis. American will remain throughout summer and carry the negative back to the States.

Distribution to be set.

Porgy and Bess
(MUSICAL-TECHNICOLOR-TODD-AO)

Gershwin's folk opera handsomely mounted by Samuel Goldwyn. A big picture.

Columbia release of Samuel Goldwyn production. Features Sidney Poitier, Dorothy Dandridge, Pearl Bailey, Sammy Davis Jr. Directed by Otto Preminger. As screen entertainment, "Porgy and Bess" retains most of the virtues and some of the libretto traits of this folk opera. It is, of course, an American classic of its genre. Transferred to widescreen and Technicolor in a handsome, intelligent and often gripping production there are the boxoffice questions of (a) the drab story, (b) the opera form, (c) the known fact that all-Negro casts usually run a hard course.

Scaled to $3.75 as a hard ticket at the Warner Theatre, N. Y. the appeal lies in the George Gershwin music and the Samuel Goldwyn name. The film will take selling at these prices.

To recall the truism that "Porgy" is a classic is to suggest some of the built-in prestige values which Goldwyn purchased. The score has had, by now, one of the sustained, long-pull plugs of all time. The familiarity of the beloved music must mean much in momentum, want-to-see sentimental tug and pre-sell aspects. Against that is the unknown X of "Porgy" being an oft-told tale.

The work has exhibited durability. Also somewhat slow catch-on. A novel first in 1925 it became a play in 1927, running 217 performances for the Theatre Guild. The opera version of 1935, also for the Guild, eked out only 124 performances. It was not until the revival, after Gershwin's death, that "Porgy and Bess" came into its own. Since then the folk opera has been widely played around the world, and a hit in Soviet Russia, partly perhaps on its persecuted minority angles.

Suffice that the melodrama of a Charleston waterfront slum, which might otherwise have been forgotten, was elevated into a world favorite, folklorically and operatically, by the Gershwin genius, not overlooking the wonderful lyrics of Brother Ira and DuBose Heyward's book and strong lyrical assist.

Porgy, of course, is a cripple and a beggar, who gets about drawn in a goat cart. Sidney Poitier makes him thoroughly believable though when he opens his voice to sing it is not Poitier but Robert McPherrin. Bess, the incompletely regenerate floozie, is Dorothy Dandridge, but again the voice is another's—Adele Addison. (Neither voice gets screen credit).

The love affair of this oddly-assorted pair has considerable humanity though Miss Dandridge is perhaps too "refined" in type to be quite convincing as the split-skirt, heroin-sniffing tramp. Even so, their tortured but honest try for true love is plausible.

The story ends with Bess lured to New York, a woman of easy persuasion and fragile faith. Porgy then mounts his pathetic goat-cart to drive from South Carolina to Manhattan, in pursuit of her. There is a surviving "heart" quality in this "theatrical" curtain, which wowed 'em in 1927.

There are two villains. First the callous Crown, played with fine arrogance by Brooks Peters. The nasty-worm, Sporting Life, as interpreted by Sammy Davis Jr. seems unduly the vaudevillian and modern hipster—gaining a certain song-and-dance cleverness at some damage to the 1905 period piece quality.

Pearl Bailey is consistently likeable as Maria but has no chance to belt out any vocals. There are a number of the Gershwin "arias" entrusted to Diahann Carroll. Ruth Attaway. Earl Jackson and others. These tend to be sheerly delightful.

Otto Preminger has manipulated the characters in the Catfish Row (of Oliver Smith's design) to develop as much tension and pathos as the N. Richard Nash screenplay (fairly close to the original text) allows. The editing (Daniel Mandell) is tight. The necessities of providing a hard-ticket intermission does interrupt the picture at its maximum momentum and suspense point, with the murderous Crown re-seducing Bess in the tall grass.

If memory serves, many of the old slum life details of the stage production have been faded down, the hawkers' street-cries being notably less prominent. The racial stereotype dangers, more or less implicit in a story where ignorant and exploited denizens of a Dixie black ghetto are involved, have been sterilized in the present production. An exception, perhaps, is the use of the $1.50 "divorce" which Porgy buys for Bess from the outlandish Negro shyster. This scene is right out of the white Southern stock-in-trade of amused condescension and may be resented. In the main, the desperate poverty of Catfish Row is presented sympathetically. Especially compassionate is the saucer funeral for Robbins (Joel Fluellen) after he's killed by the brutal Crown. Both musically and humanely this highly folkloric sequence is one of Preminger's best.

In costuming the Negroes Irene Sharaff has followed a conscious policy. The garb shows them dirt-poor but never dirty. The same may be said of the scenery. So, too, the dialect respects basic dignity. The picnic parade does skirt the sort of high-strutting-in-"Darktown" which the late Octavus Roy Cohen used to write for the Satevepost. However, it is redeemed by Preminger directing to laugh with, not at, the picnickers.

During this cook-out on the Island Davis renders the sardonic, pastor-gibing "'Tain't Necessarily So" but does it three generations too smart. Hermes Pan's choreography is, with this exception, safely subordinated to the time, place and mood.

For ordinary audience purposes the handling of the music by conductor Andre Previn, including a three-minute overture before the story opens, will be deemed professional. Some liberties with the arrangements, in the de-operatizing direction, may irritate the loyal followers of Gershwin who notice such matters.

The production is subordinated to the telling of the tale, with the racial stereotype precautions beforementioned. Leon Shamroy's camera work stands forth. A few of the scenes are idyllic, the storm realistic, and the whole thing top-drawer photography.

The lip-sync work on Poitier and Miss Dandridge is not without flaw and a few other quibbles could be registered. No matter. For much of the way the melodramatics and the tunes are astutely blended for good effect and more than offset this.

Summing up, the two big come-on names here are Gershwin and Goldwyn. A classic has received the high-gloss treatment and should find plenty of admirers. There seems small reason to suppose that the South won't play "Porgy." It is almost entirely self-contained on Catfish Row though a white detective (pretty high-handed) and a white coroner (quite decent) show in the slum in the wake of the murders, one by and one of Crown.

Time alone can report whether the screening of the folk opera adds up to a selective-appeal or a universal-appeal feature. The end-result may fall between. Land.

La Bete a L'Affut
(Beast at Bay)
(FRENCH)

Paris, June 30.

Corona release of Trident-Hoche production. Stars Francoise Arnoul, Henri Vidal; features Michael Piccoli, Agnes Laury, Gaby Silvia, Madeleine Barbulee. Directed by Pierre Chenal. Screenplay, Michel Audiard, R.M. Arlaud, Georges Tabet, Andre from novel by Day Kenne; camera, Christian Matras; editor, Suzanne Rondeau. At Paris, Paris. Running time, 90 MINS.

Elizabeth	Francoise Arnoul
Daniel	Henri Vidal
Jacques	Michael Piccoli
Gilberte	Gaby Silvia
Agnes	Agnes Laury
Maria	Madeleine Barbulee

This yarn has been seen before. An escaped con breaks in on a pretty widow and she is soon in love with him. This adds a twist or two to the usual outcome but is sans the feel for character and motivation to make the film plausible. Hence, it emerges mainly a dualer item for offshore chances with exploitation aspects on some nudity by star Francoise Arnoul and some well done love scenes.

Film has some advantages from on-the-spot shooting in a small town and some okay acting and technical aspects. But this lacks the individuality and eclat to make this more than a routine filler both for local and foreign marts. Mosk.

Anatomy of a Murder

Top-notch courtroom meller. Strong b.o.

Hollywood, June 26.

Columbia release of Carlyle Production produced and directed by Otto Preminger. Stars James Stewart, Lee Remick, Ben Gazzara, Arthur O'Connell, Eve Arden, Kathryn Grant. Screenplay, Wendell Mayes; based on the book by Robert Traver; camera, Sam Leavitt; music, Duke Ellington; editor, Louis R. Loeffler. Previewed at Stanley Warner Theatre, June 19, '59. Running time: 160 MINS.

Not since "Witness For the Prosecution" has there been a courtroom melodrama as beguiling, forceful and enthralling as Otto Preminger's "Anatomy of a Murder." Its mystery is adult, it is complex and confounding, and it is laced with humor and human touches. The Columbia release looks like one of the summer's strong boxoffice contenders.

Preminger got his film on the screen for preview only 21 days after the final shooting on Michigan location, certainly something of a record for a big budget motion picture. This dispatch, commendable as it is, may be one reason why "Anatomy" is over-long at its present length. It could be snipped without losing anything.

There are a few scenes that contain language certainly never before heard in an American film with the Code Seal. Such words as "contraceptive," "climax" (as in the sexual act), "spermatogenisis," and others dealing with the legal technicalities of rape — a point at issue in the trial that is the film's focal point—are likely to be startling and distasteful to many customers. It would be too bad if this lively and absorbing film were to lose trade on points such as these. It seems to be realism for its own sake, rather than for the necessities of the story.

Wendell Mayes' screenplay otherwise, is a large reason for the film's general excellence. In swift, brief strokes it introduces a large number of diverse characters and sets them in motion. An Army lieutenant, Ben Gazzara, has killed a tavern operator whom he suspects of attempting to rape his wife, Lee Remick. James Stewart, former district attorney and now a privately-practicing attorney in a small Michigan city, is engaged for the defense.

Stewart succeeds in proving Gazzara was correct to shoot the usurper, or, at least, is innocent of the first degree murder with which he is charged. So a jury finds, and juries are more often right than not, as one character in the film notes.

Mayes' screenplay, taken from the book by the Michigan judge who uses the nom de plume, Robert Traver, differs in some respects from the novel. Partly through casting, the audience is in considerable doubt about the real innocence of Gazzara and Miss Remick. This handsome young couple astray of the law are far from admirable. Utterly unmoral, they are pleasure-bent and pleasure-battered, as unpredictable as a pair of minks, which they resemble in more ways than one. It is never precisely clear that they are as innocent as Stewart must plead them and as the jury finds.

This does not seem to be the point. The victim of the shooting was not one of nature's gentlemen, either. A trio of unlovely people, brought together for unlovely purposes, has produced no good end. But it is not to serve them that the law is maintained. The law's majesty is an end in itself, and this does seem to be the point.

Preminger purposely creates situations that flicker with uncertainty, that may •e evaluated in different ways. Motives are mixed and dubious, and, therefore, sustain interest. Balancing the fascinating nastiness of the younger players, there is the warmth and intelligence of James Stewart and Arthur O'Connell. Although Stewart doesn't get a girl, in the conventional sense, there is some romantic interest stirred, and he has his best role in years as the sardonically humorous, thoughtful attorney. O'Connell, a bright, but booze-prone Irishman of great charm, is his ally. Although O'Connell's drinking may seem a weakness against the chilly intensity of the younger players, he has reserves of strength they don't know exist. Eve Arden shows that her technique has not been seriously maimed by her stock work in television, and Kathryn Grant gives a dignified and polished performance.

Joseph N. Welch, the Boston attorney, is tremendous as the trial judge. He seems at first to be trying too hard, but he settles down and fills the role completely as the film unwinds. George C. Scott, as the prosecution attorney, has the suave menace of a small-time Torquemada, and the legal and philosophical duel between him and Stewart is instructive to behold. Brooks West is a good comical local legal beagle, and the cast is studded with fine supporting roles. Highlights are contributed by Murray Hamilton, Orson Bean, Alexander Campbell, Howard Mc Near, Russ Brown and Ken Lynch. There is a brief appearance by Duke Ellington, who also did the nervous jazz score.

"Anatomy" was shot entirely on Michigan location. The dreary, but homey, atmosphere seeps into every frame of Sam Leavitt's black-and-white photography, enhancing the realism of the effort. Boris Leven's production design is an important factor in this effect, of course, and so is the sound by Jack Solomon, which does not strain out the natural sounds, but uses them. Editing by Louis R. Loeffler is top-notch. Powe.

Curse of the Undead

Lower-berth horror film.

Universal release of Joseph Gershenson production. Stars Eric Fleming, Michael Pate, Kathleen Crowley; with John Hoyt, Bruce Gordon, Edward Binns, Jimmy Murphy, Helen Kleeb, Jay Adler, Edwin Parker, John Truax, Frankie Van, Rush Williams. Directed by Edward Dein. Screenplay, Edward and Mildred Dein; camera, Ellis W. Carter; art direction, Alexander Golitzen, Robert Clatworthy; editor, George Gittens; music, Irving Gertz; sound, Leslie I. Carey, Joe Lapis. Previewed June 17, '59. Running time: 79 MINS.

In "Curse of the Undead," writers Edward and Mildred Dein have come up with a sentimental vampire and a novel way to kill him. Also, instead of updating this business of "Draculeze" to embrace the space age, they have set their bloodthirsty fellow loose in the old west, producing a sort of "Dracula Meets the Californians" situation. Although the Dein's have created few other surprises in their screenplay, there is no reason to suspect that the popularity of the vampire character has diminished to the extent that this lower-berth picture is going to lose coin for Universal-International. On the contrary, "blood" money is probably as fashionable as ever.

While not exactly the living end in horror films, producer Joseph Gershenson, director Edward Dein, cameraman Ellis W. Carter, music masterminds Irving Gertz and Milton Rosen, and others assigned by U have utilized all the horror-pix tricks in the book to make "Curse" engrossing. Techniques used successfully in the past for other grisly films are adopted throughout, providing the film's best moments.

Basically, the story pits a teacher, Eric Fleming, against an undead vampire, Michael Pate, who, being no mere sucker, finds Kathleen Crowley's lips as attractive as her plasma. After a number of murders by Pate, preacher Fleming swings into action. Ignoring the more accepted "wooden stake" method of dispatching with Hollywood's breed of blood-letters, he imbeds a wooden cross in the head of a bullet and fires at the pesky fellow (an exceedingly slow gunman), who happily shrivels away into vampire heaven, providing a happy "curses foiled again" ending.

Fleming, who does an able job, will also help the film's boxoffice prospects through his current popularity as the star of tv's "Rawhide" series (good timing on U's part). Pate is an excellent choice for the "undead" character, particularly in the early sequences in which he is required only to stand around, looking sinister. Miss Crowley has understandable difficulty relaxing in the classic role of the monster's helplessly-entranced femme victim. John Hoyt, Bruce Gordon, Edward Binns and Jimmy Murphy do as well as can be expected in vital secondary roles. Helen Kleeb and Jay Adler are adequate in small parts.

Nerve-gnawing music and interesting photography, however, are easily the best ingredients in this uninspired production. Tube.

The Beat Generation
(CINEMASCOPE)

An exploitable, if ridiculous, picture of beatniks.

Hollywood, June 26.

Metro release of an Albert Zugsmith production. Stars Steve Cochran, Mamie Van Doren, Ray Danton, Fay Spain, Maggie Hayes, Jackie Coogan, Louis Armstrong. Directed by Charles Haas. Screenplay by Richard Matheson and Lewis Meltzer; camera, Walter H. Castle; editor, Ben Lewis; music, Albert Glasser. Previewed at the studio, June 26, '59. Running time: 95 MINS.

Dave Culloran	Steve Cochran
Georgia Altera	Mamie Van Doren
Stan Hess	Ray Danton
Francee Culloran	Fay Spain
Louis Armstrong	Louis Armstrong
Joyce Greenfield	Maggie Hayes
Jake Baron	Jackie Coogan
Art Jester	Jim Mitchum
The Singer	Cathy Crosby
Harry Altera	Ray Anthony
The Singing Beatnik	Dick Contino
Marie Baron	Irish McCalla
The Poetess	Vampira
Dr. Elcott	Billy Daniels
The Wrestling Beatnik	Maxie Rosenbloom
Lover Boy	Charles Chaplin Jr.
The Beat Beatnik	Grabowski

The beatniks of Albert Zugsmith's "The Beat Generation" are not angry young men, at all, but Freudian cases who impersonate statues and gaze moronically at Vampira reading a jingle on how to loathe one's parents. They constitute little more than atmosphere within the framework of an average cop-and-culprit yarn, but it's an atmosphere that's entertaining and off-beat enough to back up the exploitable title. Metro release can look forward to a way-out summer.

There's a man-size portion of sex in this production which is geared mainly to the wish-they-were market. Both its hero (Steve Cochran) and its villain (Ray Danton) are woman-haters, a point that's made none too subtly. Danton goes around raping young married women, playing a kind of cat-and-mouse game with Cochran, a police sergeant who chases him and hounds his female victims at the same time. The fire of the pursuit is fanned when the rapist attacks the policeman's wife. She subsequently finds she is pregnant, not knowing whether the baby is her husband's or the attacker's. Cochran finally catches his man, deep in the waters of the Pacific, and sees the error in his judgment of women through Danton's personality.

It's difficult to tell whether producer Zugsmith, director Charles Haas or screenwriters Richard Matheson and Lewis Meltzer are responsible for the way the beat generation is depicted. Even to the person who feels the beatnik is a pseudo-intellectual living in a fake Bohemia, this depiction is a ludicrous one. It come out more as satire than realism.

The screenplay often is obvious but just as often is exciting, and Matheson and Meltzer fuse the interesting locations and angles with skill. Haas' direction of the main conflict is sharp, making the chase an important one.

The cast is divided into two camps, the sane living in one and the so-called beatniks in the other. As the rapist, Danton plays a good maniac, but his characterization weakens when he's made to spout excessive coffee-house jargon. Cochran does well as the policeman, but he, too, is handicapped because the role, as written is developed only superficially, leaving his personality to be examined through another person's dialog.

Fay Spain, as the policeman's wife, is, by far, the film's outstanding component. Her portrayal of a woman grasping for her husband's love is expert, her honesty and perception a vital asset to the production. Mamie Van Doren looks her sexy self, plays her sexy self and is wholly believable. Maggie Hayes, as another victim, is excellent, with equally fine work from Jackie Coogan, as Cochran's sidekick. Jim Mitchum looks lost as a would-be rapist.

Louis Armstrong and his All-Stars add a brief, but notable, scene or two, and Zugsmith employed Cathy Crosby, Ray Anthony, Dick Contino, Irish McCalla, Vampira, Billy Daniels, Maxie Rosenbloom, Charles Chaplin Jr. and Grabowski as guestars. Miss Crosby looks lovely and sings that way; Rosenbloom plays a dumb wrestler; Chaplin is fine as "Lover Boy"; etc.

Walter H. Castle's photography is very good, with art direction by William A. Horning and Addison Hehr a bit more authentic than the people who inhabit it. Other assets include Ben Lewis' editing and a bevy of songs, some good and some not, by Albert Glasser and Lewis Meltzer and Tom Walton and Walter Kent. Ron.

Great Is My Country
(KINOPANORAMA - COLOR)

Soviet travelog in technically poor widescreen medium mixes scenery and politics. Curiosity item for summer 1959, but little more.

Presentation of the Ministry of Culture of the USSR playing at the Mayfair Theatre, N.Y., in conjunction with the Soviet Exhibition of Science, Technology and Culture at The Coliseum. Produced by the Moscow Popular Science Film Studio. Produced and directed by R. Karmen; co-director, Z. Feldman; camera (Sovcolor), S. Medvnsky, V. Ryklin, G. Kholnyi; sound, stereophonic-nine channels), K. Bek-Nazarov; music, K. Molchanov, V. Knushevitsky; commentary, E. Dolmatovsky, R. Karmen. Previewed at the Mayfair Theatre, N.Y. June 29. Running time, 90 MINS.

As part of their big exhibition at the Coliseum in New York City, the Soviets have opened "Great Is My Country" at the Mayfair Theatre, N.Y. The film, representing a wideangle swing around Russia, was photographed in the Soviets' own Kinopanorama process, which—in technical detail—resembles the American CineMiracle system. It is in Sovcolor and was recorded with nine-channel stereophonic sound.

Inasmuch as the Soviets have free access to the U.S., where they must have seen both Cinerama and CineMiracle, it is astonishing that they would risk their Kinopanorama process on Broadway. They may have been ahead with the sputniks. They're certainly behind when it comes to widescreen.

In theory, content and technique should be separable. Unfortunately, however, in this case they are not since one so intimately depends on the other. Because the technique (at least as seen at the Mayfair preview) is faulty and almost primitive, the otherwise impressive photography suffers and the whole thing is reduced to the level of a so-so travelog.

It's fair to assume that a view of Russia, idealized and slicked-up as it unquestionably is, will still be of interest to Americans who consider the Soviet Union as a land of mystery. It is doubly unfortunate, under these circumstances, that the Russians saw fit to tie politics into what otherwise might have been only an informative and scenic tour. The better part of the second half of "Great Is My Country" is taken up with scenes from the Sixth World Youth and Student Festival in Moscow. To the average American it will be a strange spectacle to watch, and those with long memories may recall echoes from another era, when similar sounds would emanate from the Congresses at Nuremberg.

There is something frightening about "organized spontaneity," the rythmic shouting, the gleaming faces and the tightly disciplined march-past. A group of bedraggled-looking Americans comes into the camera's range and is almost immediately followed by Japanese carrying aloft a banner saying: "Never Again Hiroshima!" There's nothing very subtle about such anti-Americanism nor is there anything subtle about the glorification of Lenin and Communism which is expressed both visually and in the narration. But, of course, we have Lincoln.

In short, the Soviets weren't content to turn out a travelog. They're presenting a propaganda picture. They're saying "we've got a great country because we've got Communism." This unquestionably appeals to them, but they can't expect most Americans to stand up and applaud.

Photographically, and ignoring for the moment the defects of Kinopanorama, "Great Is My Country" contains some very exciting and beautiful sequences. In a couple of spots the Soviet technicians are playing with the wide screen (60 ft. x 25 ft at the Mayfair) much as Cinerama did in its fledgling days. A plane lands and takes off with a camera strapped to its belly, a car rides on a winding highway and in traffic, the camera goes on a motorboat ride and down a river on a raft. There is a good sense of participation in this. There are views of Moscow and Leningrad and of the Black Sea, of rivers, dams and steel mills. The vastness of Sibera is caught and often the picture composition shows dramatic imagination. Sovcolor, for the most part, is excellent.

But the overall impact suffers from the inadequacy of the process. The film is being shown on CineMiracle equipment, i.e. via three locked projectors out of a single booth. The resultant three panels are divided by very prominent matchlines and the images don't always match. There is a great deal of distortion on both sides, the side panels have a tendency to jiggle and blur, and objects on the screen literally change direction as they reach one of the matchlines. Also, the color in the three panels (representing three separate strips of film) rarely matches so that a river will be blue on the left, almost black in the middle and a dirty gray on the right.

The much-vaunted nine-channel stereophonic sound (Cinerama uses seven channels) adds little to this show. In fact, the male commentator is difficult to understand, which isn't much of a loss since the narration borders on the inane.

Although the Kinopanorama process won the Grand Prize at the Brussels Fair, it remains a puzzle why the Soviets would present such a technically inferior product to Amerians whom they are trying to impress with the very opposite. "Great Is My Country" is hard on the eyes (particularly when the camera pans along a subject) and it tends to be static. The Russia it shows is often beautiful, though many will be struck by the contrast of beautiful highways and boulevards with virtually no cars in sight. It's a curiosity item because it was made in the Soviet Union. Hift.

Jack the Ripper
(BRITISH)

Competent variation on an old theme, with title and subject as marquee value, plus obvious exploitation angles.

London June 23.

Regal Films International release of a Mid-Century Film (Robert S. Baker-Monty Berman) production. Features Lee Patterson, Eddie Byrne, Betty McDowall, Ewen Solon. Directed and photographed by Baker and Berman. Screenplay, Jimmy Sangster, from original story by Peter Hammond and Colin Craig; music, Stanley Black; editor, Peter Benzencenet. At Studio One, London. Running time, 84 MINS.

"Jack The Ripper" has no star names to sell it, but its title and theme have obvious exploitation value for right situations. Those patrons who revel in the morbid will be well satisfied by this modestly-made but holding little drama. Because its "X" certificate, children under 16 will be unable to see it in U.K. which makes it a chancey booking for family houses, but is a selling aid in other situations.

The film is based on the notorious series of crimes that rocked the East End of London at the turn of the century. A number of women, mainly streetwalkers, were foully murdered and mutilated, and the inflicted wounds suggested that the criminal was a skilled surgeon. Swiftly nicknamed "Jack The Ripper" by the terrorized East Enders, the criminal was never identified. It was generally thought that the crimes were revenge by a man who had himself suffered at the hands of a prostie.

This Peter Hammond - Colin Craig version of the yarn varies to some extent from the above layout. In their theory, the criminal is looking for a specific woman, his identity is revealed but he comes to a sticky end before the cops can arrest him, thus leading up to a grim climax.

Jimmy Sangster's screenplay keeps the audience guessing as to who the murderer is, and he cheats only slightly in laying his red herrings. An aura of suspense and fear is built up and the actual crimes are put over skilfully. Though the characters are often more like caricatures, a plausible picture of the fear-ridden East End of the period is shown.

The film relies on a solid cast of sound feature players many of whom obviously have greater opportunities than others. Eddie Byrne brings considerable force to his performance as the worried detective in charge of inquiries while Lee Patterson as a Yank dick sitting in on the case is a likeable hero.

John Le Mesurier and Ewen Solon play surgeons who have key roles in the mystery. Betty McDowall is the girl almoner who unwittingly helps to unmask the villain. There are also a number of effective cameos, notably Denis Shaw, as a trouble-raiser; George Rose, George Woodbridge, as an amorous aristocrat, and Jane Taylor and Anne Sharpe, as two of the Ripper's victims.

Stanley Black's music is fittingly eerie while the editing and camerawork are both sound. Rich.

Rowland V. Lee's "The Big Fisherman" is a pious but plodding account of the conversion to Christianity of Simon-Peter, the apostle called "the fisher of men." Its treatment is reverent but so far from rousing that in its present three-hour running time it is far over-length. As a hard-ticket attraction, the Technicolor-Panavision 70m release from Buena Vista looks dubious for the big city playdates, although its low-brow, literal approach could make it big in general areas.

These biblical attractions can't be evaluated on quite the same level as ordinary film dramas. There is a semi-educational quality about them that excuses some stateliness of pace and stiffness of characterization. But the screenplay for "The Big Fisherman," by Lee and Howard Estabrook, and the direction by Frank Borzage, is overweight with these qualities, while lacking the compensations needed to relieve them.

From a popular point of view, of course, nobody ever touched C. B. DeMille on these films. One reason is that he never neglected what seem to be the two most important elements for their success, spectacle and sex. There is plenty of opportunity for both in "The Big Fisherman," and it is all the more curious, considering its big budget and leisurely production schedule, that both are almost absent. Although the climax of the film is the scene in Herod's palace where Salome served the head of John the Baptist to the tyrant, this scene, laid in a sumptuous and impressively lavish banquet hall, is done almost entirely by shadows and is swiftly over. Salome, in fact, is not only never shown, she is never mentioned.

Actually, although the title seems to make Simon-Peter the central character, the film is only incidentally about him. His part in the story is his influence on two young lovers, John Saxon as an Arab prince, and Susan Kohner, as the daughter of Herod by an Arab princess. Saxon wants to succeed his father as chieftan of an Arab tribe and Miss Kohner wants to kill her father for the unhappiness he has inflicted on her mother. They are both finally deflected from their purpose by meeting Simon-Peter, who has been converted from a life of violence to peace by his exposure to Jesus.

The screenplay is a mixed affair in which the often ringing scriptural passages are incongruously are uncomfortably spliced with mundane conversation couched in contemporary language. Miss Kohner and Saxon make a handsome young couple. Saxon, particularly, is dashing in a neat beard and moustache. But their problems seem trivial against the turbulent ferment that was the birth of the Christian era. Miss Kohner is a gifted young actress, but she does not establish the conviction that she has the grim vindictiveness to carry through the murder of her father.

Howard Keel is handsomely picturesque as Simon-Peter, and shows he can hold his own as a straight actor. It is not his fault that there is no suggestion of the doughty strength identified with the chief apostle. His name, of course, means "Peter, the Rock," but there is none of this feeling as the character is written.

Martha Hyer, as Herodias, manages to convey a sensuality that is welcome, and Herbert Lom, as Herod, creates a psychopathic figure of considerable interest. Ray Stricklyn plays an Arab prince whose frustrations lead him to intrigue against Miss Kohner and Saxon, and he does it well. Marian Seldes has intrinsic integrity and it carries across. Others who contribute capably include Alexander Scourby, Jay Barney, Charlotte Fletcher, Mark Dana, Rhodes Reason, Henry Brandon, Brian Hutton, Thomas Troupe and Marianne Stewart. Beulah Bondi, as Simon-Peter's mother, is genuinely moving in a standout performance.

Of interest from a technical point of view is that "The Big Fisherman" was filmed entirely in this country, reversing a trend of recent years. The "Palestine" that is the film's setting was shot entirely on locations in the San Fernando Valley and the California desert. It seems entirely authentic. One reason probably is Lee Garmes' camera work, done in fine Technicolor and a new Panavision 70m process. This process has fine definition and exceptional depth of focus, at times a three-dimensional feeling. Photographed in Eastman Color by Technicolor, the exteriors are skillfully composed and unfailingly effective, visually.

The technical portions of the film are excellent throughout. The production design by John De Cuir ranging from simple homes to lavish palaces, is evocative and useful. Costumes, by Renie, are a consistent pleasure to the eye. Paul Weatherwax, who did the editing, has done considerable to keep the production fluid. Sound, by Leslie I. Carey and Frank H. Wilkinson, is proficient. Julia Heron's set decoration is another asset. The musical score, by Albert Hay Malotte, is adequate, but it does not have the grandeur that might have been expected from this composer. Joseph Gershenson's conducting, from David Tampkin's orchestration, is first-rate. Powe.

Das Indische Grabmal
(The Indian Tomb)
(GERMAN—COLOR)

Berlin, June 23.

Gloria release of CCC (Artur Brauner) production. Stars Debra Paget and Paul Hubschmid. Directed by Fritz Lang. Screenplay, Werner Joerg Lueddecke, after story by Thea von Harbou. Camera (Eastmancolor), Richard Angst; music, Gerhard Becker. At Zoo Palast, Berlin. Running time, 101 MINS.

Seetha	Debra Paget
Harald Berger	Paul Hubschmid
Chandra	Walther Reyer
Dr. Walter Rhode	Claus Holm
Irene Rhode	Sabine Bethmann
Ramigani	Rene Deltgen

This is the sequel to "Tiger of Eschnapur" and it's as mild as the first production. Again place the blame on the various flaws which made already "Tiger of Eschnapur" such an unfortunate item.

First portion ended with the flight of the German architect Paul Hubschmid) and Seetha, the temple dancer (Debra Paget). Both are captured by the men of the jealous Maharajah Chandra (Walther Reyer). The audience sees another series of killings, cruelties, tortures and intrigues until the corny conclusion.

There's a certain plus about picture's exotic background, but that's about the only asset here. Hans.

Johansson-Patterson

United Artists Theatre release of TelePrompter pay-see production. Producer, E. J. Spiro; cameraman, Frank Zukor; narration, Chris Schenkel. Previewed in N.Y. June 29. Running time, 17 MINS

It's axiomatic that the value of fight films are dependant on the fight itself. Ingemar Johansson's sensational, unexpected, third round knockout victory over Floyd Patterson for the heavyweight championship has provided United Artists, which is distributing the films theatrically for TelePrompter, with perhaps the best fistic footage in a decade.

The films, excellently photographed and edited down to an action-packed 17 minutes, including slow motion reprises of each of the seven knockdowns, are a boxoffice natural and should chalk up hefty returns in worldwide showings. Chris Schenkel's narration has been wisely kept to a minimum. The action on the screen speaks potently for itself.

The first two rounds, in which the contestants resorted mainly to left jabs, are shown in their entirety. Then came the climatic third frame with Johansson unleashing the right hand which he had kept under wraps until fight time. The fury of the Swede's attack and the dazed anguish of Patterson can be seen dramatically.

E. J. Spiro produced for TelePrompter and Frank Zukor supervised the nine-man camera crew. UA will have 800 prints available, said to be a record for fight films. Holl.

North By Northwest
(COLOR; V'VISION)

Hitchcock and Cary Grant. Top stars for good b.o.

Hollywood, June 26.

Metro release produced and directed by Alfred Hitchcock. Stars Cary Grant, Eva Marie Saint, James Mason. Screenplay, Ernest Lehman; camera (Technicolor) Robert Burks; music, Bernard Herrmann; editor, George Tomasini. Previewed at the Westwood Village Theatre, June 24, '59. Running time: 136 MINS.

Metro's "North by Northwest" is the Alfred Hitchcock mixture as before—suspense, intrigue, comedy, humor. Seldom has the concoction been served up so delectably. It should be top b.o.

Second thoughts on the film will produce the feeling that there are loose ends and stray threads that are never quite bound up or followed through. But the form of the spy melodrama, especially when it is being none too gently spoofed, with counter-espionage and double-agenting rampant, is a loose one and license is permissible. Ernest Lehman has contributed a blithe and funny script.

"North By Northwest" creates for this country the glamorous background achieved so often and so well in Europe. Hitchcock uses actual locations, the Plaza in New York, the Ambassador East in Chicago, Grand Central Station, the 20th Century, Limited, United Nations headquarters in Manhattan, Mount Rushmore (S.D.) National Monument, the plains of Indiana. One scene, where the hero is ambushed by an airplane on the flat, sun-baked prairie, is a brilliant use of location. The scene would not have one-tenth its effect if done in a studio, no matter how skillfully contrived.

Cary Grant brings technique and charm to the central character. He is a Madison Avenue man-about-Manhattan, sleekly handsome, carelessly twice-divorced, debonair as a cigaret ad. The story gets underway when he's mistaken for a U.S. intelligence agent by a pack of foreign agents headed by James Mason. Actually the man he is mistaken for does not exist. The character has been created by U.S. Central Intelligence as a diversion so the foreign spies (never identified as to origin, but presumbaly Communist) will not spot the true U.S. agent in their midst. The complications are staggering but they play like an Olympic version of a three-legged race.

Grant's problem is to avoid getting knocked off by Mason's gang without tipping them that he is a classic case of the innocent bystander. The case is serious, but Hitchcock's macabre sense of humor and instinct for romantic byplay, for which Lehman's screenplay gives plenty of opportunity, never allows it to stay grim for too long. Suspense is deliberately broken for relief and then skillfully re-established. At times it seems Hitchcock is kidding his own penchant for the bizarre, but this sardonic attitude is so deftly handled it only enhances the thrills.

Hitchcock also displays again his ability to see qualities in an actress not hitherto shown. Eva Marie Saint has been effectively drab and convincingly sweet in previous roles, but she dives headfirst into Mata Hari in "North By Northwest" and shows she can be unexpectedly and thoroughly glamorous. She also manages the difficult impression of seeming basically innocent while explaining how she becomes Mason's mistress. Mason, in a rather stock role, is properly forbidding.

Jessie Royce Landis has a fluttery comedy role from which she extracts all possible laughter, and Leo G. Carroll is delightful as the head of a U.S. intelligence unit. Others in key roles are Philip Ober, Josephine Hutchinson, Martin Landau, Adam Williams and Edward Platt. Each creates individuality and excitement.

Sure to be widely-commented upon, among other scenes and lines in "North By Northwest," is a love scene between Miss Saint and Grant, as memorable as Hitchcock's famous scene between Grant and Ingrid Bergman in "Notorious." The current scene takes place in a train compartment, as the pair are en route to Chicago, and Grant's comment as he comes up for air—"beats flying"—may well enter the language.

'Horse' Fast 43G, Chi; 'Pennies' Hotsy $24,500; 'Hole' Whopping 48G, 'Ship' Slow 18G, 2d Wks., 'Any Girl' 12G

Chicago, June 30.

Downtown trade is still spotty but is perking up a bit this term thanks to several big pix, both new and holdover. The heat wave here is figured to help chase in some trade.

Preem of "Horse Soldiers" is galloping to a stout $43,000 at the State-Lake while Esquire's "Five Pennies" is rated torrid. Monroe's new bill, "Lone Texan" and "Alaska Passage," should hit a fair figure.

"Hole in Head" continues great in second Oriental frame. "Don't Give Up Ship" is figured slow at the Chicago, also in second. "Naked Maja" in second sesh is sagging at United Artists.

Other second-weekers include "The Mysterians," fairish at the Roosevelt; and "Woman Obsessed," sad at McVickers.

Third stanza of "Ask Any Girl" shapes stout at the Woods while "Al Capone" is fancy in eighth frame at Todd's Cinestage. "Gigi" is still hotsy in 18th week at the Loop. The 40th round of "South Seas Adventure" is brisk at Palace.

Estimates for This Week

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 90-$1.80) —"Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) (2d wk). Slow $18,000. Last week, $30,000.

Esquire (H&E Balaban) (1,350; $1.50)—"The Five Pennies" (Par). Torrid $24,500. Last week "Room at Top" (Cont) (9th wk), $8,000.

Boston, June 30.

Rain here both Saturday and Sunday brought lines to first-run houses for first time this summer. While biz was booming, resort spots were deserted. Pacing city is "Nun's Story" with a great session at the Met, giving that huge house its biggest opening week in months. "Five Pennies" shapes sockeroo at Paramount. "Horse Soldiers" shapes wow at Orpheum. "Love Is My Profession" is hotsy at two houses.

"Say One For Me" looks lofty in second week at Memorial. "Room at Top" is holding big at Kenmore in seventh. "Ask Any Girl" is slick in second at Saxon.

'For Me' Sockeroo $12,000, Cincy Ace

Cincinnati, June 30.

Downtown film biz is being bolstered this week by new product. "Say One For Me," smash at Keith's, holds the lead. "Angry Hills" shapes mild at flagship Albee. "Tarzan's Greatest Adventure" and "Man Who Could Cheat Death" combo has the small Grand in winning stride. "Gigantis" and "Rodan" loom okay at the Palace. "South Seas Adventure" continues solid in 35th week. Hard-ticket "Diary of Anne Frank" shapes fairish in sixth and final week at Suburban Valley, where regular policy resumes July 2 with "Five Pennies."

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 90-$1.25)—"Angry Hills" (M-G). Mild $8,000. Last week, "Ask Any Girl" (M-G) (2d wk), 8,500.

St. Loo Strike Ends, Biz Soars; 'Any Girl' Socko $13,000, 'For Me' 15G, 2

St. Louis, June 30.

Stereotypers' strike which closed both newspapers here for some time, has been ended and biz is soaring at most houses currently. Doing nicely is "Gigantis" good at the Fox. Standout of new pix is "Ask Any Girl," smash at Loew's. Going higher is "Pork Chop Hill" in second stanza at Orpheum while "Sleeping Beauty" in third week at Pageant is soaring as is "Say One For Me," big in second.

Estimates for This Week

Apollo Art (Grace) (700; 90-$1.25)—"Silken Affair" (DCA) and "Baby and Battleship" (DCA). Oke $2,500. Last week, "Crucible" (Indie) (3d wk), $1,000.

Shady Oak (Arthur) (760; 60-90)—"Gigi" (M-G) (12th wk). Socko $3,000. Last week, $2,500.

'Horse' Lusty $14,000, Seattle; 'Earth' Big 7G

Seattle, June 30.

Most first-runs downtown are doing better this week than of late. Standout is "Horse Soldiers," great at Coliseum. "This Earth Is Mine" shapes nearly as big at the bandbox Music Box.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (739; 90-$1.50)—"Around World" (UA) (4th wk). Good $4,500. Last week, $4,600.

Coliseum (Fox-Evergreen) (1,870; 90-$1.50)—"Horse Soldiers" (UA) and "Riot Juvenile Prison" (UA). Great $14,000 or over. Last week, "Tarzan's Greatest Adventure" (Par) and "Cheat Death" (Par), $6,300 in 8 days.

Fifth Avenue (Fox-Evergreen) (2,500; 90-$1.50)—"Room At Top" (Cont). Okay $8,000. Last week, "Happened to Jane" (Col) and "Bandit Zhobe" (Col) (2d wk), $5,300.

Music Box (Hamrick) (850; 90-$1.50)—"This Earth Is Mine" (U). Big $7,000 or near. Last week, "Sleeping Beauty" (BV) (2d wk), $3,400.

Orpheum (Hamrick) (2,700; 90-$1.50) — "Mysterians" (M-G) (2d wk) and "Westbound" (WB). Drab $3,500. Last week, $7,700.

Paramount (Fox-Evergreen) (3,107; 90-$1.50)—"Some Like It Hot" (UA) (9th wk). Good $5,000. Last week, $7,700.

'Horse' Brisk 12G, L'ville; 'H-Man' 6G

Louisville, June 30.

Mid-summer temperatures are bearing down this week, but film biz with cool-air-conditioned comfort and top product, is holding up nicely. "Love Is My Profession" at the Brown looks smash in first. Biggest coin total goes to "Horse Soldiers" at United Artists, with socko take. Great promotion given "Soldiers" is a plus factor mark. Biz at other downtown houses is uneven with "Imitation of Life" still boff in seventh Kentucky week.

Detroit, June 30.

Batch of new product, all of it strong, will help general biz tone here this stanza. "Horse Soldiers" is standout with a mighty take at the Palms. "This Earth Is Mine" is comparably as big at the small Madison and a wow session. "Nun's Story" looms great at Michigan while "Say One For Me" is okay in second at the Fox. Week-long celebration of first Freedom Festival, a hands-across-the-river affair covering Independence Day and Canada's Dominion, may help biz a bit, too.

'BEAUTY' BOFFO 12G, OMAHA; 'SHIP' $9,000

Omaha, June 30.

Biz is climbing at downtown first-runs this week, thanks to strong, new product. "Don't Give Up Ship" is hotsy at the Omaha while "Say One for Me" is lively at Orpheum despite loss of opening night (26) due to the closed-circuit tv of the Johansson-Patterson fight. "Sleeping Beauty" stays wham at State in second stanza. The hard-ticket, "South Pacific," remains great in No. 36 round at the Cooper.

Estimates for This Week

Cooper (Cooper) (708; $1.50-$2.20)—"South Pacific" (Magna) (36th wk). Great $6,500. Last week, $6,000.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,066; 75-$1) —"Don't Give Up Ship" (Par). Looks hotsy $9,000; may hold. Last week, "Hangman" (Par) and "When Hell Broke Loose" (Par), $5,000.

Orpheum (Tristates) (2,877; 75-$1)—"Say One for Me" (20th). Shapes smash $10,000 or over. Last week, "It Happened To Jane" (Col), $6,500.

State (Cooper) (743; $1.45)—"Sleeping Beauty" (BV) and "Grand Canyon" (BV) (2d wk). Smash $12,000. Last week, same.

'Horse' Okay at $11,000 In Balto; 'Hercules' Hot 30G, 'Ship' Slow 5½G

Baltimore, June 30.

Strong new entries and steady holdovers brighten the picture here this round. Biggest of new films is "Hercules," which opened big at Hipp. Best of holdovers are "Say One For Me," fair in second at the Town and "Room At the Top" still sturdy in ninth at the Playhouse. "Don't Give Up the Ship" is rated slow in first at Mayfair.

Minneapolis, June 30.

As the July 4 holiday weekend nears, holdovers are shrinking to virtually imperceptible proportions for the first time in months and a flock of newcomers take over, with more on horizon. Chief of the current newies are "Love Is My Profession" and "Don't Give Up the Ship," latter being good and "Love" big. Third stanza for "Say One for Me" shapes stout and second for "Ask Any Girl" looks lofty. Fight pictures are an added attraction at both RKO Orpheum and RKO Pan and will help.

Estimates for This Week

'ANY GIRL' OK $7,000, INDPLS.; 'SAY ONE' 7½G

Indianapolis, June 30.

Business is moving in a narrow groove there this week, a high discomfort index being an important factor. "Diary of Anne Frank" is best money film, at Keith's, with a good figure. "H-Man" at the Indiana is sad. "Say One For Me" at Circle looks neat in second week. "Ask Any Girl" at Loew's is passable.

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Cockrill-Dolle) (2,800; 85-90)—"Say One For Me" (20th) (2d wk). Neat $7,500. Last week, $11,000.

Loew's (Loew) (2,427; 75-90)—"Ask Any Girl" (M-G) and "Machete" (UA). Fairly good $7,000 or near. Last week, "Shake Hands With Devil" (UA) and "Riot in Juvenile Prison" (UA), $5,500.

Pittsburgh, June 30.

Weekend brought 90% heat here but business is holding up solid with three new strong entries. "Horse Soldiers" is rated lusty at the Penn. Standout is "This Earth Is Mine," terrific at the Fulton, and even topping "Imitation of Life." "Say One For Me" is big at Harris. "Don't Give Up the Ship" at Stanley shapes fair, way off from first stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,655; 85-$1.25)—"This Earth is Mine" (U). Terrific $12,000. Last week, "Man Cheat Death" (Par) and "Tarzan's Greatest Adventure" (Par), $3,500.

Harris (Harris) (2,100; $1-$1.25) —"Say One for Me" (20th). Hotsy $15,000. Last week, "It Happened To Jane" (Col), $7,100.

Penn (UATC) (3,300; $1-$1.50)—"Horse Soldiers" (UA). Lusty $19,000. Last week, "Mysterians" (M-G), $9,000.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (824; $1.25)—"Room At Top" (Cont) (7th wk). Lusty $3,200. Last week, $3,600.

Stanley (SW) (3,700; 85-$1.25)—"Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) (2d wk). Opposition hurting this and current week will drop to fair $8,000. Last week, $14,000.

Warner (SW) (2,000; 50-$1.25)—"Sleeping Beauty" (BV) (2d wk). Another fair $8,500.

'Ship' Hefty $10,000, K.C.; 'Earth' Firm 8G, 'Room' 4½G, 'For Me' Hep 12G

Kansas City, June 30.

City's first-runs were in a turmoil with no newspapers for 10 days because of typographers strike. With walkout ended, biz perked up some. Durwood circuit reopened its Roxy last Thursday, after considerable remodelling, with "Say One For Me" and great returns. Paramount looks hefty with "Don't Give Up Ship." Fox Midwest has "This Earth Is Mine" in full stride at the Uptown. "Room at Top" is in third week at the Missouri for an unusual run.

Estimates for This Week

Capri (Durwood) (628; $1.50, $2.25, $2.50) — "South Pacific" (Magna) (14th wk). Good $6,500. Last week same.

Crest, Riverside (Commonwealth) (900 cars each, 85c)—Currently on subsequents. Last week, "Horrors Black Museum" (AI) and "Headless Ghost" (AI) first-runs, with "Com-

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

Heat Wilts B'way, But 'Earth' Plus Stage Sock 71G; 'Horse' Giant 50G, 'Porgy' Great 16½G, 'Story' 180G

Hot, humid weather is playing a return engagement and Broadway first-runs currently are off considerably from last week. However, some new bills are showing plenty of strength to counter this sag somewhat. Lions Club conclave in city was not regarded as helping much.

Top coin take among the three newomers is going to "This Earth Is Mine" with stageshow which looks to hit a big $71,000 in first session at the Roxy "Horse Soldiers" looms as best regular straight-filmer with a wham $50,000 opening round at the Astor. Greatest showing for any new pic is being registered by "Porgy and Bess," with virtual capacity $14,000 in first four days ended last Saturday (27) at the Warner plus $2,500 from two parties preem night last Wednesday when there were some invited guests.

Still champ at the wickets is "Nun's Story" with stageshow, which looks to hold with a mighty $180,000 in second stanza at the Music Hall. "Five Pennies" continues smash $52,000 or a bit over in first holdover week at the Capitol after running ahead of hopes opening week to get greatest trade this house has registered in many months. "Say One For Me" likewise shapes great at $48,000 or close in second session at the Paramount.

"Middle of Night" still is smash in second round, with $19,000 at the Forum, and $16,800 at the arty Trans-Lux 52d Street. "John Paul Jones" is down to mild $12,500 in second frame at the Rivoli. "Elephant Gun" is wobbly in second Victoria round, being supplanted by "Hound of Baskervilles" next Friday.

"Some Like It Hot" continued amazingly smash with $33,800 in 13th session at the State, and stays for about three weeks longer before "Hole in Head" comes in. "Young Philadelphians" looks to wind the sixth-final week at the Criterion with an okay $14,000. "Anatomy of A Murder" supplants it tomorrow (Thurs.) when it opens day-date at the Plaza.

"Diary of Anne Frank" is holding with $9,800 for 15th week at the Palace. "Grand Illusion," out on reissue, looks like smash $10,500 opening week at the Baronet, new high for an oldie at house. "Wild Strawberries" is hitting a new record of $13,800 at the Beekman for first-run policy.

Estimates for This Week

Philadelphia, June 30.

Despite blistering heat, the fresh lineup of pix will hypo midtown biz this round. "Horse Soldiers" has a commanding lead at the wickets with a mighty figure at the Fox. "Nun's Story" also is smash opening week at the Randolph. "Ask Any Girl," apparently feeling the competition from other new films, is disappointing on initial session at the Stanley. In contrast, "This Earth Is Mine" is rated sokeroo at the Staunton. "Don't Give Up Ship" looks lusty at the Viking.

KEEPING UP WITH BARNEY

Colonel Starts Nebraska U. Family Scholarship Project

Lincoln, June 30.

Air Force Col. Barney Oldfield, former newspaperman and film publicist, is working on a new foundation.

Oldfield, author of "Never a Shot in Anger," is working on a family scholarship fund of $20,000 for the U. of Nebraska Foundation. He seeks to establish the "Kinman-Oldfield Scholarship Fund" to honor his wife's family.

A year ago Barney and Mrs. Oldfield (former Valda Kinman) chipped in a $1,000 prize they won on a tv quiz show.

At the June commencement exercises at Nebraska, Oldfield added another $1,000 to the fund. He addressed class agents of the Nebraska Alumni on the occasion of his second donation.

"I'm just a walking installment plan," he told the alumni as he explained the family enterprise scholarship fund he started. He's a 1933 grad.

Oldfield's future includes a multitude of publicity tasks on Air Force projects, coverage of the Russia-U.S.A. track meet in Philadelphia July 18-19 and a similar stint at the Pan-American Games in Chicago Aug. 27-Sept. 2.

He's slated for more news coverage when Rome hosts the 1960 Olympics. This time Oldfield will file for Newspaper Enterprise Association (NEA).

sition in Moscow this summer—built by U. S. funds, whereas the USSR has a readymade igloo, in the airconditioned Coliseum—the Soviet Exhibition of Science, Technology & Culture will run ror 42 days, June 30-Aug. 10.

It's the first for the USSR since the N. Y. World's Fair in 1939 and whoever is the Billy Rose of the Volga Circuit deserves—and will probably get—another decoration. It's a great show.

The showmanship is rampant even in the Science & Technology divisions but when it comes to the Cuture part of the billing they really let themselves go. The displays are compelling. The contrasts of the development from the agrarian life to the urban culture is shown as evidenced in any and all of the 16 Socialist Soviet Republics which constitute the Union. Accent, of course, is on ballet and music but there is plenty of circus, stage and cinema intertwined.

The statistics are overwhelming. As you move from display to display legends tell you that there are 48 permanent circuses, 14 traveling circuses, 50 circus companies, 6,000 circus performers who play to audiences of 30,000,000 a year and have given 70,000 shows all told. Another statistic: Soviet circus actors were a great hit in 21 foreign countries giving 2,200 shows to 7,500,000 customers.

No particular reference to Russia's famed clown, Popov, is made but a huge likeness of Prof. A. S. Popov (1852-1906) looks down upon the radio-tv-stereo displays in general and a model of "Popov's first radio receiver demonstrated at a meeting of the Russian Physical & Chemical Society, May 7, 1895"—all this as part of the claimed display that Prof. Popov is the "inventor" of radio.

USSR Statistics

Theatre? Before the Revolution —it says here—there were 172 drama theatres; now there are 400 dramatic theatres in 49 languages, as a likeness of K. S. Stanislavsky beams down on the onlooker.

There are also 1,400,000 amateur actors and over 1,000 amateur theatres, not to mention countless choral groups.

Films? In 1958, 35 film studios produced 780 feature, chronicle, popular science, documentary and educational films. The seven year plan for 1959-65 projects 1,161 full-length features; 4,600 shorts, documentaries, etc., 11,000 newsreels.

Nearby are placards trailerizing the Soviets' Cinerama, called Cinepanorama, which opened at the Mayfair, on Broadway, yesterday (Tues.), titled "This Is My Country" (theirs, not ours). (Cinerama's squawk caused a change in billing to Kinopanorama; incidentally it's NSG—see Film Reviews).

Over all, one V. I. Lenin smiles down benignly with the legend, "Of all the arts the most important for us is the cinema."

A footnote: post-World War II, Soviet films have merited prizes at international film festivals.

Press? In the USSR there are 23 national daily newspapers of which Pravda's 5,600,000 circulation is the largest. There are 516 national newspapers published in their local languages; there are 4,325 small town sheets in various languages; there are 75 languages in the USSR which publish in 104 different lingos.

Music? Sergei Prokofieff dominates the legend, in English, "Soviet composers create for the people. The peaceful life of the people is the motif of their music."

The show biz phases are on the right hand segments of the second and third floors. Radio and television, high-fidelity and stereophonic listening rooms are the obligatos to the heavy industry, agriculture, science and optics on one floor. And on the other floor are the displays of the fine arts, ballet, books, education, foods, automobiles, furs, fabrics and model apartments. It's easily the "lighter" of the two displays although, presumably, the street-floor (auditorium) showings of Russian fashions (not seen at the press preview) may eclipse that at times. (The aud was being readied for President Eisenhower's surprise visit, now that Frol R. Kozlov, First Deputy Premier of the USSR Council of Ministers, arrived with his entourage to officially induct the Soviet Exhibition.

Sputniks I, II and III (dream stage) are on display, as at the Brussels Expo, and while there are a few towering men of muscle the hard sell is by no means as overwhelming. In fact, as further contrast, candyboxes of Russian-made bonbons, in pianoforte-shaped boxes, are adorned with likeness of Van Cliburn!

The showmanship is rife throughout the expo. Marathon newsreels, chiefly in color, run the gamut from boy-meets-tractor (industry displays) to countless feet showing the Moiseyev Ballet, the Ballet Russe, the top musical artists (Oistrakh et al.) in sound-and-action. The projectors are Russian-made and the musical and cinematic reproductions are excellent. In fact, everything carries the USSR imprint, from books and magazines and papers to recordings and the heavy industry products. Russian-made radio, hi-fi, tv and kindred equipment vie with the optical goods, automobiles, Aerflot jet models, tractors, fabrics and furs.

The models of their theatres, scenic designs, costumes, wigs are as impressive as their pianofortes and scientific items. Native perfumes, soap, embroidery, watches, cameras, foodstuffs (including caviar, natch!), contrast with educational facilities, the skyscraper University of Moscow, students' hobbies, public health, community housing, a replica of the Moscow airport, the propaganda for the roomy Russian planes (220 passengers), and kindred displays.

There is a corps of Soviet guides and explainers, most of them first-time in America, all of them friendly, smiling and, when told their English is good, modestly declaiming, "I am just starting to learn." If some misguided Yank says something is "Russian" you are politely corrected to "Soviet" or "Soviet Union."

It's being billed as the Russian Exhibition—nothing as pretentious or fancy as calling it an Exposition or a Fair.

Among the exhibits, of course, are such pretentious items as an atomic-powered ice-breaker (no family should be without one!) and there are many impressive industrial and scientific items, but the built-in showmanship of the overall presentation particularly will intrigue the show biz-minded viewer.

There are sleek hi-fi and stereo gadgets; a family-type car and the USSR road company of a Cadillac; but while the affable Russian guides (chiefly male) are informative and communicative they are, naturally stymied (1) on answers as how many Russians can own and buy cars, etc.; (2), the price in the dollar equivalent (they know some figures in rubles).

Everything inside is USSR except the seemingly supplemented supply of Burns security officers; the 25c hot-dog and 15c coffee and kindred refreshments; and the Yank customers, of course.

The visitor to the Soviet Exhibition will be greeted, as he mounts the escalator to the second floor: "Let there be better friendlier relations between the people of the Soviet Union and the U.S.A." Another legend: "All nations can see that USSR plans are plans of peaceful construction." Another: "Contacts and exchanges between nations promote mutual understanding and further the cause of peace"; and a lengthier one accents peace and peaceful co-existence. It says here.

Anyway, the Soviets' Barnum—wherever he may be— is no slouch. It's a good show and at $1 a throw (50c for the kiddies, and the juveniles will have plenty of hi-sci to intrigue them) it'll do boffo Russo b.o.

Berger Relights Paradise

Minneapolis, June 30.

Bennie Berger has reopened his long-shuttered neighborhood Paradise Theatre here with a twin bill low admission (50c) policy. Hit pictures will be offered as duals on late runs, the opening bill, for example, comprising "Some Came Running" and "In Love and War."

Children will be admitted free when accompanied by adults, the same as at drive-in theatres.

Summer Weather Clips West End Biz; 'For Me' Fair $7,000, 'Gigi' Mighty 10G in 19th, 'Some Hot' Big 7½G

London, June 23.

West End first-runs took a dive last stanza, largely because of a week of consistently fine summer weather. Two new entries faired only moderately, "Say One For Me," heading for a fair $7.000 or near at Leicester Square Theatre, and "Tarzan's Greatest Adventure," for a dull $6,700 at the Plaza.

Long-running blockbusters were in better shape, but only "Gigi" maintained its capacity standing, with another $10.000 for its 19th week at the Columbia. "South Pacific" was around $13.000 for the 61st frame at the Dominion while "Seven Wonders of World" hit over better than $12.000 in its 69th Casino week.

"Diary of Anne Frank" disappointed in second Carlton week, and was slow $5.000 or near in third round. "Some Like It Hot" maintained its pace with a great $7.500 in sixth London Pavilion week. "Rio Bravo" continued nicely around $8,500 in its third Warner sesh.

Estimates for Last Week

Astoria (CMA) (1.474; $1.20-$2.15) — "Around World In 80 Days" (UA) (103d wk). Down to $4.700. Winds up July 11 and "Sleeping Beauty" (Disney) follows July 29.

Carlton (20th) (1,128; 70-$2.15)—"Diary, Anne Frank" (20th) (3d wk). Lean at about $5.000, including one charity gala. Moderate $5,900 in previous week, also with charity show.

Casino (Indie) (1.155; 70-$2.15)—"Seven Wonders of World" (Robin) (69th wk). Over $12.000, still big.

Columbia (Col) (740; $1.05-$2.50)—"Gigi" (M-G) (19th wk). Capacity again at $10.000.

Dominion (CMA) (1.712; $1.05-$2.20) — "South Pacific" (20th) (61st wk). Stout $13.000 or near.

Empire (M-G) (3.099; 55-$1.70)—"Count Your Blessings" (M-G) (2d wk). Average $9.000 or near. Opener was $10,200. "Mating Game" (M-G) follows June 25.

Leicester Square Theatre (CMA) (1.376; 50-$1.70) — "Say One For Me" (20th). Fair $7.000 or near.

London Pavilion (UA) (1.217; 50-$1.70)—"Some Like It Hot" (UA) (6th wk). Heading for great $7,500. Fifth was $8.600.

Odeon, Leicester Square (CMA) (2,200; 50-$1.70) — "Woman Obsessed" (20th) (2d wk). Around $6,400. Opener was $7.000. "Ferry to Hong Kong" (Rank) opens with charity preem July 2.

Odeon, Marble Arch (CMA) (2,200; 50-$1.70)—"Middle of Night" (Col) (3d wk). Moderate $4.000. Second was $5.000. "Heart of Man" (Rank) opens June 25.

Plaza (Par) (1.902; 70-$1.70) — "Tarzan's Greatest Adventure" ([illegible]). Heading for dull $6.700.

Rialto (20th) (592; 50-$1.30) — "Room At Top" (IFD) (17th wk). Brisk $3,400. Stays one more round, with "Diary, Anne Frank" transferring here June 30.

Ritz (M-G) (432; 50-$1.30) — "Look Back in Anger" (ABP). Fair $2,[illegible].

Studio One (APT) (600; 30-$1.20) "Shaggy Dog" (Disney) (6th wk). Almost $2.700. "Darby O'Gill and the Little People" (Disney) follows July 2.

Warner (WB) (1.785; 50-$1.70)—"Rio Bravo" (WB) (3d wk). Bright $8.500 or near. Second, $9.800.

Italo-Pakistan Film Plan

Karachi, June 23.

Pakistan and Italy may sponsor a joint venture in the film industry if talks recently held in Rome between Karachi's Chief Commissioner and the Italian government officials bear fruit. Karachi's Chief Commissioner, N. M. Khan, had gone to Rome to participate in the Olympic talks.

According to N. M. Khan, the talks were encouraging. Besides the joint venture, he also explored the possibilities of importing a few scholarships for Pakistani recruits for training in Italy in various departments of the film techniques.

Acapulco Plans Legit

Acapulco, June 23.

This Mexican resort finally will have a legit theatre season. The Ski Club, in association with an Acapulco pro-theatre group, and the National Institute of Fine Arts (of Mexico City), is preparing to present plays and musical revues for three to six months annually.

The first serious legit effort plans to present selected Mexican and Latin American plays as well as translations of Broadway hits.

Yanks Regain Top B.O. With Swiss

Zurich, June 30.

Second half of the 1958-59 Swiss film season, January-June, saw Yank films back in the top position, with four out of the ten topgrossers being of U. S. origin in the five key cities of Zurich, Basle, Berne, Geneva and Lausanne. This represents a marked upbeat as against the first six-month period (July-Dec.) of the current season where only one Yank entry, Brothers Karamazov" (M-G), fared well enough to be included in the Top Ten list.

The four U. S. winners are: "Inn of the Sixth Happiness" (20th) in third spot, with 10 weeks in the five cities, "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" and "Gigi," both from Metro, in sixth and seventh position, respectively (though "Gigi" fared considerably better in the German part of Switzerland), and "Vertigo" (Par) (ninth).

Top spot is held by a sleeper, Germany's satirical comedy "Wir Wunderkinder" (We're All Child Prodigies), which built into a walloping hit largely through word-of-mouth, after a conspicuously slow start in Berne where it then ran for 14 sellout weeks. Pic is still running in Zurich and Basle, 11th week in the former and eighth in the latter city. It is still going strong in both situations.

Swiss product again made some excellent showings, with "Die Kaeserei in der Vehfreude" in the runnerup position, with a total running time of 28 weeks in the three German-speaking cities of Zurich, Basle and Berne alone, and "Cafe Odeon" in the fourth spot.

Remaining three top grossers came from France, namely "My Uncle, Mr. Hulot" (fifth), Jean Gabin starrer "The Big Families" (eighth) and Brigitte Bardot entry "Woman and the Puppet" (tenth) which, incidentally, had its world premiere in Zurich last Xmas. Other Yank pix doing well this stanza, though tending to be a bit uneven, include "Viking's" (UA), "Black Orchid" (Par), "Big Country" (UA), "Merry Andrew" (M-G) and "Naked Maja" (M-G).

Bryanston to Produce Flaubert's 'Salammbo'

London, June 23.

The newly-formed Bryanston Films has joined forces with British Lion and Marjan Productions in a $3,000.000 project to make and distribute "Salammbo," based on Gustave Flaubert's novel. Bob Roberts, acting on behalf of Barjan, will produce the pic in collaboration with a British producer yet to be named.

Bryanston was formed in April with Sir Michael Balcon as chairman and Maxwell Setton as managing director. Many indie producers are on the board. The outfit has a revolving credit of around $3,000.000, contributed from various sources including British Lion.

Tom Young, associated some 35 years with the 20th-Fox office in Memphis and currently branch manager, toasted at a dinner at Variety Club, Tent No. 20.

French Dubbed Films May Get India Distrib

Paris, June 23.

India, with its English-speaking aspects, is a natural mart for American and English films. But they may have competition soon via French films dubbed into English.

A rep of the Janatha Cine Corp., of Madras, is due here soon to buy Anglo-dubbed French films for release in India in regular cinemas. French producers have made many dual-lingoed pix, French and English, in the past in tries for the Yank mart, and have dubbed many pix for sale to Yank tv.

Maximilian Pic Lifts Mex Hopes Of More Co-Prod

Mexico City, June 30.

Announcement of a three-nation coproduction on the life of Emperor Maximilian and Empress Carlota by Clasa Films Mundiales is setting the stage for increased activity in multi-nation production. Armando Orive de Alba, head of Clasa, sent his production chief to Europe recently to sell rights to "La Cucaracha," and at the same time to negotiate coproduction of the Maximilian-Carlota project, put off several times in the past because of heavy budget demands.

Jose Luis Celis, production chief, came back with two verbal commitments instead of one: from Kopecky Films of Germany and Virtus Films of Italy. Juan Kopecky arrived here last week to finalize deal, and a Virtus rep is expected shortly.

But, apart from this initial three-nation deal, Celis told de Alba that "there is a great deal of interest in Europe on coproducing with Mexico." Therefore, both Clasa and other major producers are seeking adequate properties suitable for coproduction by three or more nations. Mexico has long been sold on coproductions as the road out of the doldrums and beggarly boxoffice receipts.

It is rather well set that Maria Felix will be Empress Carlota. The meaty role of Benito Juarez will go to Arturo de Cordova. Other major roles to be apportioned to talent of coproducing nations, with probabilities that Carlota's lady in waiting will be handed to an Italian actress.

This is touted as "the most important coproduction in the history of Mexican films," and Orive Alba said that the general story line has been accepted by coproducers, with the next four or five months devoted to polishing the script. Picture budget in excess of 10 million pesos ($800.000).

Another Clasa coproduction may come about as a direct result of visit here by trick photography expert John Fulton. His services have been acquired to work out special effects for "Macario," film based on a Bruno Traven work, which is scheduled for August or September shooting.

Fulton, after reading the script, was highly enthusiastic and said picture should be made in English and Spanish because it has worldwide appeal. He indicated that he will attempt to convince Paramount Pictures to finance the English version. In the Spanish language version, to be directed by Roberto Gavaldon, Pedro Armendariz and Maria Elena Marques will star. Since both are proficient in English, shooting of twin idiom picture would present no problem.

'Dawn,' Pakistan-London Entry, for Venice Fest

Karachi, June 23.

"Day Shall Dawn," made jointly by Century Films of Karachi and Films de Lite of London, has been entered in the Venice Film Fest. It had been entered last year also but it was not completed in time. "Dawn" depicts life of boatmen in East Pakistan. It was recently preemed at Dacca (East Pakistan) and well received.

The film's cast is composed of non-pro Pakistan stars. It was directed by a Pakistani, Aaejay Kardar, from a script by Faiz Ahmed Faiz who also did the songs.

Paris First-Runs Down for 1958-59 Season; U.S. Had 38% of Big Films

Paris, June 30.

The 1958-59 fiscal film season wound up this week and figures indicated that the boxoffice for Parisian first-runs, the usual b.o. barometer, was under previous years in total film attendance. But it held its own in the number of big grossers. A sock film still drew big turnouts while Yank pix stayed fairly level with 38% of the films which played to 50,000 to 100.000 patrons and 14% of the pix that had more than 100,000 attendance.

France again ran away with the top hits in having the three pix that brought in over 400,000 patrons in the first-runs. They were "Les Tricheurs" (The Cheats), "Les Grande Familles" (The Big Families) and "Les Amants" (The Lovers).

Of the 18 films that drew 150,000 to 300,000, the U. S. had five pix which finished in this order, "The Vikings" (UA), "Vertigo" (Par), "Cat on Hot Tin Roof" (M-G), the surprise Belgian documentary grosser, "Gods of the Forests" (20th) and "Inn of Sixth Happiness" (20th).

Local pix in the above brackets were "Love Is My Profession," "Archimede Le Clochard" (The Tramp), "Mirror Has Two Faces," "The Gorilla" and "Beast Is Loose," "Les Motards" (Motorcycle Cops), "Les Cousins," "Marie-Octobre," "A Woman Like Satan" (Bardot), "The Law," "Faibles Femmes," "La Vie A Deux" and "Maxime."

Other Yank pix that showed in lesser categories were "Big Country" (UA), "Tempest" (Par), "Me and Colonel" (Col), "Roots of Heaven" (20th), "A Time to Love" (U), "Scared Stiff" (Par), "Bravados" (20th), "The Key" (Col), "Raintree Country" (M-G), "Hanging Tree" (WB), "Sad Sack" (Par), "Defiant Ones" (UA), "The Journey" (M-G), "Naked and Dead" (Rank), "Indiscreet" (WB), "Sheepman" (M-G), "10 North Frederick" (20th) and "Merry Andrew" (M-G).

Big b.o. showings, in only the subtitled versions, of Swedish and Russo offbeaters, could cue Yank attempts of the same order, with dubbing and the use of a precious visa if the pix click in the titled versions.

Set Caracalla Operas

Rome, June 30.

"Lohengrin" has been selected to open the traditional open air opera season in Rome's Baths of Caracalla tomorrow (1).

Full summer slate, just belatedly revealed (there was some doubt to the last about whether or not the alfresco opera season would be held at all, due to crisis in Italo opera circles), calls for 41 performances: four of "Lohengrin," six of "Tosca," 12 of "Aida," eight of "Rigoletto," seven of "Carmen," and four of "Trovatore."

Entrance process remains unchanged from last year, and run from 50c low to a $5 top. Last performance at Caracalla is dated Sept. 6.

Brit. Set New High On TV Set Sales

London, June 30.

Manufacturers' dispatches of television sets in April set a new record in Britain. At an estimated 176,000, they were more than 20,000 higher than for March and over twice the total of April, 1958. Figures are inevitably "false" to the degree that they involve the post-budget ordering factor, meaning that intending purchasers of sets didn't buy in March but waited to see if the April budget would bring a cut in purchase tax. Which it did.

In the first five months of the year, it's calculated, deliveries rose by 75% compared with the 1958 level. The second half of the year is unlikely to show any similar dramatic increase, inasmuch as last fall the abandonment of credit controls caused a violent sales upsurge, but the year as a whole will probably produce sales of over 2,000.000 sets.

Radio receiver dispatches in April, at 119,000, were more than 30,000 higher than for March and 36,000 above those for April, 1958, while at 12,000 the radiograms total was 3,000 up on March and the same as for April last year. Figures were compiled by the British Radio Equipment Manufacturers' Assn.

Out-of-Town Legiter Looks Like Paris Hit

Paris, June 23.

As Paris goes so usually goes the rest of France as far as show biz goes. But a socko success of an out-of-town legit company ensconced at a Paris legit house for three months may be the beginning of a change in all that.

Presenting Shakespeare's "Henry IV," the Theatre of Villeurbanne, from Lyons, got top reviews for its masterful direction, acting and physical aspects. Show looks like a hit at the Theatre Montparnasse, and this may foreshadow other hinterland legit unveilings in Paris. Company gets some governmental and municipal subsidies but has made it mostly on public support of finely done classics and some contemporary offerings.

Franco-German Film To Be Made in Japan

Tokyo, June 23.

A Franco-German production is being readied for Japan shooting in October based on the exploits of Richard Sorge, notorious World War II Russian spy who was based in Japan.

Keiko Kishi, one of the big names in Japanese filmdom, now married to French director Yves Ciampi, has been mentioned to play German-born Sorge's Japanese girl friend, with Ciampi directing. No male lead has yet been named. Shochiku, one of Japan's six majors, would cooperate on the Japan shooting.

RAOUL LEVY PLANS TO TRY LUCK DIRECTING

Paris, June 23.

Raoul Levy, the French producer who parlayed Brigitte Bardot via "And God Created Woman" into the world film big time, now wants to direct a film. Levy says he decided to direct after placing $5,000-000 into film circulation via a group of films of which Columbia is backing three for worldwide distrib. Levy just finished B. B.'s "Babette S'En Va En Guerre" (Babette Goes to War), and is working on "Les Regates De San Francisco," a film sans stars.

Levy's first directorial stint will be a film version of Ugo Pirro's "The Camp Followers," a story of the occupation of Greece by Italy during the last war. A young officer has to bring in a truckload of girls for an officer's bagnio. Levy wants to make a film on the futility of war.

Now French Puppeteers Want Government Help

Paris, June 23.

The heads of 150 French puppet and marionette companies met here for the first time this week, and decided that their venerable show biz arm should get government help like most other branches. They feel that they should have a sort of Comedie-Francaise dedicated to their companies with no strings attached.

This would allow for more experimentation and serve as a place to establish schools to pass on this profession which is in danger of eventually disappearing in spite of the 150 now in operation. Most of them play in carny spots, children's parks, schools and the more offbeat adapt themselves to boites and vauderies.

GI's Buying 'On Economy' to View Pix Not Showing in Military Houses

Frankfurt, June 23.

With the U.S. military in Europe emphasizing language courses of the tongue of the land where the servicemen are stationed, it's had a surprising result—more and more Army and Air Force and Navy servicemen and their families are buying theatre tickets "on the economy," even at prices which are considerably higher than their 25c tickets at the military chain of cinemas. One of the big lures of the local lingo theatres is that the films are not censored so strictly as in the U.S.

For instance, last year's top moneymaker in Germany was "Das Maedchen Rosemarie" (The Girl Rosemarie), story of the notorious Frankfurt playgirl Rosemarie Nitribitt who was mysteriously murdered in her apartment, playground for some of the world's leading industrialists and social figures.

Many servicemen, knowing the pic would never be booked for their GI circuit, bought their ducats on the economy.

Likewise, when Brigitte Bardot appeared in the nude in "And God Created Woman," GIs across Europe thronged to see the body beautiful, figuring that her form translates easily into French or German or English.

Only films bought for the GI circuit are those released by U.S. distributors in America and those which get the seal of approval of the Motion Picture Association's Production Code.

Caterina Valente, No. 1 songstress in Germany, is known to many Yank servicemen through her hit record of "Malaguena" and others. And when she does a musical film in Germany, it's another good draw for the U.S. business, since the Americans know that it is not distributed in the U.S. and hence won't show up in their GI theatres.

GIs had first chance to see the Russian prize-winning film "When the Cranes Appear" in Germany and France, too, because the pic was a huge success in Europe.

Word Gets Around

The word always gets around. French actress Nadine Tallier, who's known as "Miss Striptease of France," was widely quoted as saying she made two versions of her new pic, "I wear bubbles in the film for England, no bubbles in France." One can bet the boys buy their way into the no-bubbles version.

Some of the hep theatre owners in Europe show special English versions of films they feel won't play on the GI screens, as an added bid for the business of a million servicemen and their families stationed in Europe. So most cities, which are U.S. troop centers, and showed the military-banned films "Baby Doll," "Moon is Blue," and "Man with Golden Arm" in their original version for the GIs who hadn't mastered the foreign dubbing.

But for a serviceman who's caught up with the lingo course, it's a likelihood that he'll be a regular visitor at the European cinemas where he'll see the top local language films far before they get release in the U.S.

And for the European cinema owners, the military families represent a big boost to the take.

Re-Division of Film Imports to Japan Slim

Tokyo, June 23.

Indications are slim that Finance Ministry would approve MPEA's request for re-division of 1959 film imports among member companies as has been the case in the past. A ministry spokesman said that under the new structure, companies granted import licenses handle both importing and distributing. Therefore the requested redistribution has doubtful merit even in the form of consigned distribution.

Requested redistribution by major companies is as follows, with the ministry allocations in parentheses: Metro 14 (15); Paramount, 13 (14); WB, 13 (14); Universal, 9 (11); U.A., 9 (7); Columbia, 11 (9) and Allied Artists, 6 (5). No adjustment request was made for 20th-Fox.

Italo 'David' Award To 'Gigi' as Best Foreign Pic; 'Tempest' Honored

Rome, June 23.

"Gigi" (M-G) has walked off with the "David of Donatello" for the best foreign film of the year, with Deborah Kerr copping the golden statuette for the best female performance during the same period (for "Separate Tables").

"David" kudos, which are under the high patronage of Italian President Giovanni Gronchi, also went this year to Dino DeLaurentiis, for "Tempest," chosen as best Italian film, and to Alberto Lattuada, "best director" for the same pic.

Other awards went to Anna Magnani, best Italian actress for "Hell in City" (Riama), "Naked Maja" (Titanus) for industrial and technical achievement; Jean Gabin, best foreign actor for "Les Grandes Familles"; Susan Hayward for her thesping in "I Want To Live" (UA) and Renato Rascel for his characterization of "Policarpo" (Titanus).

Presentations will be made in the near future at Taormina, Sicliy.

Carr Hartley Launches Five-Feature Program

London, June 30.

Production project involving five feature pix in color, including one for which he's paging Ava Gardner, has been launched by Carr Hartley, Kenya game-trapper. Hartley outlined his plans to VARIETY while here last week setting up a distribution deal for "The Reluctant Mermaid," 30-minute job shot off the East African coast.

Setup also involves Tom Mann, partner in Hartley's Kenya farm. Carr Hartley Film Productions, as it's called, aims not only to make the five pix, but also to establish Kenya as a recognized production center. Hartley has had chats with ACTT, the major British studio labor union, with the idea of setting up a Kenya affiliate.

Britain to Send Pix To Moscow Film Fest

London, June 23.

Britain has decided to enter the Moscow Film Festival because, in the words of a spokesman for the British Film Producers Assn. which did the deciding, "it's something the BFPA could not possibly ignore." The association plans to get together with the other native producer group, the Federation of British Film Makers, so that the official entry can be chosen jointly.

Idea is not to invite titles for the fest, skedded for Aug. 3-17, but to take a look at a comprehensive list of all pix registered since Feb. 3, 1958 and pick the one considered best for the unusual circumstances. The 1958 date figures because the Moscow rules stipulate that entries must have been registered not more than 18 months prior to the fest.

Abrifex Corp. of America has been authorized to conduct a photographic and motion picture equipment business in New York, with capital stock of 200 shares, no par value. Parker, Chapin & Plattau were filing attorneys.

Holland's Film Week

Amsterdam, June 23.

As a cozy family party, the Dutch "Filmweek '59" ran from June 19-24, being third time that this bi-annual event has been held. Organized by the Dutch Cinema League, with subsidies up to $17,500 provided by the government, the Arnhem City Board and the Dutch Cinema League.

Running for six days and showing 11 feature pix, the Filmweek '59 was a manifestation of good films and contemporary pix in the international film world are. There were no surprises as all films will be distributed in Holland anyway during next season.

See British Pix Helped In Foreign Market If Modify Artificial Bars

London, June 30

If artificial barriers to international trade in films could be modified, British film exports could be greatly increased. That was the basis of a case advanced by the two British film producing organizations at a session with Sir David Eccles, the president of the Board of Trade.

The main industry spokesmen were Arthur Watkins for the British Film Producers' Assn. and Lord Archibald for the Federation of British Film Makers. It was a sequel to representations that had been made over some time, spotlighting the restrictions imposed not only in Europe, but in other parts of the world via quotas, currency regulations, etc.

After listening to the delegation the BOT proxy said his department would do all it could to overcome the difficulties.

GARCIA ALVAREZ GETS INTERPENINSULAR CO.

Madrid, June 23.

Stock control in Interpeninsular Films passed from Juan Jesus Buhegas to film exhibitor Garcia Alvarez whose investment in the distribution company is expected to end an unsteady financial position threatening the existence of the two-year old banner.

Alvarez has been exhibiting Interpeninsular's "Donde vas Alfonso XII" (Where to, Alfonso XII) in his Real Cinema and brand-new Torre de Madrid since Jan. 30 and the run is expected to break all existing house records for twin showcasing.

Trade sources report that financially-strapped Buhegas floated a heavy peseta loan with Alvarez prior to release against controlling interest in the organization. While Buhegas is still titular head of Interpeninsular, it is understood that Alvarez as majority stockholder will determine distrib policy in the future and has already effected changes in the company's personnel structure.

Highroad to Open HQ Offices in New York

London, June 30.

Following an eightmonth survey of the European scene, which involved virtually every important capital of the Continent, Irving Rubine, veepee of Highroad Productions, who has been based in London, will open worldwide headquarters tomorrow (Wed.) in New York.

Decision for the move was reached following meetings in London last week with Carl Foreman, head of Open Road Films, and Sidney Cohn, president of Highroad Productions. Main purpose is to establish closer liaison with the executive offices of Columbia, which releases Highroad's product.

A 55 page manual has been prepared by Rubine, covering the preproduction and production phases of "The Guns Of Navarone," which will be filmed next year in Greece, with Foreman producing, Alexander Mackendrick directing, and Gregory Peck and Anthony Quinn in two of the six starring parts. Rubine will meet Columbia execs to crystallize plans for the release of "Mouse That Roared." Though Rubine will headquarter in N. Y., his duties will require him to travel constantly between New York, London and Greece.

Paris, June 30.

Production, distribution and exhibition circles still are mulling over the implications of the recently passed new Film Aid Law. What it means is that the government now expects the film industry to be on its own feet and practically self-sustaining by 1967. Most filmites think this is impossible and some form of aid must always continue while others think it can be accomplished.

Film Aid Law replaces the old one (passed in 1948 as a stopgap aid) next January. New Law will provide an aid base also for the industry over a period of eight years when it is hoped direct aid will be replaced by a system of credits to make the film biz akin to any other industry with the same aid from governmental sources.

However, most filmites feel that pix are too changing and unpredictable to be classed with other consumer industries. They feel that most of the French films are still unamortizable in their own marts which is a reason for long-term aid in spite of rising foreign marts.

The government hopes to put the film industry on its own in eight years via a firm, helping hand during this period. However, certain elastic clauses may extend aid if things are not clear for the films at that time and red ink still surpasses the black.

In effect the government will make loans at reasonable 5% interest rates, or guarantees, to help production, small exhibs and for the construction of new film houses. It will still give direct financial help over the perood of production, technical aspects, newsreels and hypoing of French films abroad. It will also give quality awards of hard cash to encourage prestige pix.

The taxes on film admissions and releases are to be progressively lowered from 85% in 1959 to 15% in 1967. This coin will be used mainly to stimulate production and quality, with exhibs completely out. This brought up the main protests from exhibs. Even with the extra taxes on admission, exhibs point out they get no increase on percentages and lose their needed aid handouts. But the lowering governmental take will give extra coin to exhibs to make up for help loss, according to film sources.

Aid sums will be handled by a special department in the Credit National setup and will no longer be handled by the Centre Du Cinema. This looks like the CDC is on the way out. It is felt here the CDC was outmoded anyway. However, the industry is uneasy about the amount of aid. "Quality" handouts is also a point of contention. It is felt that quality handouts may lead to a flock of highbrow, offbeat pix and not necesstrily commercial ones, with producers aiming for the handout rather than for the commercial production.

Helps Yanks in Spain That Disney's Enrolled In M.P. Export Assn.

Madrid, June 23.

News that Walt Disney had jointed the Motion Picture Assn. of America has strengthened the Yank bloc in Spain, where Disney enjoys considerable popularity, but there is little possibility Spanish film authorities will accede to MPEA's quiet quest for a Disney allocation at this time.

Disney affiliation, according to one Yank board member here, came after MPEA in New York had reached a belabored allocation of U.S. licenses in Spain. MPEA rep Frank Gervasi was instructed to initiate huddles with ministry officials for a supplementary Disney quota of three permits.

Seen as voiding Disney chances for the 1959-60 season is government over-extension of Yank licenses already granted. Another reason is that Disney is unrepresented in Spain at a moment when a quantity of established Spanish distribs will receive meager pickings from the Yank quota going to Spanish companies.

Addition of Disney to MPEA rolls in Spain now restores the Eric Johnston organization here to its full nine-company pre-embargo status.

Temporary Permits Still Used in Japan by Yanks

Tokyo, June 23.

U. S. companies continue to operate on provisional licenses here while MPEA's N. Y. headquarters mulls reaction to Finance Ministry's questionnaires to the individual companies that not only ask for full disclosures on business relations between local offices and the non-residents but also for data on export contracts in 22 other countries.

Ministry claims these franchise examinations are to determine the merit of U. S. majors' protest against import policy provision effective this fiscal year. This changes royalty division from 30% and 70% between the resident and non-resident, respectively, to a 40-60 split. In the latter case, MPEA Far Eastern veepee Irving Maas contends, an additional 33⅓% of the major's revenue would become subject to a 52% profits tax in Japan.

Ministry's sought information on distribution for 1957 and 1958 includes b.o. receipts, distribution receipts, breakdown of distrib receipts, non-residents' portions, tax collected at source, expenses for prints, etc., and residents' portion. Also called for is a profit and loss balance sheet of the Japan branch offices.

Dana Exits U.S. Films

P. T. Dana, former eastern sales manager of Universal who recently organized his own indie film distribution company, is bowing out of the operation. The company, known as U. S. Films Inc., has offices in Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Washington.

Dana indicates he's "resigning" as president, but it's unclear as to whether or not the outfit will continue. He's expected to reveal a new affiliation shortly.

Shepperton Studios In 25% Slash on Rates

London, June 23.

In a bid to attract more production to Shepperton Studios during the winter months, Douglas Collins, British Lion's chairman, last week announced details of reduced hiring rates which will apply from Nov. 1 to April 30. The reductions, which range up to 25%, could provide a saving of about $14,000 on stage rents alone for a single picture.

The two largest stages, for which the normal rent is $5,600 per week, will carry a saving of $700. Two other stages, which normally cost $4,200, will be available at $3,080 per week. Collins, who believes that studio management should operate as much as possible like the management of a good Swiss hotel, said the announcement of the winter rates was only the first step in a major campaign to offer competitive prices with modern facilities. Annual capacity of the Shepperton lot is around 18 feature pix.

Paramount Production Meeting, First Under Jack Karp Regime

Paramount brass will be on the Coast this week for what is believed to be the most important series of meetings on product in the recent history of the company. Full week's sessions are to be attended by studio chief Jack Karp and his exec aides, plus, from New York, president Barney Balaban, George Weltner, in charge of global distribution; Paul Raibourn, financial v.p.; Jerry Pickman, ad-pub chief, and Russell Holman, eastern production head.

This is the first such get-together since Karp took over the studio reins from Y. Frank Freeman, who's now operating on a consultative basis. The focal point will be product—who's to provide it, how much will it cost, and what it's likely to contribute to Par's effort to get back to the top in industry standing.

Number of new production deals are pending with independent operators and these undoubtedly will be given primary consideration at this week's huddles. In addition, prospective new tieups, just now in the talk stage, will be taken up.

To be stressed at the meetings is the attitude of residents of the homeoffice. Latter want to make it clear emphatically that Par is willing to spend big money on theatrical production that shows, in its blueprint stage, promise. In other words, there's neither arbitrary limitation on a production schedule, numerically, nor on a cost-wise basis.

Disclosures by Par in recent weeks would seem to indicate that the studio already has expanded into a new and more ambitious production program. Jerry Lewis was signed to a 14-picture deal. Melville Shavelson and Jack Rose are to make between six and 11 features over the next several years. The producer-writer combination of Henry and Phoebe Ephron has been inked to a long-term contract.

Actually, much trade opinion has it that the foregoing were more or less routine for a major studio. For example, the pacts with Lewis and Shevelson & Rose are extensions of previous commitments.

Looked for now are important tieups with prominent Hollywoodites—Capra, Wilder, Wyler, Harold Hecht, George Stevens, et al.—who have never been with Par at all or at one time were associated with the lot but have departed. These are some of the big names, at any rate, which Par claims to be in quest of.

'Source' Speaks Up, Frees Howard of Contempt In Refusal to Divulge

Memphis, June 23.

Echoes of Marie Torre's (N.Y. tv columnist) trial enveloped Memphis' Circuit Court here recently when amusement editor Edwin Howard of the p.m. Press-Scimitar refused to "reveal a confidential source." Circuit Court Judge Greenfield Polk was apparently on the verge of sending him to the hoosegow if he continued to "refuse to reveal his source."

The source waived her right to remain unidentified and Howard walked away a free man—but not before he won the plaudits of his fellow-newsmen and several barristers in the crowded courtroom.

Howard was on the witness stand testifying in a case involving Memphis starlet Stella Stevens (now in Hollywood) and her parents Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Eggerston of this city. The scrivener was saved from jail by Lucius Burch, Eggerston's barrister, after Howard refused several times to identify who told him that Stella slipped into Memphis from Hollywood on May 17 and took her four-year-old son to the film capital in violation of court orders here. Stella and her astranged spouse, Herman Stephens, are in a court hassle over child custody and the court ordered that the tot remain here with Stella's parents pending the final disposition of the case.

When Judge Polk ordered Howard to "answer the question," the columnist said "these journalistic principles go very deep. We do not feel this one can be violated.

A 49c Retrospective

St. Paul, June 30.

What may be the ultimate in theatre bargains finds the local neighborhood Faust for its annual "Academy Award Movie Festival" offering triple features—all of which have been Oscar-honored—for 49c admission.

The "festival" will continue for a month and there'll be two changes of programs a week. It has started off currently with "From Here to Eternity," "Stalag 17" and "Northwest Mounted Police."

Among the ensuing clusters will be, for example, "Love Me or Leave Me," "The Big Country" and "Lili," "With a Song in My Heart," "Anastasia" and "A Streetcar Named Desire" and "The Robe," "The Quiet Man" and "The Man Who Knew Too Much."

"At a time when there are so many repeats on television, we think we'll be aiming for wholesale desertions of video setowners," says Charles Rubenstein, Faust owner.

Theatres Garner Little Coin Via Conventioneers

Albuquerque, June 30.

Over 16,000 delegates to various Albuquerque spring conventions spent $383,525 here in a five-month period, according to a data just revealed by the Chamber of Commerce.

The total number of conventioneers were listed at 16,675.

Figures on the 53 confabs included: January, six conventions, 1,925 delegates; February, eight conclaves, 2,575 delegates; March, seven conventions, 3,500 delegates; April, 16 confabs, 4,050 delegates; and May, 16 conventions, 4,625 delegates.

Breakdown on the spending, dollar-wise: hotels-motels, 32.2c; hotel restaurants, 12.2c; other restaurants, 13c; retail stores, 16.6c; theatres, other entertainment, 3.9c; local transportation, 5.4c, and other expenses, 16.7c.

'Prophets' of a Depression?

Atlanta, June 30.

More than 6,000 prophets and their wives headed homeward Friday (26) as the 69th Supreme Council Convention of the Mystic Order of Veiled Prophets of the Enchanted Realm wound up its sessions.

Although prophets devoted a lot of their time to fun and pleasure they were not seen throwing their money around in Atlanta's night spots, which were expecting a boost to their sagging summer business from entertainment seekers here for parley.

Convention selected Minneapolis, Minn., as their 1961 meeting place. Next year's convention will be held in Boston.

HALLBERG VICE HOIG

Lincoln, June 30.

Herman Hallberg, 39, succeeds Ivan E. (Ike) Hoig as city manager of the Cooper Foundation Theaters here. General manager Kenneth E. Anderson made the appointment. Hallberg, with 15 years experience in theatre business, was 20th-Fox branch manager in Omaha, before accepting the Cooper post.

Previously he was a salesman with Fox in Indianapolis. He's from Detroit and did a four-year Army stint which included a year in a German prison camp.

Hoig, 47, who joined Cooper in 1932 as an usher while attending the U. of Nebraska, and served later as city manager at Pueblo, Colo., and Oklahoma City before returning to Lincoln is becoming director of public relations of Weeki Wachee Springs, an underwater ballet organization near Clearwater, Fla.

Pool To Handle USSR

dub the Soviet pictures. The Americans paid $60,000 for each of the standard-size Russian features and $67,000 for the widescreen films. Soviets paid the identical price for the American attractions.

List of U.S. films purchased by the Russians includes "Seventh Voyage of Sinbad," "Lili," "The Great Caruso," "Rhapsody," "Roman Holiday," "Oklahoma!," "Beneath the Twelve Mile Reef," "The Man of a Thousand Faces" and "The Old Man and the Sea." Not a single one of these pictures even pretends to realistically reflect life, thought or conditions in the United States. The Russians picked from a list submitted to them by the U.S. industry and cleared by the State Department.

Comment in N.Y. last week made it plain that, if there is any extensive picketing of the Soviet films, the companies will run into considerable exhibitor resistance to booking the Russian releases. The State Dept. has assured exhibitors it is backing them up in the showing of the films.

U. S. Needs

though we shrink from the burden, what's bad about our films reflects upon America.

Miami is about as representative of America as Monte Carlo is of the whole of Europe. Visiting dignitaries, filmmakers and newspaper people whom one would hope to attract to such a festival in Miami would inevitably come away with exactly the kind of impression that anti-American propagandists have been dishing out for years.

Washington, on the other hand, comes too close to another area of sensitivity. Happily, we have one of the freest screens in the world with no Government interference of any kind. Any festival has a semi-official character, in any case, but to select the nation's capital as the site for such an event would tend to make it appear that it was being held under the closest Government scrutiny. This might not only embarrass us but our Government as well.

Hollywood would, of course, be the perfect place to hold a festival of this kind. There is great worldwide interest in the movie capital as virtually the birthplace of the cinema. Visitors could meet writers, directors, producers and other members of our creative community whom they might not otherwise have a chance to meet. A true exchange of ideas between picturemakers could take place here.

But any efforts in this direction have been thwarted time and time again by those in our craft who still equate artistic considerations with boxoffice anemia.

Failing a festival in Hollywood, why not support the one we have, in San Francisco? It has the virtue of being close to Hollywood and, at the same time thoroughly cosmopolitan, yet typically American.

Personally I think it's disgraceful that America has not been represented at San Francisco in the past two years. The men responsible for this festival have succeeded despite this and they deserve not only Hollywood's complete support but its accolade as well.

Speaking for Open Roads Films we have written to Irving Levin in San Francisco to tell him that our recently completed Technicolor comedy, "The Mouse That Roared," would be available for his festival this summer.

And, if the miracle occurs and Hollywood drops its antiquated notions, perhaps our next film, "The Guns of Navarone," will be part of a festival there in 1960.

U Owns 10% of Decca Records Which Holds 84% of U Stock

Universal Pictures last month purchased 25,100 shares of Decca Records on the New York Stock Exchange, thus contributing further to an unique situation in big board trading.

U now holds 200,600 shares of Decca, or more than 10% of the total Decca common issue. On the other hand, Decca, which has been buying up the U stock on the open market for some time, now owns 84.1% of the U outstanding. It's like one member of the family buying from another—and keeping the stock in the family.

There's an abundance of Wall Street conjecture about motive. One thought given the most lip service is that the U-Decca common management simply is embarking further on a capitalization shrinkage program—that is, cutting down on dividend payoffs commensurate with the lesser number of public stockholders.

Also heard: So long as Decca and U buy in their own stock there's a lesser chance of any outside individual or group acquiring a threatening vote-control voice.

Dallas, June 30.

Texas leads all other states in installations to handle super-widescreen 70m film. There are seven theatres currently equipped. An additional 10 theatres "have plans" to install the equipment this year.

Present Texas 70m installations are the Tower and Wynnewood in Dallas, Tower and Uptown in Houston, Broadway in San Antonio, Liberty in Beaumont and Tower in Corpus Christi.

Moola in Muscle; 'Hercules' Repeats On Screen 'n' TV

Joe Levine, the Boston distributor who crashed the industry limelight with his Toddian promotion for "Hercules," the dubbed Italo import, has further plans for the ancient strong man. Levine has acquired the rights to "Hercules Against the Gods," a sequel made by the same Italian production team responsible for the original film. In addition, Levine has completed an agreement to produce a third "Hercules" film himself, in Italy. As an adjunct to the theatrical films, he plans to shoot a tv series.

Both the theatrical and tv films will star Steve Reeves, the originator of the Hercules role. Levine has Reeves under a personal contract.

Defy Moribund Carolina Blue Laws

Exhibs Face Arrest, Small Fines — Issue Awaits Next State Legislature

Columbia, S. C., June 30.

An anti-blue law battle is raging in South Carolina. Defiant film house operators are showing on Sundays in spite of the century-old legislation.

Issue began in Spartanburg when ozoner opened, and owner was arrested. He retaliated by signing warrants against other Sunday businesses.

Meanwhile, exhibitors in Lancaster, Rock Hill, Chester, Hartsville, Camden and Kershaw declared they would open. Most lawmen said they would not take action without warrants from citizens. None was forthcoming.

Attorney-General Dan McLeod issued a ruling saying sheriffs could not close up the houses, but could only arrest owners. With fines a minor issue, looks like films will continue on Sabbath until next legislature considers anti-blue law legislation.

Some cities close to service installations are allowed Sunday movies in South Carolina. This brought on the "unfair" charge from others who say they must run to stay in competition.

UP FROM $18 IN JAN., STANLEY HITS $32.25

Stanley Warner, backed by an upbeat market analysis report from the Wall Street firm of Shields & Co., over the past week hit a new high of $32.25 per common share. The issue earlier in the year was selling at only $18 per share — meaning an almost spectacular rise.

As pointed out in the Shields report, S-W is deriving most of its net income from the International Latex subsidiary and this operation has been on a continuing upgrade.

'Carriage,' Swedish Pic Entry at Berlin Fest

Stockholm, June 23.

The official Swedish entry at this year's Berlin Film Festival will be Nirdisk Tonfilm's Korkarlen" (The Phantom Carriage), after world-famous novel by late Swedish Nobel-prize awarded Selma Lagerloef. George Fant, Ulla Jacobssen and Edvin Adolphson have the leading roles in this, the second Swedish filmization of the novel. It was originally filmed as a silent in the '20's, and later as a talking pic in France ("La Charette Fantome").

The film is in black-and-white, and is made in AgaScope, with the Swedish widescreen system.

Parsons Say United Paramount Scoops All The Cream

St. Cloud, Minn., June 30.

Bert and Freeman Parsons, owners and operators of the Eastman theatre here, have filed an antitrust conspiracy suit in federal court against major distributors and the United Paramount circuit, the first such Minnesota action in several years.

In this city of 25,000 population, there are, in addition to the Eastman, two other (United Paramount) downtown houses as well as an independent drive-in theatre.

The Parsons, asking $150,000 treble damages, or a total of $450,000, allege that a conspiracy exists between the United Paramount circuit and the major distributors to discriminate against their Eastman and in favor of the two U.P. houses in the playdating of important pictures, thus causing financial damage to the Eastman.

The Eastman was acquired by the Eastmans from U.P. when that chain relinquished it to comply with consent decree terms. At one time the distributors offered their pictures here on a competitive bidding basis, but this was dropped some time ago.

Tony Tedesco, film salesman, has exited his UA post in Memphis for the investment biz. Jim Martin has moved into Tedesco's slot with Bill Stevens added to the local sales force.

Digging One Up

A beautiful girl, an Egyptologist and a mummy represent Universal's parlay in the promotion of "The Mummy," a new horror entry by Hammer Productions of England. The trio were unveiled at a N. Y. luncheon before their departure on a 15-city tour.

According to U publicity manager Philip Gerard, the personalities and the prop—starlet Norma Marla, techical adviser Andrew Low and the mummy, the replica used in the picture, will be exposed to national and local press representatives and will be featured in tv and radio apperances as well as ticket-selling stunts in front of theatres.

The pic preems at the Paramount Theatre in Atlanta tomorrow (2) as part of a Southern territorial saturation kickoff.

Universal, which has been successful previously in the handling of horror films, is giving "The Mummy" a top priority in exploitation endeavors and is backing the picture with a hefty pub-ad campaign, equal to the expenditures it earmarks for blockbuster entries, according to Gerard.

York City. The following year they came to the 44th Street Roof for the Shuberts in "Over the Top." Fred dressed with Joe Laurie Jr. and Ted Lorraine.

The great days of the team began: at the Winter Garden, for "The Passing Show of 1918"; "Apple Blossoms" (1919, for Charles Dillingham at the Globe); "The Love Letter" (1921, same producer, same theatre); "For Goodness Sake" (1922, the Lyric, for Alex A. Aarons); Dillingham and the Globe again, later in 1922: "The Bunch and Judy."

In 1923, the Astaires made their London debut in "Stop Flirting" (retitled from "For Goodness Sake"). Back at the Liberty, New York, 1924, for "Lady, Be Good!", which the team took to London in 1926. In 1927-28, "Funny Face," at the Alvin, New York, and in London, 1931 brought the Astaires under Ziegfeld's banner for "Smiles" (starring Marilyn Miller), and "The Bandwagon." At the close of London engagement of this show, Adele retired to marry Lord Charles Cavendish. In 1932-33, Fred began his solo career with "The Gay Divorce" on Broadway and in London, then entered films.

Thirtyone pictures followed, including the Astaire-Ginger Rogers classics. There were other partners, of course; and radio, USO tours during World War II, the establishment of Fred's dance schools, and his television work (leading to Astaire's rejection of last year's "Emmy" award for "An Evening With Fred Astaire," because the star considered himself a dancer, not an actor).

Probably no dancer has been seen by more people than Astaire. How he achieves his effects, except through hard work, he declines to state. He has flaunted "rules" of the dance, opposed restrictions, and has invented his own "style." He claims to be "bad-tempered, impatient, and hard-to-please," but critics and audiences have found none of these traits in the effortless appeal of his performing.

Astaire says "thanks" to many people in his bubbling book, including Noel Coward, who suggested the title. Bright anecdotes, wry wit, and the good will of an artist with no axe to grind are in these pages. "Steps in Time" would seem to indicate that the late John Drew at last has a worthy successor to the title: "First Gentleman of the American Stage."

Boston Critics Junket To 'Anatomy' Detroit Preem

Boston, June 30.

Columbia is flying Boston contingent of film critics and columnists to Detroit tomorrow Wednesday (1) for world preem of "Anatomy of a Murder," which has Hub attorney Joseph Welch of McCarthy vs. Army tv fame, playing a judge, and Lee Remick of nearby Quincy in the cast.

Flying out are Marjory Adams, Globe; Lyon Phelps, Herald; Peggy Doyle, American; Mary X. Sullivan, Sunday Advertiser; Alta Maloney, Traveler; Alan Frazer, American. Party returns Thursday (2). "Anatomy" opens at Ben Sack's Gary deluxer on July 9.

MINNEAPOLIS MODIFIES NABE BIDDING PRACTICE

Minneapolis, June 30.

Several neighborhood theatres, including the St. Louis Park and the Terrace, in compliance with the former's demand, were permitted by United Artists here for the first time to bid competitively with downtown theatres for an important picture's firstrun.

However, the uptown houses, ordinarily in the earliest subsequent-run slot, 28 days, lost out, the picture in question, "Hole in the Head," having been awarded to Ted Mann's downtown Academy.

In the competitive bidding for another important release, Columbia's "Anatomy of Murder," the Twin Cities' RKO Orpheums were successful. No uptown houses were invited to bid on this one.

The St. Louis Park, a Harold Field theatre, has asked the first-runs competitive bidding privilege of all companies, but UA was the first to extend the invitation. With the other distributors the matter is under home office consideration.

The Terrace and other leading de luxe houses have indicated they, too, will want the privilege if it's granted to the St. Louis Park.

Jack Hiller's 3 Kids Survive Fatal Auto Crash

Willmar, Minn., June 30.

Jack Hiller, 36, Marshall, Minn., exhibitor for many years and prominent as a Minnesota exhibitor leader, and his wife, 35, were killed and their three children, Wendy, 9, Susan 7, and Bradley 18 months, injured in a crash on the highway near here.

The family had spent the weekend in a cabin at Green Lake, south of here, and left at 3:30 p.m. for Brainend, Minn., where they planned to spend part of their vacation. The car skidded on wet blacktop and struck a tree.

Hiller owned both a four-wall and drive-in theatre in Marshall.

Levin cited the 1945 United Nations charter conference in Frisco as "ample evidence" that Frisco "is traditionally ideal for world events," pointed out jets now link East and West Coasts in 5½ hours and noted his Nov. 11-24 festival has "full recognition" of the IFFPA "as well as Eric Johnston's endorsement."

He also twitted Einfeld this way: "There was certainly no Hollywood entry last year. As you know, Mr. Einfeld, your own company entered a film ('Rally 'Round the Flag') which we were prepared to display, but which was also suddenly withheld after you had made formal application. It would have been a pleasure to have shown it and to have had a U. S. entry."

"This year we have every expectancy of Hollywood participation. Since the center of motion picture production in the U. S. is by no means as distant from San Francisco as Washington or Florida's Miami, it will pose no great difficulty of distance."

Getting on 'Scent of Mystery'

By HANK WERBA

Madrid, June 30.

A visit to the "Scent of Mystery" location unit, currently headquartered in Malaga, confirms the impression there is more to this initial Mike Todd Jr. venture in Smell-O-Vision than meets the nose.

Apart from the obvious smell-sell public curiosity will engender at least the first time around, and independent of an uncompromising time-money effort to fashion "Scent" as film entertainment in its own right, are the live ammo trial maneuvers a revamped Todd organization is undergoing in Andalucia to fulfill en grand a late Mike Todd film-making concept giving the producer mobile camera-to-finished print self-sufficiency anywhere in the world.

Todd self-containment marks a radical break with dependence on Hollywood or London film facilities and goes a big step beyond familiar U. S. film production and post-production experiences in Paris, Rome, Madrid, Munich and Tokyo.

Mobile self-sufficiency, "Scent" technical supervisor Ned Mann explained, takes the form of an equipment package for large-screen filming, stereo recording and complete lab processing available wherever Mike Todd Jr. decides to headquarter for film-making purposes.

Mann, who made his acquaintance with 65-mm cameras back in 1929 on a Joe Schenk production "The Bat Whispers," said the Todd equipment packet now includes three 65-mm cameras built to specification by Mitchell with specially-designed lenses guaranteed against distortion or barrelling.

Pride and joy of his four-year tenure with the Todd organization is the $150,000 printer Mann designed, Acme Printer Co. took two years to fabricate and which is now installed in Barcelona's Aragones lab.

A pioneer film lab installation expert in Hollywood (before sound), London and Rome, Mann is convinced the Todd printer is without rival in the trade today as a many-sided processing arm englobing optical and travelling or static matte printing, and offering print-down to other photographic systems or conversion from other systems to 65-mm and 70-mm prints. Mechanical feature is provided by a set of inter-lock motors capable of driving a special distributor and slave motors to any desired number of frames per second to as many as four to five separate printer heads.

"Our Todd printer," Mann said, "gives off four to six times as much light as an average printer with an absolutely even feel for sharp definition and an absolutely even reading from one side of the frame to the other and from top to bottom."

Barcelona set-up is the first of its kind outside the U. S. and London, Mann added, and at least par with Technicolor in Hollywood since Techni 65-mm and 70-mm prints are no longer available in London. Three-month operation to date has been probed and endorsed by Eastman Kodak specialists.

Secondary package assets include a lightweight camera crane (Malaga-built at half the cost of renting a similar apparatus from London) and a fully-equipped wide-screen projection room.

There's no evidence of conversation shyness among Todd Jr. location echelonners. But what strikes a visiting ear, is extent of animated talk centering on the mobile equipment package—considered here to be the last word in film-making gear and a new milestone in independent film production.

Say Silver Spurs Fit Fred MacMurray's Boots

Reno, June 30.

Fred MacMurray has been named to receive the 10th annual award of the Reno Chamber of Commerce's "Silver Spurs" for his "consistent portrayal of the spirit of the pioneer."

Frank Bender, chamber prez, said MacMurray had accepted an invitation to receive the award at the Reno Rodeo on July 4. Also expected to attend are his wife (June Haver) and two children. The four will witness the rodeo from the box of Gov. Grant Sawyer.

MacMurray is currently at work on "Oregon Trail" for 20th-Fox. Past award winners include Alan Ladd, Spencer Tracy, John Wayne, Gregory Peck, Gary Cooper, and Jimmy Stewart and Glenn Ford two times each.

The awards are granted only for performances in films of the west.

deals may be arranged. His deal with Brinter, with whom his Allied Enterprises Inc., a Liberian corporation, made "Love," calls for worldwide representation. He can make deals with producers in other parts of the world, too, besides the U.S., to entice qualified filmmakers going to Brazil.

Fowley who will return to acting temporarily in his Doc Holliday role in "Wyatt Earp" teleseries before returning to Sao Paulo in Fall, pointed out that his findings were culled only after extensive study of imports and distribution in Brazil.

Many of the theatres, there, he declared, are "cathedrals" in elegance, and the people so gregarious that they insist upon going out in the evening for their entertainment, thus establishing ready-made audiences. Long lines by the hour are a common sight outside theatres, which stay open most of the night. Brazil is a land of night people, according to the actor.

Philadelphia, June 30.

Pennsylvania Senate has voted, 47-3, in favor of restoring state film censorship, absent for several years since it was nixed by the U.S. Supreme Court.

The bill now goes before the House of Representatives.

By NORMAN WEISER

Harrisburg, June 30.

One of the Keystone State's political candied yams appears headed for another turn around the track as the State Senate, after a hotly disputed session, passed a bill to restore film censorship which was ruled unconstitutional in 1956 in a Supreme Court action.

The measure, which finally passed the Senate by a 47-3 vote and was immediately shuttled to the House where a similar OK was expected, creates a state Board of Motion Picture Control consisting of three members and an appropriation of $75,000.

Strictly political in nature, the appointments to the Board will come from the ranks of the Democrats, should the measure go the whole route, and insiders on Capitol Hill here indicated the jockeying for position for the appointments is already underway.

Under the measure, as it now stands, all sellers, lessors and exhibitors would be required to register and pay registration fees. They would also have to notify the Board 48 hours before showing of any new film. The Board would have the right to declare a film "unsuitable for children" if it felt the film was obscene or might incite a riot.

Excluded from the Board's authority would be motion pictures for educational, charitable, fraternal or religious purposes.

Opposition to the measure was led by Senator Harry E. Seyler, York, who stated, before the vote, that "since the dropping of the censorship bill, in this state and every other state, figures indicate we have not suffered any great loss of morality or any great increase of crime."

Another point raised by Seyler was whether the act would apply to motion pictures shown on television. In the event it didn't, he said, "we should seriously consider whether we want to take sides with one industry and help drive another out of business."

One point which has been brought out by Democratic leaders here is that one of the three members, at least, who will be named to the board, should it pass the House, will be an expert in motion pictures to assure fair and competent coverage to all new films proposed for showing in the State.

APPEAL ON CENSOR FEES

Screen Guild, B.O. Pix Seek Refunds In Pa.

Harrisburg, June 30.

Two Philadelphia motion picture firms, Screen Guild Productions and Box Office Pictures, have filed appeals in the State Supreme Court here from rulings in Commonwealth Court which denied them refunds in the amount of $11,506.25.

The amount represents the firms' proportionate share to maintain the former State Board of Motion Picture Censors which was ruled unconstitutional in 1956 by the Supreme Court.

Screen Guild is asking $2.942.25 covering 1948 to 1951, and Box Office seeks $8.564 for the period between 1947 and 1951.

Italy Okays Coin Outgo As of Jan. 1, 1959 Under Ratified Agreement

The Italian Government, having ratified the new film agreement with the Motion Picture Export Assn., has acceeded to the clause making upped remittances retroactive to Jan. 1, 1959. Dollar allocation of $2.700,000 is involved.

Under the new deal, basic annual remittance from Italy will be $7.000,000. Under the current agreement, which doesn't go into effect until October, it is $3,000,000. The Italians originally had agreed to make the larger remittance retroactive, but then hedged on that clause.

Now the Finance Ministry has okayed the added coin, figuring it on the basis of the difference between the $3,000,000 and the $7,000,000 and pro-rating it over the intervening months.

collared first prize here in this class for several years running.

Taking advantage of the presence of more than 500 accredited journalists, as well as a big contingent of international industry personalities, Sam Goldwyn organization has launched a combined operation with Columbia Pictures and Philips Records for the promotion of "Porgy and Bess." A conference room at the Kempinski Hotel has been equipped with a stereo player, and the Philips album, taken from the sound track, is being presented to visitors at each of the three daily recitals, together with a handsome promotion brochure on the filmusical.

In addition, Euan Lloyd, Goldwyn's personal advance praiser for Europe, was interviewed by the American Forces Network with P. Beishuizen, Philips international public relations manager; and newsreel clips of last week's preem in New York were featured yesterday (Mon.) in a special film fest program on Berlin tv. Similar efforts are planned for the San Sabastian and Venice fests.

Some sales toppers are inclined to feel that a false impression of the product supply is given by Hollywood production activity in relation to overall product availability. An increasing number of pictures being released by American companies is being produced by independents outside of Hollywood, either in this country or abroad. In many instances, these pictures do not appear in the Hollywood production charts, and nothing is known about many of them until the indie packager-producer sells the completed picture to a distributor. Joe Levine's "Hercules," being released by Warners, Columbia's "The H-Man" and Metro's "The Mysterians," the latter two from Japanese sources, are examples of the type of films that never appear in Hollywood production charts.

Moreover, quite a number of features made in England for the British quota are taken over for release in the U.S., and many of these never appear in Hollywood production schedules. Similarly, a number of co-productions made overseas, as well as other films with American or international stars that are produced on foreign lots with at least one eye on their sale to an American distributor, may not be listed.

A total of these scattered sources indicates that the major companies can wind up a season with a much bigger release list than is shown by their own production activities.

In the first half of 1959, new pictures released amounted to 136, divided among companies as follows:

United Artists	21
Columbia	20
20th-Fox	18
Metro	14
Warners	10
Universal	10
Paramount	9
Allied Artists	9

Various indies (American International, Buena Vista, Continental, Rank, Astor, NTA, etc.), 19. (Neither reissues nor foreign-language films are included in these totals.)

Since most distributors release approximately as many films in the second half of the calendar year as in the first, the outlook is for about 270 in 1959. While this would be slightly under the approximately 280 indicated for the 1958-59 theatrical season ending Aug. 31 (238 features already have been released in the first 10 months ending June 30), distributors say there is ample time to boost the 1959 calendar year total by a substantial figure if a market demand for more pictures are demonstrated. At least 85 pictures are at present in backlogs of product either completed or before the cameras, and a lot more can be shot in the next six months, it's pointed out.

workshop. "Don't wish too much for instant success."

Strasberg cited his own daughter, Susan, 21, as "experiencing some of the problems of early success after having gotten her name in lights on Broadway in 'The Diary of Anne Frank' at the age of 17."

Strasberg told reporters here that he believes Marilyn Monroe, whom he coached, possesses talent on a par with that of Marlon Brando and that he hopes she gets the opportunity to prove it on the stage. He says he doesn't direct Broadway plays, although he keeps getting opportunities to do so, because "Broadway currently isn't offering material that's challenging enough."

Relative to his "Method," he explained it doesn't mean quite what it's cracked up to be.

"The thing about the 'Method' is that it's not a method," he told reporters. "It's a procedure, a technique to use when an actor's in trouble. A method—that's what they show you in the old books where they have pictures of the correct way to hold the eyebrows to register anger."

READY BOSTON FOR 'PORGY'

Goldwyns Attend Luncheon of Preem-Sponsoring League

Boston, June 30.

Sam Goldwyn and wife, in yesterday, Monday (29), for press rounds on "Porgy and Bess," set for New England preem at the Astor Aug. 6, were guests at a civic luncheon by New England Baptist Hospital League at the Ritz Carlton hotel at which a citation was presented to the vet showman for his production.

League, which has taken over opening night of "Porgy and Bess," noted that Hub was scene of the legit world preem of "Porgy and Bess" at the Colonial Theatre in 1935.

Todd-AO is now being installed in the Astor Theatre, closed for the work, in preparation for the hard ticket of "Porgy and Bess." Only two other Todd-AO installations are available in New England, one in Hartford, and the other in Providence. There are no plans to show the film in any form other than Todd-AO, per Paul G. Anglin, press rep of film.

Hub engagement, third of four preems skedded this summer with the world preem at the Warner Theatre, New York, June 24, and west coast preem July 15, Cathay Circle Theatre, L.A., will be shown on reserved seat basis with 10 shows weekly.

Albany, June 30.

Reports that 20th Century-Fox was negotiating with the Mulderry interests for a five-year renewal of the lease on the exchange at 1052 Broadway proved a bracer to Film Row workers depressed by the closings and cutbacks of the past three years.

Clarence A. Hill, director of exchange operations for Fox, and Attorney Francis P. Mulderry, initiated the lease-renewal talks at a luncheon here.

Reports were that 20th Century-Fox planned to do some painting at its own expense. The company has previously refurbished the screening room. The Fox branch is air-conditioned and modernized.

time is ripe, i.e. when there's a general move in that direction and prices have risen. This isn't expected to happen until commercial tv service spreads.

Screen Gems

Two other major companies with a definite present stake in foreign tv is Columbia via its Screen Gems setup and United Artist Associates, controlled by UA.

It's conceivable that the new 20th subsid will acquire foreign tv stations, or interests in them, where it can pick them up at a reasonable price. According to Silverbach, 20th TV International Corp. will be engaged in "all aspects" of tv and is based on the assumption that the tv mart overseas will hugely expand over the coming years. Thus 20th will have a foot in the door.

There appears to be no concern at 20th over foreign exhibitor reaction to its move. The new outfit, in addition to U. S. programs, also will take on foreign-produced tv series for distribution.

Silverbach has been with 20th for 14 years. Prior to becoming foreign sales supervisor in 1957 he was assistant to 20th-International v.p. Emanuel Silverstone. Raphel, who returned to his Paris headquarters yesterday (Tues.) following huddles with Skouras and Silverbach, has been active in 20th's European operation for ten years, heading up branches in Italy and Holland and later transferring to the Paris sales supervisory headquarters, which has now been abolished.

the prairie plain, or the soft greens of South Dakota forests, is lucid and imaginatively composed. It is the first Metro release in VistaVision, a process Hitchcock prefers. Robert Boyle's production design, abetted by art direction by William A. Horning and Merrill Pye, is fine in every detail. Set decoration, by Henry Grace and Frank McKelvey, is equally an asset.

Bernard Herrmann's score is a tingling one, particularly in the Mount Rushmore sequences, but light where mood requires. Editing by George Tomasini is slick and enhances the process work. Sound by Franklin Milton, who is especially adept at exterior realism, is first-rate. Herbert Coleman was associate producer. Powe.

McLendon Radio Pictures release of Hollywood Pictures Corp. production. Stars James Best, Ingrid Goude; features Baruch Lumet, Ken Curtis, Gordon McLendon. Executive producer, Gordon McLendon. Produced by Ken Curtis. Directed by Ray Kellogg. Story and screenplay by Jay Simms; camera, Wilfred Cline; production manager, Ben Chapman; music, Harry Bluestone, Emil Cadkin; editor, Aaron Steel. Premiered at Majestic Theatre, Dallas, June 25, '59. Running time, 69 MINS.

Thorne Sherman	James Best
Ann Craigis	Ingrid Goude
Dr. Craigis	Baruch Lumet
Jerry Lacer	Ken Curtis
Radford Baines	Gordon McLendon
Mario	Alfredo DeSoto
Rook	J. H. (Judge) Dupree

This is first of two feature-length productions shot in Texas during 1959 by McLendon Radio Pictures Corp. (teamed with "The Giant Gila Monster."

Gordon McLendon, young head of a six-station Texas radio group, also prexy of Tri-State Theatres, has been acting as he preaches in connection with his radio "network" hard-sell of regular Hollywood releases. Young McLendon believes "If we can sell pictures, we can make pictures." (VARIETY, June 10, 1959.) This quickie originally budgeted at $300.000 was wrapped up in a fortnight's shooting at Lake Dallas studios at the local United Nations Studios for $123,000.

Light story, on the science-fiction side, concerns a river boat captain bringing supplies to a scientist's isolated island, where tiny Blarina shrews—through injections—have grown to wolf-size and escaped the laboratory. For survival they must eat three times their weight daily and prey on the human beings.

Able acting bits are contributed by James Best, as the river boat captain, and blonde Ingrid Goude. Supporting roles are capably handled by Ken Curtis, Baruch Lumet, Gordon McLendon (sic) and Judge Dupree.

As a "horror" film it's quite good under the economics involved and as a dual bill the b.o. prospects are okay. Good houses greeted "Shrews" and "Gila Monster" combo the first two days here.

Assets include excellent direction by Ray Kellogg, fine lighting and photography in the numerous outdoor shots. Special effects by Kellogg, especially in closeups of the "huge" shrews, are firstrate.

standard under which a film could be banned.

"Of course, it'd make their job much more difficult," Flick observed.

The censor, up to Monday, could ban films on the basis of obscenity and immorality. What the Court apparently struck out, in its decision on "Lady Chatterley's Lover," was the part of the statute which permits banning on the grounds that a scene, or a theme, advocates an immoral act. This, the judges held, violates the Constitutionally-guaranteed freedom to advocate an idea.

Ephraim London, attorney for Kingsley-International, which distributes "Chatterley's Lover," also felt that the ruling might tend to speed submission of a classification law. There is little doubt in the minds of observers that the single remaining censorship base in N. Y.—obscenity—will be challenged in the near future. The courts generally have frowned on the lack of definition that accompanies statutes of this sort.

Big-Deed Swede Does A Truman In Fisticuffs, But Gate Late 'n' Light

By HY HOLLINGER

Although business was spotty for the closed-circuit telecast Friday (26) of the Ingemar Johansson-Floyd Patterson heavyweight championship fight, the gross, according to TelePrompter prexy Irving B. Kahn, hit $1,032,000 for the 170 locations in 135 cities. Kahn's figure is based on projecting 95% of the returns. On this calculation, he came up with 244,000 seats at an average price of $4.23. Net receipts, according to the TelePrompter chieftain, would be about $939,400 after Federal, state and local taxes are deducted.

A VARIETY check indicated that business in various sections of the country varied from 20% to 100% of capacity. Among the low spots were Buffalo, Rochester, Cleveland, Akron. Situations in the 90% to 100% bracket included New Haven, Asbury Park, Philadelphia, San Antonio, Seattle, Medford, Ore., Portland, Ore., Houston, Dallas, Spokane, Minneapolis, Miami, Washington and Pittsburgh.

Arenas, represented mostly in the smaller communities, in many instances had higher seating capacities than theatres in the larger cities. A sampling of arena and auditorium returns showed that Orlando, Fla., sold 700 seats out of a 3,000 capacity; Ft. Wayne, Ind., 1,200 out of 10,000; Evansville, Ind., 700 out of 10,000; Richmond, Va., 1,200 out of 9,000; Worcester, Mass., 1,100 out of 3,500.

The variation in returns from different sections of the country may perhaps indicate that Kahn's projection may be a little optimistic and that the final gross may fall slightly below the $1,000,000 mark. Overall, however, TelePrompter and the two fighters stand to make a substantial profit on the supplementary rights, particularly from the motion pictures. The films, being released by United Artists, are considered the hottest fight films available in more than a decade. This, of course, is based on Johansson's sensational third round knockout of champion Patterson. Kahn estimates that domestic film rentals can reach $1,000,000, but William J. Heineman, UA sales v.p., is much more conservative, estimating a minimum of $500,000 and possibly $600,000. "It'll take a lot of doing to hit $1,000,000," Heineman declared. Kahn has already sold the Scandinavian film rights, but is still negotiating for a comprehensive foreign deal. UA is strongly in the running for these distribution rights. The radio rights, including the U. S. and Canadian broadcast, the Scandinavian and BBC broadcast, and a hot kine to BBC television amounted to $150,000, according to Kahn. Of the total of the supplementary rights, Patterson receives 43%, Johansson, 20%, with the remainder going to TelePrompter.

Kahn expressed disappointment at the closed-tv returns because, he noted, he had expected that a new record would be set, topping the $1,400,000 gross from the second Ray Robinson-Carmen Basilio fight. He attributed the disappointment to the cancellation because of rain on Thursday and to the fact that it rained almost up to fight time on the night of the event. On Thursday morning, Kahn said, about 45% of the seats had been sold, but the usual pattern was for the big business to come into the boxoffice during the last four hours. The fact that a radio network continued to issue regular bulletins announcing that the fight might be postponed again was said to have hurt the boxoffice in many communities. However, ABC, which broadcast the fight, continued to issue optimistic bulletins. Theatremen queried by VARIETY blamed the soft spots on the litigation and controversy that surrounded the fight.

Johansson's victory had the effect of setting back, at least for a while, Kahn's dream of playing electronic bankroller for boxing. Associated closely with Cus D'Amato, Patterson's manager, Kahn had sub-leased the closed-tv rights to various promoters and fight managers in different sections of the country to cement relations. The TelePrompter chieftain envisions a setup whereby his company would sign up various fighters and, similar to motion picture producers, would retain a promoter "to produce" the actual fight, with TelePrompter controlling the tv, radio and motion picture rights.

Bill Rosensohn, the former TelePrompter v.p. who promoted the fight, was shutout from the supplementary rights, resulting in his losing $40,000 from the promotion. According to Rosensohn, all the supplementary rights "are open" for the rematch, expected to take place in September. Kahn was optimistic that his company would have an opportunity to play a role in the next bout and denied that any animosity existed between him and Rosensohn.

Technically, the closed-tv aspect was a substantial success in that not a single breakdown was reported. Initial fuzziness in some situations was cleared up early, according to reports. TelePrompter employed 1,200 technicians for the various electronic activities. Four television cameras were used and nine motion picture cameras. An innovation for the telecast was the employment of video tape for an immediate replay of the knockdowns, a gimmick that won widespread audience acclaim.

Auditoriums Ideal?

Louisville, June 30.

Local showing of the Patterson-Johansson championship fight held Friday (26), drew some 3,900 patrons. Capacity of the Jefferson County Armory, with dual screens, is 6,500. Show gross is estimated at $10,000 or near. Thursday (25) nights cancellation, resulted in numerous requests for refunds, several from clubs and groups who had orders for as many as 300 seats, in some cases refund requests were about 45 in number.

Customers were slow in coming in, according to Bud Bruner, local promoter. At 9 o'clock there were only about 1,000 people, many waiting until the last minute, expecting another cancellation. In fact, rumor was going the rounds that the fight had also been cancelled on Friday, which didn't help the wicket. Fact that colored customers were admitted to the Armory, plus a pre-championship fight exhibition by Rudell Stitch, local upcoming fighter, resulted in only about one-third of the house accupied by colored patrons. Stitch will be on the main event from the Fair Grounds Thursday (2), and nationally televised.

With the Stich prelim exhibition, and re-run of the third round of the championship match, customers generally felt that they got their money's worth. Scale was $4 for main floor, and $2.50 for terrace seats. Promoter Bruner said he believed this was lower than other cities.

Opinion expressed by local fight promoters is that arenas are the rightful locale for closed-circuit fight showings. They co-operate with local fight promotions, have the capacity, and customers feel free to yell their heads off in arena surroundings, whereas in a theatre the very atmosphere suggests a greater degree of decorum.

New Haven: Biggest So Far

New Haven, June 30.

Business on the closed circuit Patterson-Johansson title go was SRO at Loew-Poli here. With a 3,000-seat capacity and a 70% advance, last seats went quickly when it became apparent the postponed bout would definitely go on.

Pulling an approximate $9,700 at the till, session was the biggest grosser to date since house installed the closed tv equipment some time ago. According to house manager Sid Kleper, the one-day standoff seemed to help the b.o.

Seattle—A Good Fight Town

Seattle, June 30.

Seattle showing was presented by Frank Hixon (Hixon-Wilson) and promoter Jack Hurley who also handled Spokane, Tacoma and Portland arena-casts. Advance sale in Seattle was $16,000 up to time of the postponement from Thursday to Friday.

Hurley, noted as longtime rabid foe of televising of fights, figures "if you can't beat 'em, join 'em" and get your percentage anyhow, went all-out on the four-city promotion. He formerly managed Harry "Kid" Matthews, light heavy who aspired to heavyweight contention with success until his Marciano fight, and Billy Petrolle, lightweight, known as the "Fargo Express."

There is added local interest here as the Patterson-Rademacher fight was held here and Hurley was promoter. This rates a good fight town.

Fight fans here have seen two theatre tv shows, both at Orpheum, 2,700 seating capacity (Marciano-Wolcott, and Basilio-Robinson), and one arena show prior to this one (Robinson-Basilio), so are in good position to opinionate on relative merits of theatre vs arena. Capacity greeted all of them; bigger seating of arenas the promotional factor, of course, swaying management.

Atlanta, June 30.

A screaming 2,040 fans rose as one man in the third round of the heavyweight title fight as Ingemar Johansson massacred champion Floyd Patterson on the closed circuit TelePrompter screen at Loew's Grand Theatre Friday (26) night. The capacity crowd, sprinkled with a goodly group of fight fans from the distaff side, paid $8,500 to see the Swede from Goteborg smash down the American Negro champion of the world in a shockingly dramatic fistic encounter. Loew's got $5.50 for loge seats and $4 general admission.

Boston, June 30.

Postponement hurt the b.o. and cut the advance on the Ingemar Johansson - Floyd Patterson go closed-circuit tv at Loew's 3,600-seat State and 2,900-seat Orpheum film theatres Friday (26). There were quite a few refunds made at both houses where admish was $4. The postponement, it was felt, robbed the two theatres of SRO, capacity auds.

State clocked in about 2,500 fight fans and the Orpheum, some 2,200, for an estimated gross of around $18,800 at both houses. Reception was just about perfect.

Despite the quick ending of the fight at the $4 price, crowds at both houses were in jovial spirits and were loud in praising "a good show—well worth the money."

Around 5,000 in Cincy

Cincinnati, June 30.

Cincy fight fans occupied nearly half of the RKO Albee's 3,100 seats for tv viewing of the Patterson-Johansson go Friday (26) at $4-$4.60 scale. Gross was approximately $5,000.

Turnout was about average for recent title bouts piped into the theatre, where record was set in the Marciano bout with Cincy's Ezzard Charles.

1,700 of 2,877 in Omaha

Omaha, June 30.

A brisk window sale hiked the gross of the closed-circuit tv Johansson-Patterson fight to $4,975 gross at the Orpheum Theatre here Friday (26).

All reserved seats at $4.50 were gone before fight day, with latecomers settling for the $3 general admish. A total of 1,700 occupied the house's 2,877 seats. Officials declared picture transmission was the best ever here.

Albany, June 30.

An estimated 1,500 paid $3.50 per head, in Fabian's 3,500-seat Palace, to view Friday (26) the stunning third-round technical knockout of heavyweight champion Floyd Patterson by Ingemar Johansson of Sweden.

A heavy thunderstorm earlier in the night (breaking at 8:30) and radio reports of rain delaying the program's start in New York, were believed to have kept some fans from witnessing TelePrompTer's closed-circuit.

The crowd came in the latest of any fightcast on the long series presented here. Total admissions, about 500 more than for the Patterson-Harris bout, produced a profit, though not big, for Fabian. Advertised within a 40-mile radius, the telecast attracted mail orders from substantially that distance.

Nearest outlet points were Stanley Theatre in Utica—90 miles west—and Municipal Auditorium in Kingston—70 miles down the Hudson.

Neither picture nor sound, in the lengthy introductions period, was too sharp, but both were good, once the fight began. The crowd squawked once: when the slide "TelePrompTer Presents—Round One" temporarily blurred the images of the battlers. Chris Schenkel's sparing commentary was lost, in spots, by the hub-bub of audience voices between rounds.

Johansson's right-hand clobbering of Patterson in the fatal third frame caused the payees to howl. No sympathy for Patterson seemed to be evident. The customers rushed from the theatre after referee Ruby Goldstein stopped the fight, well satisfied with the quick finish.

Big In Segregated N. O.

New Orleans, June 30.

Some 9,000 jammed two theatres and a recreation center here and paid prices ranging from $3.50 to $6 to see Ingemar Johansson win the heavyweight title from Floyd Patterson at Yankee Stadium Friday night.

Both the Saenger and Loew's State, with 7,000 seats between them, were nearly filled to capacity, while some 2,000 persons packed the Rosenwald Center for Negroes.

Fans at the theatres who stayed after the dramatic third round saw the knockout a second time when the decisive round was rerun on video tape.

L.A. Does Only So-So

Los Angeles, June 30.

Seven film theatres locally ran up only a fair $62,000 for closed-circuit telecast of Patterson-Johansson champ fight Friday (26), with four auditoriums in area barely breaking even. While theatres hit around an average 60% attendance, auds were lucky to be half-filled.

Biz was badly affected on several grounds. Decision of auds to come in on gravy train meant that considerable patronage which would have gone to theatres was siphoned off. Postponement of fight meant further loss due to many leaving town for weekend, and there was confusion up to only an hour before the fight whether it actually would be staged.

Pantages had biggest take, about 90% house ponying up $12,700, which might have been a sellout if the American Legion parade hadn't interfered. Wiltern hit $12,600; downtown Paramount, $9,500; Orpheum, $8,200; Fox Wilshire, $7,000; Huntington Park, $7,000; Downtown, $5,000.

Hollywood Legion Stadium hit only a poor $7,200, and Santa Monica Civic Auditorium $6,513, repping only a token profit. Auds in Long Beach and Pasadena also barely broke even. While theatres already had their equipment for telecast, auds had to set up screens, equipment, etc., causing further expense.

Theatres were scaled from $4.40 to $6.50; auds, $3.20 to $6.50.

Minneapolis, June 30.

If TelePrompter comes through with closed circuit telecasts of Broadway hit shows, as it is hopeful of doing, local boxing promoters Wally Karbo and Tommy Anderson say they'll negotiate to present them in the municipal Auditorium, just as they did the Patterson-Johansson fight.

Whereas the same attraction at the local RKO Orpheum theatre enjoyed perfect projection, that at the Auditorium and the screen that was utilized (a giant sized screen had been promised) provoked much customer dissatisfaction.

The fact that the bout lasted less than three rounds and ended in such a sensational fashion probably kept off the heat from grumbling customers who had paid $3 to $5 per seat, in the opinion of some patrons.

Pulling an estimated 7,690 customers and a $29,195 gross in four Twin Cities' amusement places handling it, two each in Minneapolis and St. Paul, the closed circuit telecast of the Patterson-Johansson fight easily set a new local high in attendance and takings for such an attraction.

Minneapolis accounted for an estimated 5,315 customers and $19,995 gate; St. Paul, 2,372 and $9,500.

At $4 and $5, including tax, for the balcony and lower floor, respectively, the Minneapolis RKO Orpheum went clean, selling all of its 2,794 seats and garnering $11,145. At the Minneapolis Auditorium where the local fight club had it and where it was scaled $3 to $5, 2,521 people paid $8,850 plus tax.

The St. Paul RKO Orpheum drew 1,375 customers and a $5,200 take; the St. Paul fight club, offering three minor live heavyweight bouts as an added attraction, at the St. Paul Auditorium, 997 and $4,300.

This marked the first time that any of the closed circuit televised fights, all of which have been presented in the Twin Cities, has been offered in more than two places. The previous ones either were in the local now departed 4,100-seat Radio City alone or in it and the 2,300-seat St. Paul Paramount, too. Several drew Radio City capacity.

TelePrompter's deal with RKO Theatres was non-exclusive. It also sold the Twin Cities to a Kansas City promoter who, in turn, disposed of the rights to the fight clubs in the two towns.

San Diego Blames Radio

San Diego, June 27.

The pay telecast of the Floyd Patterson-Ingemar Johansson title bout (26) drew a crowd of 2,499 to the San Diego Arena. Capacity is 4,400. The gross was $11,651 with the seats scaled at $6.50.

Promoter Bob Johnston, who also operates the Hollywood Theatre burlesque—only live girlie show in town—attributed lack of a full house, as in previous Patterson-Harris pay telecast, to the radio broadcast of the fight via ABC.

The Take In San Francisco

San Francisco, June 30.

Five Frisco situations grossed around $42,500 for Patterson-Johansson heavyweight title fight last Friday (26) night.

Auditoriums in three other Frisco Bay cities added another $16,000 to $18,000 to the total Frisco area gross.

In Frisco proper, the 16,000-seat Cow Palace grossed about $13,000 on a $3.30-to-$5.50 scale.

The downtown Golden Gate grossed $12,000, the downtown Paramount $10,000, the downtown Telenews about $4,500 and the downtown State $3,000, all on a $4.40-to-$6.50 scale.

Delay Favored Philadelphia

Philadelphia, June 30.

Rain delay enabled Stanley Warner chain to fill up second house, Broadway (S. Philly key nabe) for telecast of Johansson-Patterson fight. First-run Stanley in midtown Philly had all 2,900 seats sold at $4 per two days before initial showing date.

Broadway with 1,900 seats lagged on first date, but filled up by Friday night telecast. In previous years, S-W also showed big screen bouts in Stanley, Camden, and Stanley, Chester. Latter theatre is no longer operating and Camden house had labor difficulties.

Dallas, June 30.

Ingemar Johansson-Floyd Patterson title fight Friday (26) drew a gross of $17,110 from 5,053 fans at the huge Dallas Memorial Auditorium. Seats were scaled, $2.50 to $6.50 top.

Boxing promoter Ralph Smith provided a four-sided screen for the closed circuit coverage. Attendance was hindered by high winds and an afternoon rainstorm here. Newspapers were flooded with phone calls, asking if the bout was again postponed.

Postponement Publicity Helped

Pittsburgh, June 30.

Manager Fred Kunkel of the Penn (here) estimated that one-third of his business on the Patterson-Johansson fight came in because of the repeated announcements over radio and television and the added publicity in the newspapers the postponement brought.

Stanley reported a similar trend and what looked like thin business on Thursday turned out to be a healthy grosser on Friday.

CBS: WON'T BE ANY STAMPEDE

Pharmaceuticals' $18,000,000

Not generally recognized is the fact that Pharmaceuticals will be riding with one of the major budgets in network tv next season. Most of the coin, totalling in excess of $18,000,000, will be riding on CBS-TV, and with the possible exception of General Foods, it's the web's biggest bonanza from any one single sponsor source.

Pharmaceuticals thus far is committed to the "Original Amateur Hour" (now doing summer duty for "Person to Person" but returning to its Sunday afternoon slot in the fall); the Tuesday at 9 "Tight Rope" entry; "Person to Person" (which returns in the fall despite the Arthur Godfrey checkout) and the Monday at 8 "Texan." In addition the client has pacted for four quarter-hour daytime segments on the network.

Pharmaceuticals has an order in with NBC-TV for Saturday night 10:30 for "It Could Be You" but this one hinges on station clearances. In addition it'll be sponsoring Groucho Marx on NBC next season.

Italians Got Their Dander Up Over The Way They're Depicted on TV

Order of Italian Sons and Daughters of America are buying full page ads in American dailies to protest radio and tv programs and Hollywood product that depict Italians as hoods, gangsters and affiliates of the Mafia.

NBC-TV, however, comes off with a clean slate because of its documentary, "The Paper Saints," a detailed study of the problems of the Mafia and syndicated crime in the U. S. telecast last August. CBS-TV, on the other hand, is slapped down for what the Americans of Italian descent regard as "abuse and vilification directed toward our people."

OISDA took a full page ad in Philadelphia Inquirer Tuesday (23) headed "The Mafia: Its 12 Million Real Victims" and blasted all media of communuications that are singling out American Italians "as objects of contempt and ridicule."

TV and films "appear to have adopted a format which invariably uses an Italian personality as a gangster, thief and crook," the ad declared. "Where the villian's name is used, it bears a Latin base. Where no name is used, Roman features — dark hair and mustache—are utilized to connote villany and chicanery. Even the western oat burners are no exception; and mind you, no Italians were in the west in cowboy days."

The attack on CBS-TV was for its "St. Valentine's Day Massacre story with a one hour presentation" and for its followup "with a two-part Desliu series on Al Capone timed to coincide with a new movie on the old subject; and then presented a 'Playhouse 90', "production on labor union with the crooked labor union official-killer bearing the name 'Tony Russo'!"

NBC-TV was patted on the back, on the other hand, for conducting what the OISDA hailed as "a searching coast to coast investigation by its trained radio and tv reporters, and then presented a nationally telecast show; 'The Paper Saints!'"

Ad went on to say that NBC "felt constrained to do this, be-

Tint Show Sked Poses NBC Studio Problem on Coast

Hollywood, June 30.

NBC is faced with its most critical space problem since the studios in Burbank were built. The schedule of color shows for next season has created such a demand for studio space that Tom Sarnoff, veepee in charge of business affairs, has been forced to convert a black-and-white studio to give the web its third color plant.

On the color sked for next fall are Chevy Show, Fred Allen, Ernie Ford, the Ford specials, Fred Astaire, Gene Kelly and the run of Friday and Sunday color specs, many of which will come from Burbank. The situation is further aggravated by the successive nights (Sun., Mon., Tues.) of shows sponsored by automotive firms—Chevy, Plymouth and Ford.

To Sarnoff it's a welcome situation. "We'd much rather have our studios crowded than idle and it'll give the color the big push that should create a fresh demand for color sets."

Chicago, June 30.

Armour, with some $6,000,000 to spend next fall in network tv, is placing the bulk of it with ABC-TV in a plan that would give the company a broad spread of exposure. For Dial soap and its line of meat products, Armour has purchased 20-minute segments on alternate weeks of four nighttime shows, "Adventures In Paradise" and "Cheyenne," both on Monday Nights; "Alaskans" on Sunday; and "Untouchables" on Thursdays.

In addition, the sponsor is continuing its scattered daytime buys in ABC-TV's daytime lineup. Still undertermined at this point is whether the sponsor will continue on NBC-TV daytimes or whether Armour will transfer that coin too, to ABC.

Foote, Cone & Belding agency placed the orders.

NERVOUSNESS, BUT NO PANIC

By GEORGE ROSEN

If there were any thoughts about a stampede out of CBS among its exec personnel, in the wake of Hubbell Robinson-Harry Ommerle program dept. defections, write it off as "aftermath jitters," for they've now been entirely dissipated. There's still, as is to be expected, a fair measure of nervousness within the Columbia precincts, but the network, by its actions, has let it be known that it wants nobody to desert the fold.

The sentiment's been translated in some instances in terms of pay hikes and other encouragements.

Actually, though it isn't saying so out loud, CBS has been no little disturbed about the public relations aspect of the "little revolution" that's taken place, since so many in the trade have been asking "what was the sense in tampering with a success formula?" In fact, the bewilderment still exists after five weeks.

It's understood that, in view of the existing ad lib status in programming, prexy Lou Cowan has given assurance to board chairman Bill Paley that he'll stick around at least for another year. There had been talk that Cowan had planned checking out of the network at the end of the year.

It was inevitable, in the wake of the Robinson-Ommerle bowouts, that the trade would conjecture on whether CBS was bent on reversing its position and abandoning its "creating from within" concept of programming. Fact that "Playhouse 90" has been whittled down to 20 entries, with an outside William Morris package going in as the alternate attraction, was but one factor in perpetuating this new feeling. Fact that CBS was left holding the bag with some expensive built-within-the-house pilots while obliged to accept outside packages pitched by sponsors was held to be another important factor. Also the fact that James Fleming Ball, Dick Lewine's key aide

Dick Clark's Big One

"The Record Years," the Dick Clark-fronted special for American Machine & Foundry on ABC-TV Sunday (28), clobbered the NBC-CBS competition.

Clark show, seen from 9:30 to 10:30 p.m., garnered in its first half-hour a 24.8 Trendex against CBS' Alfred Hitchcock's 13.1 and NBC's Chevy show's 8.2. At 10, Clark hit 26.8 vs. CBS' "Richard Diamond's" 12.5 and NBC's "Loretta Young Show's" 12.8.

TV's Appeal: Tops Refrigerators, Stoves, Washers—And Even Bed

Results of two recent research surveys, one revealing the significant role of tv in the American home and the other dealing with the three webs and how they rank in the public's mind, were sent this week in a letter to NBC advertisers by Robert E. Kintner, prexy of the network. Kintner pointed out that the surveys had been conducted independently without sponsorship, support or suggestions of any kind from any broadcaster.

First survey, the AIM Study by Bruskin Associates Inc., asked the question: "Not including your family, what do you consider the three important things that you now have in your home?" TV, it appears, led the list. TV was named in 38.8% of the replies. Next was the refrigerator, 36.9%; stove, 36.3%; washer and/or dryer, 28.1%, and bed, 12.8%.

Survey also revealed that more people are "satisfied" with tv programs than with a wide range of other subjects and activities. On basis of replies indicating "completely satisfied" and "mostly satisfied," tv racked up 55.2%; women's fashions, 49.9%; 1959 automobiles, 49.2%; popular music, 40.6% and movies, 39.1%.

Second survey, the Psychological Barometer Study by the Psychological Corporation, asked how the three tv networks shaped up in the public's mind. NBC was first in familiarity, first in general preference and first for its performance in every area of network service, according to the survey.

In public familiarity, NBC reportedly scored with 75.4%, CBS was second with 73% and ABC third with 65.9%. Survey also showed NBC first as the web doing "the best job" in categories researched by the pollsters, namely news coverage, entertainment, serving the public interest and informational programs.

NBC-RCA Shelling Out Lots Of Extra Moola for Tint Displays For That Gold at Rainbow's End

By ART WOODSTONE

By the time the '59-'60 television season reaches its height in November, NBC-TV and the parent Radio Corp. of America should be spending out of pocket better than $180,000 a week, according to the reasoning of many, to pay for just the difference in the cost of producing programs in black and white and producing them in color.

There are a number of ways to estimate the "cost of tint," some of which could drive this weekly total even higher, but $180,000 is considered in many circles a fair appraisal of what NBC-RCA is willing to expend to make RCA's multichrome dreams come true.

Over the 26 weeks that cover the heart of the tv season, the outlay would reach approximately $4,750,000, and this doesn't take into account the number of color programs throughout the other 26 weeks of the year, nor the better than a $1,000,000 NBC is now shelling out for conversion of further studios into fulltime color operations.

Because of the interrelated bookkeeping procedures of NBC and its parent, it's hard to say which is actually paying this grand sum. Since few people outside the NBC and RCA orbit actually know, and since neither of the companies involved is saying, it's become kind of a common current practice to speak of the expenditures as those of "NBC-RCA."

Where NBC-RCA is concerned, spending that kind of coin is well worth it. Outlay is counted as a vital ingredient in RCA's drive to put a color set in nearly every U. S. video home, as soon as possible, to stimulate sluggish video receiver sales. Various sources feel that there will be a color breakthrough when the price of a set goes below $300, and, on good old assembly-line principles, the faster sets are sold the faster the price'll go down.

Continuing this line of reasoning, it may be surmised that if only

2 Bobs With 1 Thought

This will be a travellin' summer for NBC's two Bobs—Sarnoff and Kintner.

Kintner will be gone a total of six weeks, leaving July 6, when he makes a global circuit touching base with all the NBC news bureaus. Immediately upon the prexy's return, the board chairman takes off for a several-week-holiday to Japan and Hong Kong.

Clipp Sparks Tint Push by Stations At Gotham Rally

RCA got a nice assist from the Triangle tv station chain and from several other non-affiliated sources last week, at a "push color" meeting held at New York's Waldorf Astoria hotel.

Roger Clipp, who heads the Triangle stations, called the meeting for stations with local color production aspirations. WFIL-TV in Philly and the Triangle flag station, is doing between five and seven hours a week of local color programming. Station, which is lean on network colorcasts because of affiliations with ABC (no color) and CBS (hardly any), figures that once there are 100,000 tint sets in the home market, color television will become "a very saleable medium."

Clipp had invited "about 20" other major market stations, which are also doing some local tint production. He garnered speakers (natch) from NBC and parent RCA, headed by NBC's sales chief Don Durgin and RCA product planning veep Charles Denny, from Television Bureau of Advertising (Norman Cash, its prexy) and many other quarters.

The amount of time owners of tint sets presently spend viewing is greater on the average than that spent by normal b-w set owners, according to TvB. And by getting behind the push, TvB figures it can lift the amount of viewing time all over. Cash denies that the high quotient of color viewing is due

NBC Radio's 52% Of Three-Web Biz

NBC Radio reportedly set an all-time record in AM broadcasting when it came up with figures this week giving it 52.1% of total sponsored time on the three major networks. Results were based on tabulations made by Broadcast Advertisers Reports, Inc.

Reason for the web's grabbing off more than half of the entire volume of biz is due to an increase in "Monitor" sales. Matthew J. Culligan, exec veep of NBC Radio, said the statistical look-see at June biz shows a gain over May of nine hours and seven minutes in sponsored time for the three major networks combined. Of this increase, Culligan said, NBC Radio alone accounted for more than eight hours.

Doug Edwards Segs For National Carbon

Doug Edwards' CBS-TV nightly for next season, but there was still enough room left in October on the quarter-hour strip to make way for a "splash campaign" for National Carbon, which wants to peddle its anti-freeze in the fall.

As a result, sponsor bought "all available" quarter hours that month in Edwards. Show is on from 7:15 to 7:30 p.m.

High Court Takes Stations Off Libel Hook on Politico Gabbing

Washington, June 30.

The U. S. Supreme Court on Monday (29) ruled that broadcasters are not subject to libel suits for remarks made by a political candidate speaking under an equal time grant.

The long-awaited decision, clearing up one of the knottiest issues raised by Section 315 of the Communications Act, was made by a five-to-four margain.

Case was brought by Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of North Dakota. The union had sued WDAY in Fargo for $100,000 for remarks suggesting it was Communist by A. C. Townley, an independent Senatorial candidate. Station has urged Townley not to make remarks but insisted it could not stop him under Section 315.

The majority opinion, read by Justice L. Black, refuted the Farmers Union contention that the censorship ban did not apply to libelous matter and that WDAY should have prohibited Townley from making the charges.

Black said: "If any censorship was permissible, a station so inclined could intentionally inhibit a candidate's legitimate presentation under the guise of lawful censorship of libelous matter."

Because of the time limitation inherent in a political campaign erroneous decisions by a station could not be corrected by the courts promptly enough to permit the candidate to bring improperly excluded matter before the public."

Black continued that censorship of libelous remarks "would almost inevitably force a candidate to avoid controversial issues during political debates over radio and television, and hence restrict the coverage of consideration relevant to intelligent political decision."

As for the Farmer's Union argument that even if a station can't censor a candidate's speech, it's still responsible for what he says, the majority said:

"Under this interpretation, unless a licensee refuses to permit any candidate to talk at all, the section would sanction the unconscionable result of permitting civil and perhaps criminal liability to be imposed for the very conduct the statute demands of the licensee."

Black was joined by Chief Justice Warren, Justices Brennan, Clark and Douglas.

Justice Felix Farnkfurter, dissenting with Justices Harlan, Whittaker and Stewart, argued that states should be left the question of determining the nature and extent of liability of broadcasters to third persons.

News, Pubaffairs Reshuffle at CBS

Fred Friendly is going to take on some of the Bell & Howell pubaffairs specials for CBS-TV next season. He'll probably be splitting the six nighttime stanzas with two other CBS production teams—Les Midgley and Alf Weston, who might be taking two and Al Wasserman and Jay McMullen, who'll also take two.

Friendly's additional job (he'll still be responsible for "Small World") is part of the general reshuffling of executive material in the CBS news-public affairs department.

Sig Mickelson, veepee in charge of news-public affairs, also named Irv Gitlin an executive producer for public affairs programming. He gave Gitlin's job as director of public affairs to John Lynch, who had been assistant director under Gitlin.

Mickelson said Gitlin's exact new title was to be program executive: creative projects, and the purpose of the change was to relieve Gitlin of administrative responsibility to give him more time on program development, his forte. While working on new CBS pubaffairs shows, Gitlin will retain executive supervision of "20th Century," "Conquest" and "Woman," the series of daytime specials started by CBS recently.

Chicago, June 30.

NBC-TV central division sales picked up nearly $1,000,000 in summertime coin from a pair of clients of the Edward H. Weiss agency, one of them Midas Muffler Co., which is making its first major buy in network video. From July through September Midas is buying segments of "Lawless Years," "Suspicion" and "Five Fingers" on the web's scatter plan. It is also purchasing the quarter hour warm-up period preceding the July All Star Baseball game.

For Purex, the Weiss agency has purchased "Who Pays," new Thursday night series with Mike Wallace which starts this week. Deal is for 13 weeks. Purex is also spending some summer money with CBS-TV for reruns of "I Love Lucy."

NBC central division also snared around $350,000 on scatter plan from Gold Seal, makers of Glass-wax, for a total of 20 daytime quarter hours starting in September. Company has purchased "Treasure Hunt," "County Fair," "Tic Tac Dough" and "Queen for a Day."

With Godfrey Exiting, 'Person to Person' May Rotate Hosting Spot

Even though Arthur Godfrey won't be doing "Person to Person" next season, the program will continue. Pharmaceuticals, which signed as next season's sponsor of the Friday night CBS-TV show when Godfrey was still meant to be its host, has given the network the greenlight to go ahead and find a substitute host or, as the case may be, rotating hosts.

CBS, which now produces the package, is considering either utilizing one replacement or finding a group of four or five men, presumably from its own performing ranks, to rotate the questioning from week to week. No immediate decision on the "P-P" host status is being demanded by the sponsor, since the fall preem isn't due until October.

Meanwhile, CBS program brass is mulling several names for hosting chores, including those of newscaster Charles Collingwood, Red Skelton, Ed Sullivan and Jackie Gleason, along with that of George Burns.

What actually eventuates at this juncture is anybody's guess.

AFTRA Strikes WMIN

Minneapolis, June 30.

In a dispute over new contract terms and working conditions, members of the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists employed at local radio station WMIN have gone on strike, joining the striking International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers union members in picketing the non-network station.

IBEW struck the station June 1 after it laid off three of its four IBEW engineers. The station called it an economy move, but the union claimed a lockout.

AMPEX'S 100-CITY PENETRATION IN '59

Redwood City, Cal., June 30.

An Ampex Corp. official last week predicted that the top 100 television markets would be equipped with videotape before the end of the year. Tom Davis, marketing manager of the company's professional products division, based the estimate on orders now on the books and those indicated for the near future.

He said the 100-market level would open widespread use of tape in the production and use of taped spot commercials. Advertisers and agencies, he said, have been holding back "until enough stations were equipped before going to tape in major proportions. That point is rapidly approaching. It certainly will arrive this fall, concurrently with the Christmas selling season."

Davis revealed that a total of 10 independent producers are now using mobile tape units. He said indie producers now have a total of 20 tape recorders, and that recent orders include 13 machines to be delivered to 10 producers. Networks now have a total of 90 Ampex recorders in use and within the past 30 days have ordered nine more, he said.

Current Ampex installation list includes more than 100 stations, 60 of them located in the top 100 markets, Davis said. Ampex is currently working on a two-month backlog, turning out videotape units at the rate of two a day.

ABC-TV May Pull Out of Olympics

ABC-TV might not be televising the 1960 Winter Olympics from Squaw Valley, Calif., after all.

After miffing NBC-TV and CBS-TV several weeks ago by beating them to an exclusive tv deal on the weeklong Squaw Valley event, ABC is evidently weighing whether it'd be worth the cost of somewhere near $1,000,000 to do the remote coverage from the mountainous California region without the additional assurance that it can also participate in the Summer Olympics from Italy.

However, CBS-TV two weeks ago announced that it had exclusive rights to American tv coverage of the Italian Olympics and has since reiterated this.

Yesterday (Tues.) ABC said that its order on the Squaw Valley Olympics was contingent on participation in the Italian events. It was explained elsewhere that ABC, when it made the arrangements for the American-based sports events, was under the impression that the American Olympic Committeemen threw around enough weight internationally so that ABC would be fairly well assured participation in the Roman games.

This did not pan out, however, since the Italians negotiated with CBS on an entirely independent basis. They were represented in the dickers by Gardner Advertising, while the Squaw Valley people were handled via J. Walter Thompson and its radio-tv chieftain Danny Seymour.

ABC-TV was reported to have been given orders for part of the Squaw Valley telecasts by Seymour for some JWT clients. If ABC backs off now, the sponsor money will be forfeited.

'TELEPHONE TIME' IN RECEIVERSHIP

Hollywood, June 30.

Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Ellsworth Meyers ordered the "Telephone Time" series of 79 episodes into receivership pending judgment on producer Jerry Stagg's suit vs. Hal Roach Jr. and Guild Films. It's believed the first time a tv series has been placed in receivership.

Judge ordered Guild to deposit all the moneys received from distribution of the series since March 24, 1959, when he issued a restraining order. He also named G. E. Allen reciever over the series.

Stagg, through attorney Patti Karger, charges fraud and conspiracy and seeks an accounting and damages over deal by which Roach sold the series, which Stagg produced, to Guild in a swap stock.

Ed Murrow's Valedictory

Ed Murrow's parting shot as he closed out his CBS Radio series last Friday (26):

"Tonight this reporter departs this microphone for a year's leave of absence—a departure which has been rather overpublicized. Permit me a few words of personal explanation. I haven't been fired . . . haven't quit . . . my health is all right. For many years, there has been a clause in my longterm contract with CBS permitting me to take a year off . . . and the corporation granted it.

"For 12 of the more than 20 years that I have been broadcasting, reports have been made at this time. They have represented the work of many people, here and abroad. I am especially indebted to Raymond Swing and Ed Bliss. We have tried not to abuse this privileged opportunity to communicate and have not knowingly done violence to the truth. I would speak my gratitude to my colleagues and critics—both too numerous to mention by name.

"The next year will be spent travelling, reading, listening, keeping silent—in the language of radio, receiving instead of transmitting—trying to fill in some of the enormous gaps in my knowledge of this fascinating world. Unless curiosity curdles, I shall return to face this frightening microphone with a little more knowledge and assurance—at least the illusion that I know what I'm talking about . . . being fully aware that some of you are of the opinion that this reporter has suffered from an acute case of that illusion for many years. My thanks to those of you who have reminded me that an amplified voice does not increase the wisdom or understanding of the speaker.

"At the end of the year I shall hope to have learned a little. The hope may be vain . . . but the prospect of trying is most pleasing."

Hollywood, June 30.

The relationship between theatrical pictures and television is linked closer than ever, it was conceded by the heads of two former competing organizations. Spyros Skouras, prexy of 20th-Fox, and Leonard H. Goldenson, during head of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, hailed the marriage of the two entertainment media at a luau at the Westwood studio last week in compliment to the visiting board of directors and other executives of ABC-TV.

Skouras flew out from N. Y. for the Hawaiian-type spread hard by a watery set for James Michener's "Adventures in Paradise," which TCF will produce for the network. He praised highly the accomplishments of Goldenson and his staff of executives, who, he said, have rocketed ABC to first position among the networks. "Television will undergo a wonderful improvement with our pictures," said Skouras. He spoke facetiously of Martin Manulis, production head of TCF, as nursing an ambition to some day make a theatrical picture.

Goldenson told of his entry into tv and how he first consulted with Walt Disney, Warners and Skouras before deciding on the close relationship that now exists. "Paradise" he called "the opening wedge" into a happy association with 20th-Fox. He revealed this year ABC will spend $30,000,000 with Warners.

Buddy Adler, veepee in charge of 20th-Fox production, said the relationship with ABC-TV will make his studio the greatest in the business. He was seconded by Skouras, who added "we'll make

'Best Omnibus' As 30-Min. Film To Lure Sponsors

Although deal isn't consummated, the "Omnibus" package produced by Robert Saudek Associates is expected to return to its usual alternate Sunday spot on NBC-TV this fall. Also, the Saudek outfit is committed to turn in four prime time NBC-TV specials.

It's not yet known if Aluminium will return for its sixth season as a sponsor of "Omnibus." A top electronics outfit is also reportedly interested in hopping on the "Omnibus" sponsorship wagon.

Meantime, Saudek has put finishing touches on a half-hour promotional film called "Best of Omnibus" with an eye to whipping up additional interest in the program among agency buyers. With the film goes a posh sales presentation into which the RSA business affairs veep, George M. Benson, has put facts and figures attesting to program's audience appeal and selling capacity.

Brochure makes point that "Omnibus" has been growing steadily in audience and regarded as one of the most successfully publicized regular series in tv, pulling on an average of 2,500 clips per month.

Also pointed out to potential sponsors is fact that series has its own pubrelations force (Jack Perlis, in this instance), considered a plus in view of the manifold problems under which web publicity departments function.

Chambers Tapped For 'Johnny Staccato' Series

Hollywood, June 30.

Everett Chambers, formerly associated with Fred Coe at NBC in N.Y., will produce Revue's "Johnny Staccato" teleseries. Program debuts on NBC-TV next fall as a John Cassavetes starrer.

First assignment will be the third episode of series.

Richards, Calkins, Houston Merger

Fletcher Richards, Calkins & Holden's absorption this week of the Bryan Houston agency will considerably strengthen the agency's tv operation.

Just as the merger early this fall with Calkins & Holden furnished exec personnel and accounts in the packaged drugs field, so the Bryan Houston merger brings in men and clients in the packaged goods field.

Main boost to the tv department is the acquisition of the raft of food products of Heublein Food Division, Litton Industries. Other accounts with broadcast billing potential include J. P. Stevens textiles and Simplicity Pattern Co.

Bryan Houston's loss last week of the $4,000,000 Nestle account to Wm. Esty, on top of the loss a couple of months ago of the multimillion Drystan business, was the turning point in longterm merger negotiations.

Prexy of the absorbed agency, Bryan Houston, becomes vice chairman of the board and a major stockholder in Fletcher Richards, Calkins & Holden.

3 WEBS—TRIO OF PATTERNS

Something Special: MCA Vs. WM

The trade will be watching with avid interest next season when the two major talent agencies set up shop on the competing NBC and CBS networks with their own tv attractions. It'll be the first bigtime "Battle of MCA vs. Wm. Morris" for rating supremacy with both giant talent operations going to bat with their own series of specials in pitting MCA talent against the best that WM has to offer.

MCA, of course, will be represented by the Tuesday night NBC-TV series of 60 and 90-minute shows being sponsored by Ford Motor Co., on which Hubbell Robinson Jr. is riding herd. While the talent availabilities for the series won't be restricted to MCA clients, it's a cinch that the rival Wm. Morris office won't open up its telecast rosters for the Ford series.

Same in reverse goes for the Morris package — the Thursday night CBS-TV Revlon-sponsored series which will alternate with "Playhouse 90" in the 9:30 to 11 p.m. segs.

Bolshoi Tape-to-Film Experiment; TV or Theatre Release, Mebbe Both

Matty Fox is nearing a decision on what to do with his four hours of vidtaped highlights of the Bolshoi Ballet. Ted Mills, who produced the tapes, has been working closely with Fox on experiments in transfer of tape-to-film, and feels that the results in some cases have been so gratifying that it's possible to compile at least one theatre show out of the tapes.

This is the first real experiment in tape-to-film transfer in terms of projectable film. Of course, the networks and independent tape producers have been working with tape-to-film for kinescope purposes, but that has been for on-the-air use, rather than theatre projection. Consequently, Fox's experiments have become somewhat complex and protracted.

What he, together with Mills, NBC and Consolidated Labs, have been doing is to try any number of combinations in the transfers. On the one side, they've used various types of 35m raw stock and printing techniques, and on the other, various levels of electronic contrasts and intensities. Basically, tape-to-film transfer is a kinescope process, but Mills objects to the word, pointing out that kinescope prints for air use involve a far different level of quality than kinnies for theatrical projection.

Major success thus far has come in two segments of tape with low contrasts, with results, says Mills, that make the 35m prints indistinguishable with regular theatrical prints to the layman. Other segments have been less satisfactory, particularly those with high contrast. What's happened in screenings at the Academy Theatre is that they've looked okay from the rear half of the theatre, but have produced a perceptible flicker from the middle down to the front. Mills is optimistic, though, that this too can be licked. He says in some cases thus far, they've sent the same segment back five times for attempts at varying combinations in raw stock, printing and electronic gain.

Though he's now got film to

Huntley's Sunday Sponsor All Set

Chet Huntley's Sunday news-in-depth half-hour has a sponsor for the 1959-1960 season. Until now unbankrolled, "Chet Huntley Reporting" is being picked up alternate weeks on NBC-TV by Kemper Insurance Group, a Chicago-based company.

The Huntley program, costing $10,000 net a week for talent, will either go into the 5 or 5:30 slot next fall. This past season it has been scheduled at 6:30, but that time slot was bought for next semester by Sterling Drug and "Saber of London." Sterling, which sponsored "Saber" at 7 until now, just came through with the weekend order.

Ford Now Wants Olivier 'Sixpence' But RCA Has Lien

Ford Motor Co. wants to buy the entire 90 minutes of "The Moon and Sixpence," the costly 90-minute special fronted by Laurence Olivier and which NBC-TV hopes to get on the air sometime in November. At the moment there's only one hitch to the deal—RCA already owns half of the color tape program, and the network is now trying to clear the decks by finding another spec for parent RCA.

Oddly, Ford rejected "Sixpence" six weeks ago when NBC first pitched it to the car company as an entry for its Tuesday night series.

Some NBC circles feel there won't be too much trouble moving RCA into another stanza, yet so far the tv-radio-phonograph manufacturer has not delivered up the final word on whether it will move or not.

What favors "accomodation" by the parent RCA is the fact that "Sixpence" has cost a modest fortune to make (via Talent Associates). Program was budgeted at about $300,000, but that was before some last-minute retaping was done when it was made several weeks ago. Remakes took an additional 18-20 hours and cost about $56,000 more than the preliminary budget figure. Under these circumstances (since it's virtually a matter of bookkeeping between RCA and its network subsidiary) it's felt RCA will relinquish its "Sixpence" position in return for some "hard cash" to the overall corporation.

Dave Aubrey, Brother Of Jim, to Detroit for NBC

NBC-TV has got itself a new sales executive in the network's Detroit office.

His name is David Aubrey, a former Time Inc. staffer. His brother is named aJmes Aubrey Jr., new executive vicepresident of CBS-TV.

ALL HAVE THEIR OWN AX TO GRIND

One of the more interesting aspects of the upcoming season on tv is the fact that all three networks will be going their respective ways, each with their own individual ax to grind on program concepts.

At ABC, for example, the big bid is for circulation leadership in an allout effort to dominate the ratings. Of the 275 specials that will ride the tv webs next season, ABC is settling for a bare dozen or so. It wants circulation and since audiences continue to hanker for action-adventure, ABC is responding in kind with such entries as "The Alaskan," "Bourbon St.," "Adventures in the South Pacific," etc.

On the other hand, NBC, even with a full awareness that it is sacrificing circulation, is making a big splash with specials in a do-or-die bid to push color. NBC knows the gamble and costs involved in slotting hour dramas in the Sunday 8 to 9 period opposite "Maverick" and Ed Sullivan; or in slotting 15 "Telephone Hour" semi-classical shows, or yet again the Coca-Cola specials in time periods that might otherwise be utilized for more surefire half-hour entries designed for the big audience play. The sales dept. boys at NBC also know that just as much time and effort go into selling a single special as a full series of "circulation shows." But nonetheless NBC, with more than 150 specials on the '59-'60 agenda, including three weekly series of the "big ones," is out to make noise and excitement and turn the tide on tint tv acceptance.

CBS is playing it right down the middle—specials and "circulation shows." Along with Goodman Ace 90-minute specs, the duPont specials, the MGM specials out of the Dave Susskind shop, the Bell & Howell news specials, etc., the network is giving equal attention to such entries as the full-hour "Lineup," the "Space Show," the new "Hotel de Paree" western and the other rank-and-filers. It is going to neither extreme. The catchword is balance.

Washington, June 30.

Witnesses skedded to testify July 7 in New York's Foley Square Federal courthouse as Federal Communications Commission's study of television programming practices gets underway before FCC Chief Hearing Examiner James D. Cunningham are the following:

C. Terence Clyne, McCann-Erickson, as first witness; Robert L. Foreman and James Schule, BBDO; Dan Seymour and John F. Devine, J. Walter Thompson Co.; Peter G. Levanthes and David Miller, Young & Rubicam; Richard A. R. Pinkham and Harold J. Saz, Ted Bates & Co.; Philip H. Cohen, Sullivan, Stauffer, Colwell & Bayles, Inc.; Thomas J. McDermott, Benton & Bowles; Lewis H. Titterton, Compton Advertising, Inc.; John B. Cunningham, Cunningham & Walsh; and Nicholas E. Keesely, Lennen & Newell, Inc.

L & M's Liberty Bowl Game

Liggett & Myers bought half of the first Liberty Bowl Game, new college football setup being undertaken late next fall in Philadelphia. Program is set for Dec. 19 via NBC-TV.

L&M's intention is to be sponsor of a game at the Liberty Bowl between two of the service teams if at all possible. If not, sponsor said, then object will be to line up strong college teams, one from the east and one from the west. Dancer-Fitzgerald-Sample closed deal with NBC sports.

Tempers Flare, Stanton Cut Short At Hot House Session on Equal Time

Washington, June 30.

A partisan row flared up at House equal time hearings today (Tues.) over the Justice Dept. position in the Lar Daly case. Bickering broke out while acting antitrust head Robert Bicks, speaking for Attorney General William P. Rogers, was on the stand and ended in the session being cut short while CBS president Frank Stanton was in the midst of testifying.

Bicks urged that Congress take action to overturn the Daly decision applying equal time requirement to newscasts. He took the position that although CBS launched an effort last Fri. to seek court reversal of the ruling, this process might be time-consuming and congressional action was called for to assure correction of the situation before the 1960 campaigns are underway.

The Justice Dept. official was immediately confronted by an accusation from Rep. John Flynt Jr. (D-Ga.) that the JD stand might be "motivated by expediency rather than principle." Flynt cited then Deputy Attorney General Rogers' refusal to comment on a measure exempting newscasts from equal time demands some four years ago on grounds it was a "delicate" question for congressional determination. Flynt suggested that there appeared to be a shift of Justice Dept. policy by breaking silence on the issue.

Bicks emphatically denied that the Justice Dept. position was motivated by anything but "good faith" and was not contrary to any previously set policy. He asserted that the JD regarded it as its duty to urge congressional remedy, as well as recently petitioning FCC to reverse the Daly edict.

Earlier, subcommittee heard pleas for equal time reform from NBC board chairman Robert W. Sarnoff, FCC chairman John Doerfer, and House sponsors of remedial legislation.

Carnation Milk's $3,000,000 Splash On ABC-TV Shows

Carnation Milk has placed $3,000,000 worth of biz on ABC-TV, marking the company's first nighttime entry on the web and the return of the milk firm to network tv. (Carnation about two years ago rode with "Burns & Allen" on CBS-TV and then took a hiatus from network tv.)

Carnation, via Erwin Wasey, bought alternate half-hours of the hour-long "Sugarfoot," slated for the fall alternate Tuesday nights at 7:30. It also will buy into another show, with the possibility good on "The Alaskans," a new fall entry slated Sunday nights from 9:30 to 10:30. Carnation buy on "Sugarfoot," puts that show in the almost sold out category. Ditto for "Alaskans," if that show becomes Carnation's final selection.

GENE WANG TO G-T ON 'PHILIP MARLOWE'

Hollywood, June 30.

Gene Wang has joined Goodson-Todman productions as producer of "Philip Marlowe," which G-T owns jointly with California National Productions and which is slated to debut in the fall on ABC-TV Tuesdays at 9:30.

Wang replaces Bill Froug, G-T's exec producer in Hollywood, who produced the pilot and the first six "Marlowe" episodes. Froug returns to the G-T executive offices to work on his "Jade O'Hara" property, pilot of which Pepsi-Cola will bankroll for G-T. He also continues overall production supervision for G-T here under v.p. Harris Katleman.

Prior to the "Marlowe" assignment, Wang was one of the key writers and story consultant on the "Perry Mason" series for CBS-TV and Paisano Productions.

Cardinal Cushing's TV Blast Ires Radio Moscow

Boston, June 30.

Radio Moscow attacked Richard Cardinal Cushing, Archbishop of Boston, for his special "Report on Communism" telecast over WBZ-TV here Sunday (21) and repeated Friday (26). Roman Catholic prelate proposed that Communism be taught in upper grades of U.S. high schools and colleges. It was the only way, he said, to arouse the American people from their indifference to Communism.

Radio Moscow foreign-language broadcasts accused Cardinal Cushing of starting a crusade against Communism and said his views were "typical of the majority of American clergy who are very reactionary and retrograde."

Chicago, June 30.

Seven-Up, which dropped "Zorro" on ABC-TV after last season, is returning to the web this fall with an experimental series of minute announcements and partial sponsorships. Soft drink firm is concentrating the buy in holiday months of November and December and may enter next phase of the video season with an expanded version of the same plan.

Minute participations are in "Alaskans" and "Adventures in Paradise." Rest of time buy is one quarter hour seg per week in "Dick Clark Show." Deal was made via J. Walter Thompson agency in Chi and is estimated worth nearly $1,000,000.

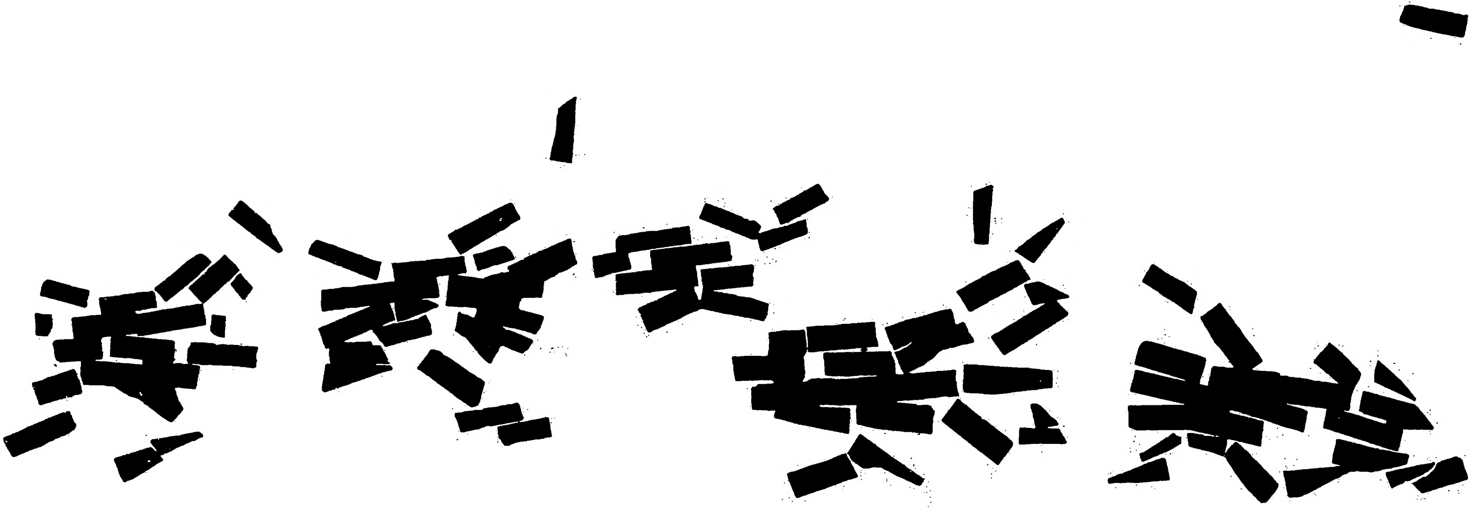
CBS-TV's Sabbath morning "Look Up and Live" is going to devote four July televersions to an exploration of "the disturbing attitudes and values" of American youth.

Featured will be Marc Daniels, Haila Stoddard, Timmy Everett, Bill Hickey, Jeff Harris and Barry Neumann. Rev. William Kirkland will narrate.



Incredible...but true. WBBM-TV keeps topping its own record ratings. Chicago's top station in the past 48 consecutive Nielsen reports, both Nielsen and ARB show WBBM-TV first again...and by one of the widest margins in its history.

For example, according to ARB, WBBM-TV's over-all audience share is at a nineteen-month high of 34.8%. That's a mighty 22% higher than a year ago, 27% higher than the second station, 78% higher than the third station and 91% higher than the fourth station! Furthermore, as the only Chicago station to increase its share of audience and its ratings during the year, WBBM-TV ranks first both daytime and nighttime...with an average 37% lead over the nearest competition during the day, and an average 16% lead at night. Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature and audience composition, i.e., a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained.

ZIV'S ZIPPY $14,000,000 SALE

High Cost of Squawking

Stations squawking at the high price of syndicated shows could help bring costs down.

Many syndicators are complaining that stations contract for a series to be played out at a certain interval. When that interval expires, and when the syndication sales exec goes into the market for a renewal, stations, time and again, seek an extension of time. The petitioning station, for one reason or another, claims it didn't have a chance to play off all the contracted episodes. Usually, some compromise is reached between the station and syndicator.

But the cost of sending a sales exec to markets which are really closed because of the station's failure to live up to the terms of the contract is added on to the overhead of the syndicator. That overhead is reflected in the price secured from the station—so in the long run, the station is saddled with a portion of that extra charge.

NBC's Big Film Production Push As CNP Pacts All Talent Guilds

Hollywood, June 30.

Move of the Television networks directly into film production—instead of through dummy producing corporations or indie companies established for the purpose—was accelerated last week with the disclosure that NBC's California National Productions has become a signatory with all four screen talent guilds.

Heretofore, no network or subsidiary has ever held contracts with all four of the Screen Actors, Screen Extras, Screen Directors Guild or Writers Guild of America simultaneously. In order to engage directly in production, a producer must be signatory to all the guilds.

CNP made its deals with the guilds because it has been below-the-line producer on all NBC's wholly-owned film shows. There are two of them presently, "Fibber McGee and Molly" and "Bonanza." That's in addition to CNP's own shows, four of which are presently in production.

Although the networks have been able to control production in the past, they've been unable to hire talent directly. ABC, for example, has no contracts with the Actors or Extras Guilds or with the Directors Guild. Should the network wish to produce film shows, it would have to retain an indie company, or do all hiring through an established studio where it chose to shoot.

CBS, through a jurisdictional hassle with Screen Actors Guild some years ago when it filmed the "Amos 'n' Andy" series, has become a signatory both with SAG and SEG. All three networks are signatories to the tv-film section of the Writers Guild. But none of the webs are SDG signatories.

CBS produces several of its own shows. It can hire actors and writers directly. But it must hire directors through whatever studio it occupies on a given show, with the directors paid on studio checks. Studio then bills CBS. Same goes

See Japan Upping Its Vidpix Ceiling

Indications point to Japan increasing its ceiling of $300 per episode for telepix, according to Abe Mandell, manager of the foreign sales department of Independent Television Corp.

Mandell, who recently returned from a selling tour of the Far East, said that Japan's economy is mushrooming and that current sales of tv sets is running at about 200,000 a month. The ceiling, imposed by the Finance Ministry of Japan, has been a bone of contention among American exporters for quite a long while now.

Referring to the overall operations of his department, Mandell said that sales of ITC product in Latin America, South America, Japan and the Philippines have passed the $600,000 mark in slightly less than six months. The $600,000 figure was seen as double

'Jeff's Collie' Even Gets His Own Task Force

Independent Television Corp. has formed a special Jeff's Collie Division, similar to that formed years back by Ziv on "Cisco Kid." Division, made up of a six-man task force at this stage, now is hard at work preparing for the bulk of renewal orders.

Headed by Al Unger, the unit already has chalked up a good percentage of the early renewals and have signed up some markets for a full three-year deal on the off-network ("Lassie") entry. (The majority of the first year contracts expire in the fall period.) Show currently is being telecast in 167 markets.

Markets coming in for a full three years of "Jeff's Collie," now include Albany, N.Y., Norfolk, Va.; Cincinnati, South Bend, Ind.; and Honolulu. The three-year roster at this date is about 11 markets. Renewals on the early dates have been scored in about 85% of the markets, the roster approximating 14 markets.

One of the big pitches to stations and sponsors is the all family appeal of the show, backed by a rating and advertising roster showing the adult appeal of the skein. Among the representative sponsors currently riding the show are a

Ed Small Features In New ITC Go-Round

The Edward Small pix group, one of the first to be sold to tv, is being taken off the shelf by Independent Television Corp. after a five-month hiatus for another whirl in the market.

Pix, to be sold by the Arrow Productions rerun division, includes such titles as "Count of Monte Cristo," "Kit Carson," "Man in the Iron Mask," "Duke of West Point," and "March of the Wooden Soldiers." Arrow topper Al Unger says he's open to any pix deals which would augment the 31 Small feature group. The Small cinematics first were introed on the market about five years ago.

EBERSTADT-UA LINK WATCHED

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

Confirmation of reports that Ziv Television Programs is being sold to two Wall Street investment banking groups, F. Eberstadt & Co. and Lazard Freres, immediately set off speculation as to the future owners of Ziv.

As to the sale, here are the salient features:

Deal was for a reported $14,000,000.

Frederic W. Ziv, chairman of the board, and John L. Sinn, prez of the company, reportedly will retain a 20% combined stock interest in the new corporate setup.

There will be no changes in the management or operations of the company as a consequence of the Eberstadt-Lazard Freres deal, according to a company statement.

But there are some intriguing possibilities, which were speculated on in the trade, although at this point, there is nothing to take them outside the area of speculation.

F. Eberstadt & Co., one of the principal purchasers is closely linked with United Artists, having first floated the United Artists public stock issue. Robert Porter, an associate of Eberstadt, is a member of UA's board of directors. Questioned, an F. Eberstadt & Co. spokesman firmly denied that the Ziv buy was part of a master plan to sell Ziv to UA after an interim period. He said no overtures had been made to UA on the deal. A UA spokesman mentioned that about a year ago, the possible buyup of Ziv was dropped in high UA quarters, but it was just as casually dismissed.

How long F. Eberstadt & Co. and Lazard Freres will maintain their large interest in Ziv without selling out is a question of conjecture. Same Eberstadt spokesman pointed to the company's financial stake in a barge firm which was held five years, to illustrate that Eberstadt doesn't necessarily make an investment for a quick sell off. In order to effect a capital gains sale, principal in-

MGM-TV Incepts Foreign Plunge; Aussie Sales Set

MGM-TV, now beginning to blueprint its entrance into syndication, is starting its push in the foreign field also.

The Loew's subsid has sold "Thin Man" in two Australian markets, ATN, Sydney, and GTV, Melbourne. The two markets also picked up MGM-TV's roster of short subjects, "Our Gang," "John Nesbitt's Passing Parade," and "Crime Does Not Pay." Deal was negotiated via the Australian offices of Loew's International, under the supervision of MGM-TV's home office.

Loew's tv subsid also is dubbing "Thin Man" in Spanish and French. The Peter Lawford, Phyllis Kirk starrer already has been telecast in England by the BBC, which bought 26 episodes.

Extent of Loew's International's role in the foreign plans of MGM-TV still has to be worked out. But the existence of a far flung foreign operation, heretofore solely concerned wth theatrical distribution of Loew's pix, can only accrue to the benefit of MGM-TV, once it gets rolling with a backlog of telefilm product for sale abroad.

The off-network "Thin Man" property will be MGM-TV's first syndication entry in the U. S.

Is That U.S.-Britain Telefilm Co-Production Honeymoon Over? Activity Slows Down to Trickle

Next season will be another outing of "watchful waiting" on the fate of Anglo-American coproductions, with more at stake than the tepid "watchful waiting" phrase suggests.

To put it nakedly, as some Britishers have, the Commonwealth nations can't remain the prime customers or American telefilmeries, while not getting what they consider a fair shake in the American market.

In the face of that viewpoint, not one new Anglo-American coproduction has found a network berth for the upcoming season—and the possibility of that happening is slim at this late date. In the past, there's been "Robin Hood," (biggest coproduction success ever) "Sir Lancelot," "Dick and the Duchess," et al.

One of the hottest coproductions this selling season has been "Third Man," a partnered venture between National Telefilm Associates and British Broadcasting Corp. It was BBC's first coproduction venture. There's still an outside chance that it might find a network berth. ABC-TV has an option until July to sell the show and Lever Bros. evidenced a strong interest to put it on CBS-TV, only to be met by a "no vacancy" sign at the latter network. Other sponsors also are known to be interested in the skein, episodes of which were produced in Hollywood and the remainder in England.

In the face of the virtual network blackout, syndication has been called into play, a harder route in comparison. One of the market-by-market entries which is receiving a good deal of interest from regionals currently is "Four Just Men," starring Dan Dailey, Jack Hawkins, Richard Conte and Vittorio De Sica, distributed by Independent Television Corp. The series is being produced by U.K.'s Sapphire Films.

CBS Films also has been active on the coproduction front, at least

6 Major Studios Turning Out 37% Of Webs' Telepix

Hollywood, June 30.

Although the motion picture majors have met with mixed results in attempting to establish a stake in television with their new shows, they are nonetheless very much a factor in the physical production of Hollywood's current telefilm output.

Check shows that fully 37% of next fall's nighttime network telefilm output will be filmed at six major motion picture studios. That's a total of 19½ hours weekly, of 26% of the entire three-network nighttime schedule—live and film.

Metro, for example, failed to sell any of its own pilots, but nonetheless will be turning out six shows for other companies, a total of three and a half hours per week. Metro lineup includes "Rawhide," "Twilight Zone," "Peter Gunn," "Philip Marlowe" and "Alcoa Presents," plus remaining regments of "Lawless Years."

Paramount, too, failed to sell any of its own pilots but will film 90 minutes a week of network programs, "Bonanza" for NBC and "The Rebel" for Goodson-Todman.

Warner Bros. continues as the most active tv lot among the majors, with a total of 10 shows or eight hours of film weekly. Warners has the added advantage of owning all it makes. So does 20th-Fox, with two and a half hours a week in "Adventures in Paradise," "Five Fingers" and "The Many Loves of Dobie Gillis."

Columbia, through Screen Gems, is filming six half-hours per week for network and Disney an hour weekly, completing the 19½-hour total.

To Shoot Pilot of Brit. 'Dr. Pygmalion' in Gotham

London, June 23.

The pilot of a new British vidpic series is to be filmed in New York in August. Dennis Vance, a partner in the tv packaging outfit of Vance-Gruner-Connell Ltd., made the final arrangements during a recent visit to N.Y., when he directed an Oldsmobile show on NBC.

The series, "Doctor Pygmalion," is based on the casebook of Maxwell Maltz, noted plastic surgeon. Eric Portman has already been inked for the lead and Paulette Goddard is being paged for the principal femme role.

Entire series will be directed by Vance and the pilot will be made in the Hi Brown studios in N.Y. V-G-C is making the skein in association with Maltz and the remainder of the series will be filmed in Europe.

Ziv 'On Location' 60% of the Time

Over 60% of all filming done by Ziv for the upcoming season will be on location.

With four network series in production, plus four syndicated properties being filmed, Ziv crews are scattered from California to Cape Canaveral, Fla. "Sea Hunt," for example, has been produced entirely on location. The two new web-aired shows, "Space" and "Challenge," will rely heavily on location sites.

Two other networked shows, "Bat Masterson" is shot near the Lancaster Desert, some 60 miles from Hollywood, and "Tombstone Territory," filmed at Simi Lake and at the Paramount Ranch. "MacKenzie's Raiders," in syndication, is filmed at locations along California's Santa Ana River, due to the close resemblance of this area to the Rio Grande setting required for the skein.

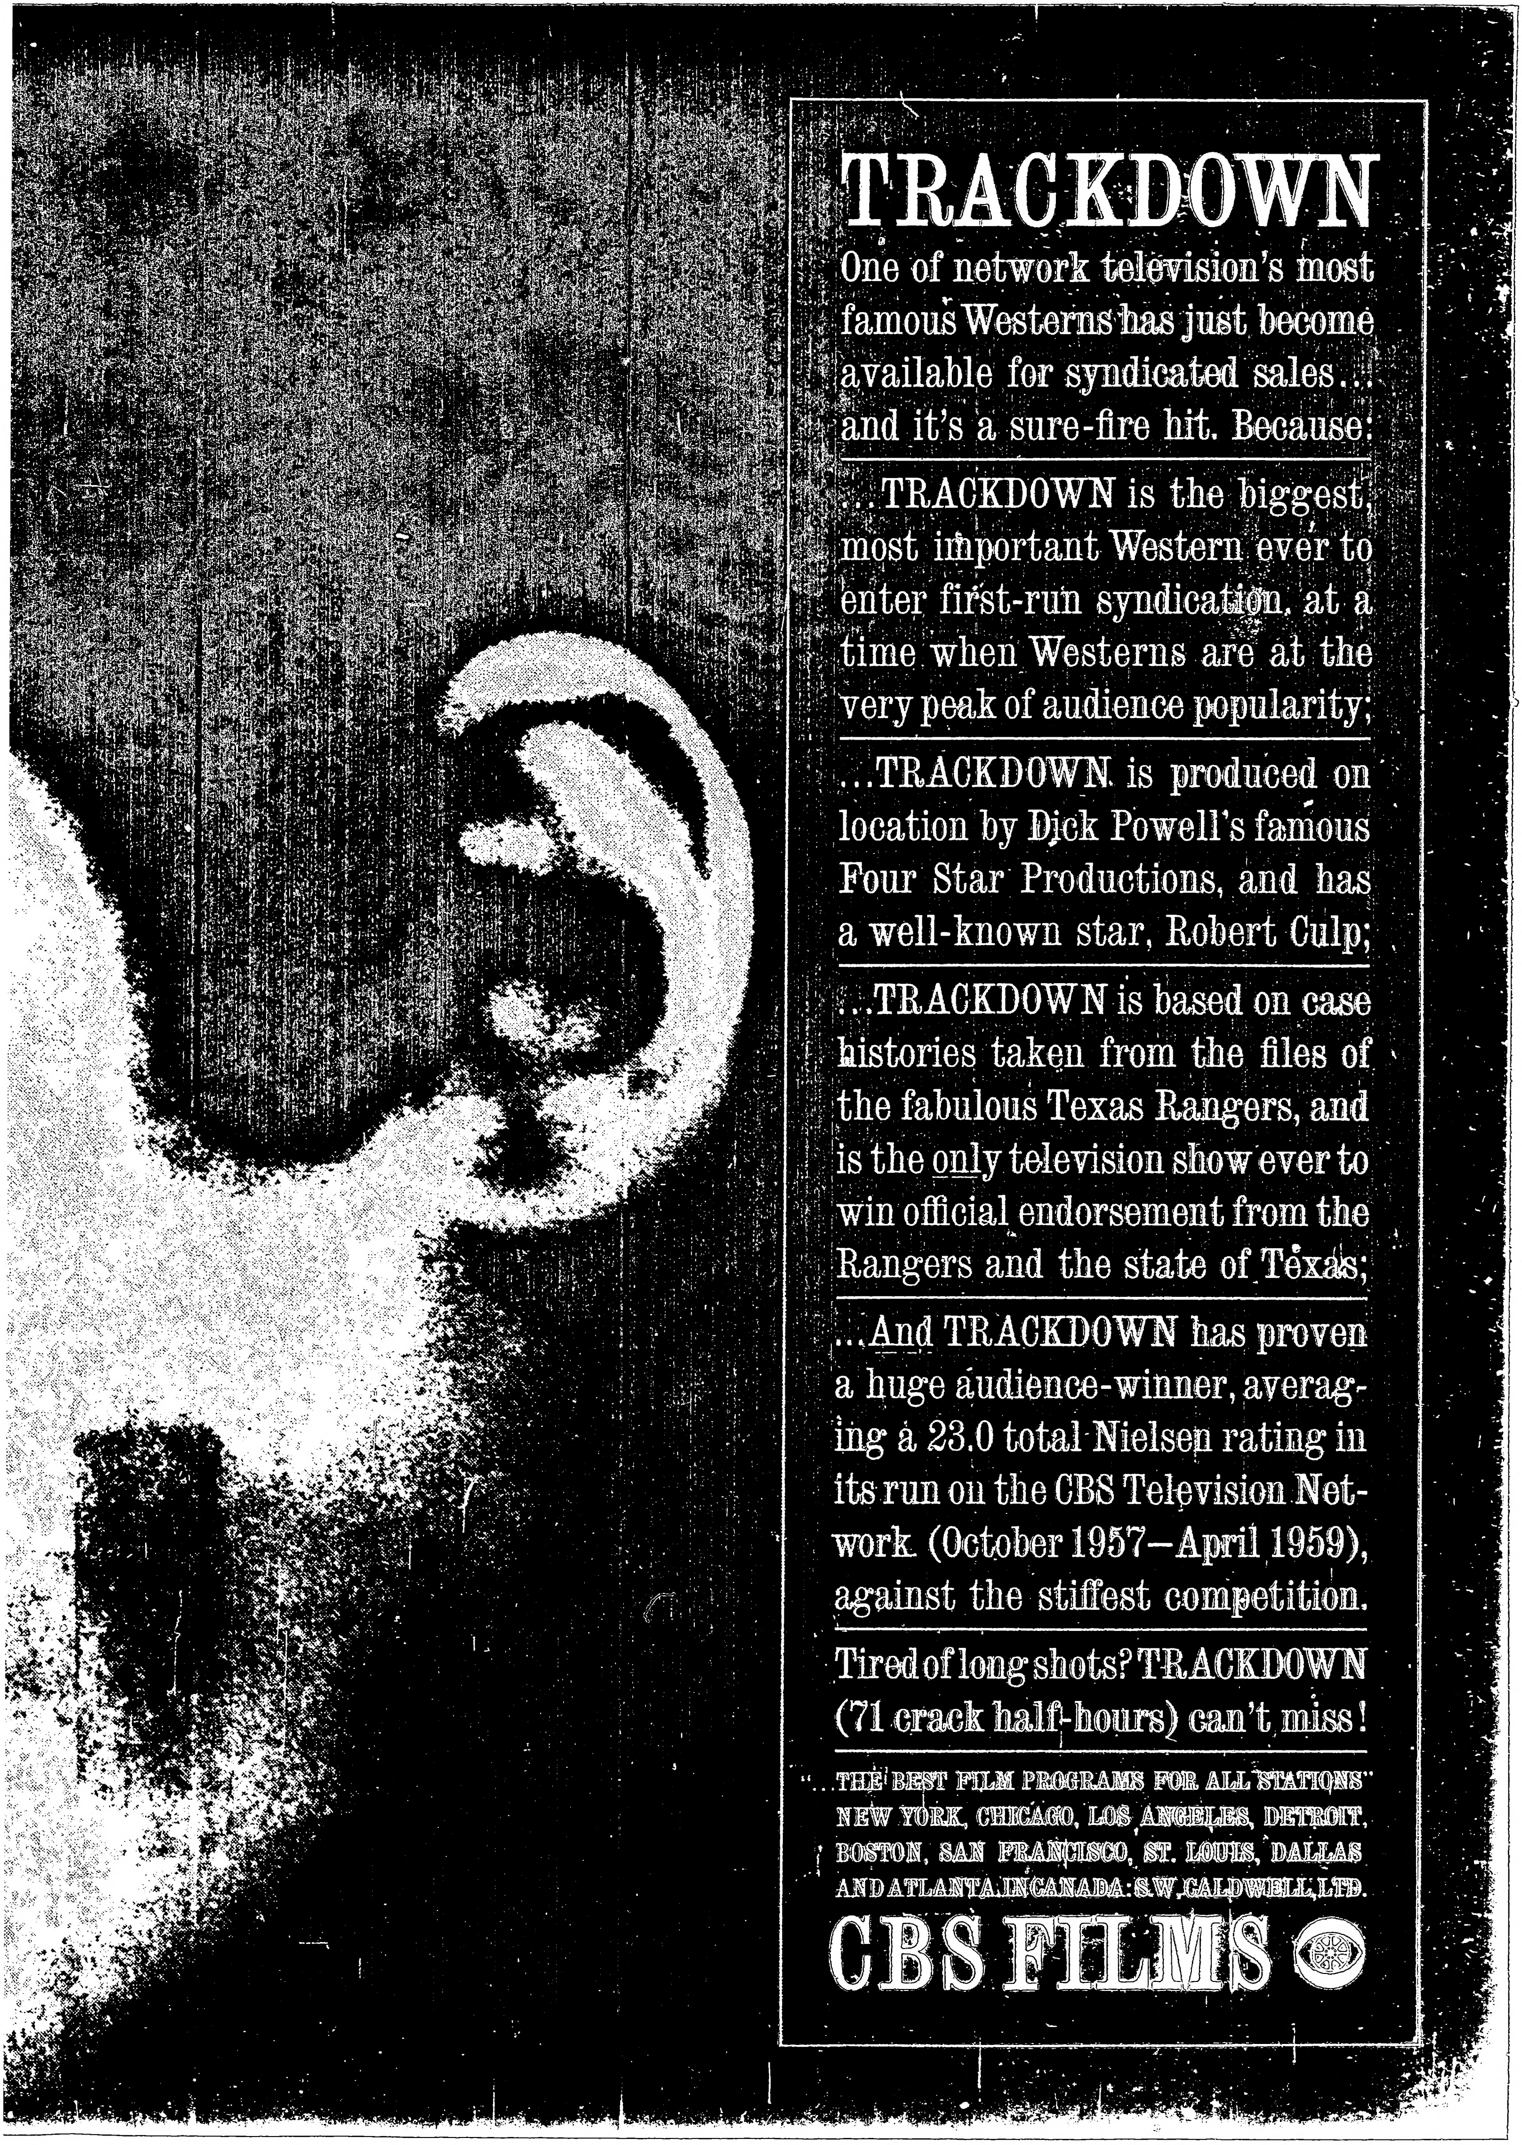
Peter Lawford Buys Out Gottlieb's 'Phoebe' Share

Hollywood, June 30.

Peter Lawford, who owned 51% of his "Dear Phoebe" teleseries in which he starred over NBC-TV in 1956 and 1957, has acquired remaining 49% from producer Alex Gottleib and attorneys Sam Norton and Jerry Rosenthal.

Price is said to be in excess of $100,000. and includes interests in 39 segments. Actor will arrange for syndication of series.

CAN'T MISS!



TRACKDOWN

One of network television's most famous Westerns has just become available for syndicated sales... and it's a sure-fire hit. Because:

...TRACKDOWN is the biggest, most important Western ever to enter first-run syndication, at a time when Westerns are at the very peak of audience popularity;

...TRACKDOWN is produced on location by Dick Powell's famous Four Star Productions, and has a well-known star, Robert Culp;

...TRACKDOWN is based on case histories taken from the files of the fabulous Texas Rangers, and is the only television show ever to win official endorsement from the Rangers and the state of Texas;

...And TRACKDOWN has proven a huge audience-winner, averaging a 23.0 total Nielsen rating in its run on the CBS Television Network (October 1957—April 1959), against the stiffest competition.

Tired of long shots? TRACKDOWN (71 crack half-hours) can't miss!

STATIONS BALK ON 'JUVENILE HEARING'

Not all the "court shows" make it in syndication.

Coast producer Dave Wolper had "Juvenile Hearing" and lensed three episodes, with Art Baker as host. Flamingo Telefilms, in its market-by-market rounds, found station buyers balking at the content, masked juves telling of their dope addiction and their prostie past, for example.

Further production has been shelved unless a public spirited regional comes along for this type of program. Flamingo also is thinking in terms of grouping the three episodes as a special for some stations. Wolper was associated as producer with "Divorce Hearing," distributed by Interstate Television.

'Shariland' Rolls In Toronto As 1-Woman Show

Toronto, June 30.

Shari Lewis, who left NBC-TV's "Hi Mom" show at the pinnacle of her popularity, now owns one third of a filmed package, starring herself in a one woman show, tentatively titled "Shariland."

Deal was set between Trans-Video Productions, Canada's newest tv film company, and Lester Lewis Associates, representing Miss Lewis. Trans-Video, which produces in Toronto, is owned by Joseph Dunkleman and Robert Maxwell Associates, who originally produced "Lassie" and is currently producing "Cannonball."

Initial series will be 26 half-hours. It already has been bought by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., with a sale in other Commonwealth markets virtually assured. Skein, slated for a fall start, is being eyed by three national sponsors for telecasting on a U. S. network, on the basis of 26 and 26 repeats.

Star's deal with Trans-Video is a six-year arrangement, calling for a minimum of 26 episodes a year. Under the deal, she's allowed to do 12 nighttime guest shots annually. In addition to owning a one-third share of the film package, she has a 50-50 split on merchandising and other subsidiary revenues.

Her regularr writers Lan Okun and Stan Taylor, joined by a Canadian scripter, will be working on the skein, currently in production. Jeremy Tarcher will be coproducer and Alan Culimore director. Show will feature Shari and her seven puppets (three new ones), songs and dancing.

DING DONG SCHOOL INTO 66 MARKETS

Sales tally on "Ding Dong School" now numbers 66 markets, with 50 of the top 75 markets accounted for the stripped series, distributed by Independent Television's Corp.'s Arrow Productions.

Show, slated for a fall start, has been bouyed by national spot deals which account for 10 of the 20 spots available weekly for the Dr. Francis Horwich starrer. National sponsors include Cocoa Marsh, Crayola, American Character Doll, Amsco, Playskool, and Rainbowkraft. Show is being offered either on vidtape or films.

Stations signing for the series include WNTA, N.Y.; WGN, Chicago; KTLA, Los Angeles; WFIL, Philadelphia; WTAE, Pittsburgh; WMAR, Baltimore; and KFJZ, Dallas.

Maschio to Schubert

Hollywood, June 30.

Johnny Maschio, vet Hollywood agent, will be production chief of Bernard L. Schubert's West Coast office. Gotham outfit, which has just set up western production headquarters, currently is making the "David Harding, Counterspy" teleseries.

Maschio, who formerly was vp of Leland Hayward Inc., a partner in the Jaffe Agency and headed his own company, also will prep two new series, "Alexander the Great" and "The New Adventures of Mr. and Mrs. North."

Regis Films Preps Flock of Entries

Hollywood, June 30

Regis Films, distributors of the animate cartoon strip, Crusader Rabbit," has made deals for a variety of vidtaped shows. Among the projected taped series are one starring Morey Amsterdam and another Artie Shaw.

The rundown includes the following:

A panel program called "Beat the Genius," in which five experts match wits with a masked genius.

An interview series presenting Artie Shaw as interviewer themed on how being a celebrity affects the celebrity's private life. Another projected vidtape series, titled the "Artie Shaw Show," stars Nina Foch and criminal attorney Gladys Root, who will discuss the "weaker sex" with Shaw.

A musical quiz show titled "Chopsticks" with John Scott Trotter as emcee and five talented youngsters at pianos.

Series of five minute episodes starring Morey Amsterdam, directed by Jack Shea, director of both the "Bob Hope Show," and the "Jerry Lewis Show."

Regis also has a film series in preparation which is a documentary-adventure skein and will be hosted by Greg (Pappy) Boyington. "Genius," "Chopsticks" and "Artie Shaw Show" are being produced by Regis in cooperation with Ross-Danzig Productions. "Morey Amsterdam" series is a solo venture by Regis, with Shull Bonsall, prez of Regis, serving as exec producer, and Lee Orgel, v.p. of sales, as producer.

WPIX REPORTS PEAK EARNINGS FOR 1959

WPIX, the N. Y. indie riding the telefilm programming bandwagon, reports gross billings for the first five months of the current year 13% over the same period in '58.

Station, a profitable operation for years now, said the five-month period ending in May was an all-time earning record. May, '59 gross billings were said to be the highest for a monthly period in the 11-year history of the Daily News outlet.

Veepee and general manager Fred Thrower attributed the rising gross curve to the success of the "blocknight" programming concept, to the station's exclusive telecasts of the N. Y. Yankee games (fully sponsored), and to the syndication sales racked up by telementaries such as "Russian Revolution" and "Cold War-Berlin Crisis."

Sales Setup Clarified By Roller Derby Co.

The Roller Derby Co. denied last week that anybody other than the Roller Derby [illegible] has the selling rights to any [illegible] or tapes of the sports event.

Salesmen in a few cities have already been franchised to sell the show, but a story, carried in VARIETY recently, that Arco features is taping the Derbies in various cities, including Los Angeles, Frisco, Minneapolis, Chicago and New York, was denied by Derby execs.

Arco had stated previously that it owned syndication rights to the Derby and that these cities were the locales of shows to be made by Arco.

'Good Earth' Pix Spec

Hollywood, June 30.

KTTV will world-preem-on-tv Metro's "The Good Earth" as a Friday night entry in its "Golden Camera" series of one-a-month local spectaculars for Riviera Convertibles.

Pic is one of the group M-G withheld from television pending theatrical rerelease and possible remake. KTTV grabbed it off for the first time for its special series. Station is now dickering with Paul Muni to host the pic, in which he starred with Luise Rainer. It copped two Oscars in 1937.

Memphis — Don Kern, longtime WHBQ salesman, has exited his post to take over the managerial reins of KWAM, Memphis, and West Memphis, Ark.

MR. SMITH GOES TO "THE LATE SHOW"...ON WCBS-TV, NEW YORK

15.5 ARBITRON RATING (11:15 P.M.-1:15 A.M.)

50.7% AUDIENCE SHARE

84.5% HIGHER THAN ITS NEAREST COMPETITOR (A NETWORK SHOW)

JAMES STEWART · JEAN ARTHUR

"Mr. Smith Goes To Washington"

The people's choice (and Schaefer's and BBDO's, too!)—"MR. SMITH GOES TO WASHINGTON," on Friday, June 26, 1959 outpolled its nearest competitor, a network program by nearly 2 to 1. "MR. SMITH GOES TO WASHINGTON" was the second feature film selected by The Schaefer Brewing Company and BBDO for "The Schaefer Award Theatre" presentations on WCBS-TV's "The Late Show" (the first was Screen Gems' "It Happened One Night").

"MR. SMITH GOES TO WASHINGTON" is just one of the many outstanding feature films available through Screen Gems, Inc.

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting, competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 150 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

WE DIDN'T THINK WE'D GO SO FAR SO FAST

The final Nielsen for June (reflecting the 24 major competitive markets) is in. And of all the many happy returns ABC-TV has enjoyed this year, this one is the happiest. And by far the most sweeping.

ABC, for the first time, enjoyed the largest average share of the evening audience.

ABC, not for the first time, was tops in four out of seven nights a week – more than the other two networks combined.

And out of the 42 evening half hours from 7:30 to 10:30 PM, NYT, ABC was No. 1 in twenty. The other two networks were first in only eleven apiece.

To tell you the truth, we're a little surprised ourselves. This is an ad we didn't figure to run until October.

But it makes for a grand summer.

Go right to the TOP–go...

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting, competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 150 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

half (20,000,000-odd) of the present number of tv homes convert to color over a five or 10-year span the gross return to tint manufacturers will be $6 billion over the same span. Ig NBC and RCA get only a get modest sixth of this total (though because of its early start in tint manufacturing it'll get far more)—that would still be a rather handsome return on an annual investment, all told, of tops $6,000,000 or $6,500,000. And what's more, the more color programs produced, combined with the completed payoff on color studio equipment, the lower the cost will get annually for NBC-RCA.

11 Tint Shows Per Week

NBC, in behalf of NBC-RCA, will air no less than 11 regular color series a week, plus a weekly average of one-shot programs.

In making the $180,000 a week tabulation, the Friday music and Sunday drama "specials" were considered regular programs along with Steve Allen's Monday hour, Arthur Murray's Tuesday half-hour and Ford Motor's 90-minute showcase the same night. Also included in the regular lineup of tintcasts are the Perry Como hour and the 30-minute "Price Is Right" on Wednesdays; the half-hour Tennessee Ernie Ford on Thursdays and whatever program it is that finally goes into the Thursday 10:30-11 slot (already pretty much tabbed for the tint treatment); the Saturday 60-minute "Bonanza" film, and the Sunday Dinah Shore show. Again, not counted were those incidental times when NBC-RCA might decide to do one of its regular black-and-white shows in tint once in awhile . . . for a little extra jazz.

There are many hidden and variable factors in estimating the cost of color, which NBC-RCA (and not the advertiser) pays. For instance, there's a difference in cost for tinting a weekly 60-minute program as opposed to a onetime 60-minute program; there's often a difference in multichrome costs of musical and dramatic hours; there's a difference in cost among various half-hour tint shows, etc.

But a rule of thumb is to charge between 15% and 20% for coloring up regular 60-minute shows, between 10 and 12% for doing the same to weekly half-hour programs and generally 18 to 20% for 60-minute one-shots and, should the occasion ever arise, about 12% for 30-minute one-shots. In arriving at the figure of $180,000 a week, the lowest tint surcharge was taken in each case.

For example, Steve Allen, costing $96,000 a week in black and white, had an additional $14,400 a week charged off to his show for tint. The half-hour Tennessee Ernie Ford stanza (which in b-and-w alone actually costs much more than other b-w half-hour programs) had a minimum $3,000 a week charged off to it via this mode of color cost reckoning. The Ford Tuesday 90-minute specials, at $250,000 per b-w copy should get its color at an additional 15% a week, instead of 18% or more, because the Ford shows are week-in-week-out and, as a result, various costs will not necessarily be duplicated as they are one-shots.

The above scale for color budgeting is not the only one that has been bandied about of late, but it appears to be the one held at the moment in widest repute. However, one reputable dissenter, trying to simplify what at best is a very complicated system, said that the highest color coverage would go is 10% on any show, adding that the 10% would not necessarily represent a percentage increase on the entire show budget but only on such things as costuming, scenery, make-up, lighting, and maybe even on fees demanded by some performers for color. This being the case, one wild stab had it that NBC-RCA's weekly tint costs wouldn't go any higher than, say, $80,000, but that figure is the result of toying with relative imponderables; NBC-RCA has never made an official breakdown of what its actual color costs are, or will be next season.

Minneapolis, June 30.

Dr. Martin Schwarzschild, Princeton U., astronomer, is coming to Minnesota in mid-July to fly General Mills' balloons to get a look at the sun via television.

His sun photo cameras are the same that he used in Minnesota in 1957 to obtain scientific data.

Hour's drive out of Minneapolis there'll be a radio-control system. Its other end will be 15 miles up in the sky aimed at the sun and dangling from one of the General Mills' balloons.

Two government agencies, the National Science Foundation and Naval Research office, will finance the projects.

It'll be the first time a man has operated a tv camera and telescope in the sky from the ground and only the second time he has operated any sky device by remote control.

to the "novelty" of multichrome. "Novelty in tv is a fiction," he said.

RCA's Denny declared that other set makers will have to get behind the color push before long because black-white set sales are so far off these days. "Interest of the other companies is developing rapidly. They'll have to follow."

Clipp said that several of the stations repped at the color meeting Friday (26) were ABC affiliates. (Possibly their taking part in color promotions will hurry ABC's entry into color production on a national scale, which, in turn, will further aid RCA's color cause.)

9,412,000 Brit. TV Sets

London, June 30.

The number of tv license holders in the U. K. jumped another 66,000 in May and the grand total is now over 9,412,000.

It is estimated that the 10,000,000 mark will be reached by next summer at the latest — possibly earlier with the expansion of the commercial tv network.

work with, Mills has done his editing off the original tapes. In most instances, the editing was of entire sequences, so that editing was fairly simple. Cuts were made in the "black" areas between dance sequences, or in the musical pauses when the dancers were off-stage and about to return for bows. These he cut by the equivalent of 10 to 15 motion picture frames.

The tough editing job came in the retakes. As one instance, he pointed out the case where one of the dancers had a high fever on the day he was to do his featured dance. He had done the final part of the dance without a hitch, but ran into trouble in the earlier portion. After a couple of takes of the early part, Mills called a halt and told him to go back to his hotel, that he thought he could edit one of the better middle takes to the acceptable finale.

The point at which the tape was to be spliced had the dancer crouched, about to spring into the air. Beginning of the latter tape had him springing into the air in a longshot. Mills was able to match the two segments of tape, from crouch to leap, successfully. The matching of the music, in synch with the picture, was more difficult, since single-system sound was used. The entire operation was finally done successfully, but only after four hours for the single splice. There were about 10 such intercuts that took upwards of 40 hours to achieve on tape, Mills says.

All told, after editing, Fox will have a total of 3 hours and 50 minutes of tape/film. Depending on how successfuly the tape-to-film transfer experiments work out on the entire output, Fox will make a move. If the film is of excellent quality, he'll place it into theatres —Mills says there's no comparison in quality between the Bolshoi feature films presently available through Artkino and the Bolshoi tapes. If not, Fox will try the television route and possibly projection right off the tapes, through tie-ins with stations or the use of mobile playback equipment. And, as an alternate possibility in the event the film quality is good, he'll use one theatre show and one or two television specials.

As regards television showings, Mills says Fox is adamant in his refusal to sell the tapes to a sponsor, insisting on his "send-a-dollar" plan under which he'd buy the time on a network, hoping to recoup time costs and his production costs of over $1,000,000 through voluntary donations from viewers. Thus far, the networks haven't seen the tapes but have shown interest. However, they're extremely downbeat about the dollar solicitation idea, worried about legal and government reaction. Fox, however, does not plan to solicit on the air itself, but present the tapes without any commercials or plugs of any kind. The solicitations would be done in paid print advertising in newspapers and magazines. He's hopeful this method will overcome the fears and objections of the networks.

"The Record Years," which was supposed to be a rundown of the pop music scene during the 1950s, dished up only a fragmentary slice of the period. The stanza showcased only a handful of the names that have been hot on the disk lists and skipped completely over the dominating music element of the past decade, namely, the young rock 'n' roll male combos. But host Dick Clark, the personable young disk jockey who has been riding high on his afternoon pop music show, rounded up enough performers to suggest the flavor of the '50s.

The juvenile accent, of course, was pronounced and the screeches from the studio audience gave an accurate index of a performer's popularity. An offhand mention by Clark of Elvis Presley, who was not on hand, set the kids screaming just as if a button was pressed. This demonstration even topped that given to Fabian, a current singing idol who was on hand. Fabian, a handsome youngster with a questionable voice, was luckily drowned out by the Dick Jacobs orch in his rendition of "Tiger."

The McGuire Sisters set the tone for the show by doing their hit tunes, such as "Sugartime," "Sincerely" and "May You" and then lightly worked over other artists' hit numbers, including "Pink Shoe Laces," "La Plume De Ma Tante" and "Personality." Fats Domino, the only authentic rhythm & blues performer on the show, was effective in a rocking number while Les Paul & Mary Ford presented their "How High The Moon" rendition complete with multiple dubbing technique.

Stan Kenton, who only has had a peripheral influence on the pop music biz, was spotlighted in a somewhat pretentious band display with a dance group doing some routine jazz ballet hoofing. Johnny Mathis, one of the few solid talents to emerge out of pop disks, was given plenty of time for his turn and did a handful of his clicks, including a plug for a current "Gypsy" showtune, "Small World, Isn't It."

The best things on the show, however, were somewhat divorced from the main theme. Stan Freberg offered a standout puppet routine in which he spoofed the music biz. It was a sharply written executed bit which apparently passed over the heads of the kids in the studio audience, judging from the reaction. Herm.

Fashion in soapers today is to make them look more respectable. Get a prof with a degree fronting and use that chestnut phrase "from the files of . . ." and then segue into sudsy agony drama.

It may be more up to date—and catch a wider femme audience with that dodge — but the broken hearted drama remains just as makeshift, overdrawn and hackneyed as in radio days.

Fronting this new stripped series, taped in Hollywood, is Dr. James A. Peterson, a marital counsellor, associated with the U. of California. Host-announcer Jim Bannon asks him a few leading questions and then the drama of how a marriage got into trouble unfolds.

Initial episode dealt with a spoiled 19-year-old girl, over-protected by her father, and not ready for life. Script by Pauline Stone and Mike Cosgrave depended on stock situations, supported by stale lines. Frank Albertson didn't appear too much in command of his role as the father; Grace Albertson was okay as his wife, while Diane Cannon as the daughter, hardly registered with conviction. But the big lack was not in the acting talent but in the scripting.

THE FOURTH COAST

With Alex Dreier, Sander Vanocur, others
Exec Producer: George Heinemann

GEM RAZOR
NBC-TV, from Chicago (live, film)
(Kenyon & Eckhardt)

NBC-TV's special on the St. Lawrence Seaway last Friday (26) was exactly the kind of high-purpose prime time feature the doctor —Robert Sarnoff—ordered last March when he laid out his plan for upgrading the industry's image. As occupant of a prime hour at the topical instance of the waterway's dedication in Montreal by President Eisenhower and Queen Elizabeth, "Fourth Coast" gathered votes from the medium, being the kind of timely documentary television can do exceedingly well. And as a soberly intelligent assessment of the new man-made inland sea it set a standard for other shows of its kind to measure up to.

Not that it achieved everything it set out to achieve, for the NBC news staff in Chi, which prepared the show, bit off slightly more than it could chew in the limits of an hour. Still, it reflects on video's vitality that the assignment was made much rougher than it had to be. The spec was no mere nosegay to the completion of an engineering project 50 years in the planning and costing half a billion dollars, but rather it was a careful look at the finished product, with all its shortcomings and troublesome implications on world trade and on the nation's economy.

By means of film made during a cruise down the St. Lawrence by British freighter Pinemore several weeks ago, the NBC special events boys did a superb job of illustrating the reach of the seaway, the locks, the bottle necks and the villages along the way that had to be moved. Where the show ran into dangerous waters was at the windup in a cataract of quickie interviews with various port authorities, which had the effect of whirlpooling the problems attached to the waterway. Nevertheless the point was well etched that certain port cities on the country's three coasts will be hurt by the fourth coast, while other cities like Chicago, Detroit, Milwaukee and Toronto figure to profit from it.

Sander Vanocur handled the on-the-spot chores with laconic skill, and Alex Dreier at the studio gave it all a sense of urgency. The

HOFFA AND THE TEAMSTERS

With James R. Hoffa, associates, etc.; Walter Cronkite, narrator
Producer: Al Wasserman
Associate producer: Jay McMullen
Director: Wasserman
60 Mins., Wed. (24) 10 p.m.
CBS-TV, from N. Y.

CBS-TV's Pubaffairs Dept. turned in an illuminating examination of James R. Hoffa's incredible reign as leader of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. And the sober fact that the web preempted "Armstrong Circle Theatre" (a commercial, no less) to present this special was another noble feather in the CBS cap.

Timely, indeed, was the "full color" unveiling of Hoffa's story in the choice time. Hoffa was scheduled to appear the next day before the McClellan Committee which had launched a new series of hearings on the union chieftain's dubious, to say the least, goings-on.

Irving Gitlin, director of pubaffairs, explained earlier that this special documentary was to be "a fair and objective report that neither approves nor disapproves of Hoffa and his activities." Only a feeble-minded individual could have watched "Hoffa and the Teamsters" and then retired for the night with any affectionate thoughts for Hoffa's method of running a labor union.

CBS-TV's cameras caught Hoffa at his desk shrewdly examining contracts and making other quick, blunt decisions regarding the fate of his union which numbers approximately 1,500,000 members. This was, perhaps, the only "upbeat" note in the Hoffa documentary. Soon however the story began to take on all the aspects of asphalt jungle conduct as viewers saw what happened to dissidents who couldn't stomach the undemocratic procedures of union leaders.

The CBS reporter's interviews with courageous oppositionists were splendid electronic journalism acomplishments. A pickup of a mass meeting of Local 299, of which Hoffa has been prexy since 1937, was a grim study in demagogic behavior.

Hoffa was hailed as a "wonderful guy" and great citizen and labor leader by many of his admiring union members but it was from the rebels, who appeared on the program, that one truly perceived the unvarnished and terrifying etching of what the narrator at one point wryly described as "an elusive and contradictory character."

Such electronic evaluations as "Hoffa and the Teamsters" are sorely needed these days. This one was a justifiable blow at a rotten phase of the labor movement. Rans.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Lawrence Welk's Dancing Party

Everything on Lawrence Welk's "Dodge Dancing Party" Saturday (27) on ABC-TV was bigger but not necessarily better. For example, instead of the usual four Lennon kiddies there were 10 and the orchestra was doubled, ditto the singers, bringing the aggregation up to 60 musicians and 40 singers.

The musical mob was Welk's way of thanking Dodge for four years of sponsorship. Show actually goes into its fifth year in July but Welk is heading for a summer hiatus hence the June 27 salute. Also on hand for the special Dodge dish were such Welk familiars as Alice Lom, Marni Nixon, Brian Siebman, Cubby O'Brien and Larry Dean. They, along with the Champagne Music Makers, cavorted to the "one-and-a-two" beat over such a variety of items as "Say It With Music," "Stars Fell On Alabama," "Full Moon and Empty Arms," "Halls Of Ivy," "The Emperor Waltz," "St. Louis Blues," "La Plume De Ma Tante," "Embraceable You," "I Love A Violin" and "God Bless America." Welk obviously programs his hour so that it includes something for everybody if everybody happens to like the maestro's dose of schmaltz. Incidentally, Lyn Murray's choral arrangements helped a lot on the big vocal assignments.

The 10 Lennon moppets and their parents were spotted midway in the show in a special song salute to the sponsor. It was a hokey sampling of commercial "togetherness" but it got the Dodge message across and that apparently is just what Welk has been able to do these past four years. Gros.

Playhouse 90

The season's finale on "Playhouse 90" was one of its most embarrassing clinkers.

The teleplay by Steven Gethers, adapted from a novel by John Phillips, came as close to a parody of F. Scott Fitzgerald as has been produced. Unfortunately, producer Peter Kortner, director Ralph Nelson and his cast were deadly serious.

Tone of the piece was an attempt at Fitzgerald 20 years later. But the characters and the dialog were downright comic at times. When Tony Randall, as an ex-GI attending college, talked about wanting to know how the rich people live and wanting to get a taste of it, and when he mistook the butler for his host—well, how corny can you get?

Or when Margaret O'Brien, as a simpering sexpot, marries the wrong man out of pity and then leaves him in the realization of what she's done, strong-willed Judith Anderson, as a Machiavellian magazine publisher who plans other people's lives, says, "Well, she finally made a decision anyway." And the confrontation scenes between Randall and Miss O'Brien looked like Sid Caesar's love-at-first-sight bits with Imogene Coca.

At any rate, this one was the old yarn about the struggling college boy who defends his integrity against the ravishments and enticements of wealth and power but finally gives up all for love and a million-dollar future. Naturally he double-crosses his best friend, who ends up shooting himself. Full of remorse, our boy nonetheless goes on with the wedding, only to note that his happy bride is already making eyes at someone else.

This was a hapless task for the director and cast. The best Randall could do was to posture his caricature of a role. Miss O'Brien managed to appear properly sexy, also properly moronic. Miss Anderson did the best she could with her unbelievable part. Fay Wray managed some good moments as an alcoholic, and Ron Ely did fairly well as the buddy who does away with himself. Best of the lot was Jack Mullaney as a sympathetic

THE TRINDER BOX

With Tommy Trinder, Phil Silvers, Dickie Valentine, Sheila Buxton, Janet Ball, Irene Handl, Nat Temple, Mac Ronay, The Reindrops, Hugh Lloyd, Pat Coombs, Sandra Wickenden, Dancers
Producer: G. B. Lupino
Writers: Denis Goodwin, David Ellis Orchestra: Nat Temple
60 Mins., Sat. 7:30 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Phil Silvers' visit to London garnered a hefty acreage of press coverage and pre-sold his guest appearance in a new BBC series, "The Trinder Box." Rarely can the comedian have been more welcome with this, his last appearance as Sergeant Bilko. His crosstalk with Tommy Trinder as his stooge was one of the few bright spots in a loosely-knit and pretty uninspired show. Trinder is one of Britain's best tv comedians but on this occasion he seemed singularly at sea and if the series is to make impact he will have to sharpen up his scriptwriters. In the guest spot with Silvers he wisely allowed the Yank to have most of the fat but it might have been even wiser had he permitted Silvers to do a solo.

For the rest Trinder appeared in some unfunny sketches, notably a skit on a quiz game called "What Did You Get Past The Customs?" and as an outside broadcaster interviewing typical "men in the street," which even Irene Handl could not save from disaster. He also sang a duet with himself, "Thank Heaven For Little Girls," which was a rash move. A filmed appearance of Eartha Kitt and some pleasant singing by Dick Valentine and Sheila Buxton were agreeable entries, but the best of the other acts was Mac Ronay, a zany magician whose tricks constantly go wrong. This type of act has already been popularized by Tommy Cooper, but Ronay's lugubrious appearance as his act goes wrong was fresh and funny.

The Raindrops (three men and a girl) harmonized pleasantly, Nat Temple did a slick clarinet solo and Janet Ball and Sandra Wickenden scored with a dancing act, based on "Me and My Shadow." But a series starring an ace comedian has to be funny or it falls flat on its face and the first edition of "The Trinder Box" was just not amusing enough. Audley Southcott's designs were okay and G. B. Lupino's direction was as slick as the available material permitted. Rich.

THE WILD BIRD

With Leslie Caron, Maurice Denham, Mogens Wieth, Hermione Baddeley, Clive Morton, Thomas Heathcote, Miriam Karlin, Nora Nicholson, Jessica Spencer, Peter MacKriel, Hugh Mathias, Ivor Dean, Barbara Barnett, Jean Theobald, Gillian Hume, Pamela Binns.
Director: Peter Potter
Writer: Jean Anouilh
TV Adaptation: Ivor Dean
Music: John Hotchkis
90 Mins., Tues., 8:30 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

Though there isn't greatness in Jean Anouilh's "La Sauvage," there was a touch of it in Leslie Caron's portrayal of Therese Tarde in this skilled tv adaptation. All that was lacking for perfection, in fact, was a certain physical force in a couple of angry moments; for the rest, she was just right for the pure heroine of the tragi-comic Cinderella-story inversion, so desperately troubled by the feeling that she won't find true happiness without pain.

The play itself can't be voted a major tv triumph inasmuch as some of the earlier stuff appeared to be played in a vacuum rather than forming part of the wide world's affairs, while now and again the dialog and situation had the added drawback of revealing their footlights origin. But the piece became more and more compelling as it progressed. The overall result can be counted a success.

The story, to recap briefly, tells how Therese, violinist in a cheap cafe orchestra, falls in love with talented composer Florent (Mogens Wieth), much to the mercenary delight of her amoral mother (Hermione Baddeley) and father (Maurice Denham). Though Therese tries to shake off her feeling that life with Florent cannot give true happiness because he has not known suffering, she fails. And everything ends unhappily ever after.

Miss Caron had firstrate support all the way round, notably from Mogens Wieth who had to deliver some deadly lines and from Maurice Denham as the caricature of a father. Without compiling a catalog, Hermione Baddeley must be praised, too, together with Thomas Heathcote as an agonized lover. Everything in the production department, including the specially composed music, was tops. Erni.

THE MODEL MARRIAGE

With Mai Zetterling, Paul Rogers, Alec McCowen, Roland Curram, Susan Westerby
Producer: Sydney Newman
Director: James Ferman
Writer: Jacques Deval
65 Mins., Sun., 10:5 p.m.
ABC-TV, from Manchester

Exploiting that Continental technique of mingling comedy with drama that's resulted in at least one masterpiece—the movie "Les Jeux Interdits"—this "Armchair Theatre" offering from ABC-TV provided a very acceptable variation on the triangle theme. Biggest tribute that can be paid, perhaps, is to say that it didn't die under that customarily lethal hammerblow of English adaptation: in fact, apart from an overuse of deliberately ambiguous dialog, the translation did the subject proud.

It's a slender tale: Louise (Mai Zetterling) and Charles (Paul Rogers) are a childless French couple wed 14 years. Louise and Maurice (Alec McCowen), who's been a friend of the family but wants to be much more to the distaff side, plot to poison Charles. Charles discovers all and, stunned by shock, deliberately drinks the doctored tea — which hasn't been doctored after all because Louise has changed her mind. After dismissing Maurice, the lady has a showdown with her husband and leaves, only to return and resume the normal relationship.

The early scenes between the would-be lovers — Maurice, it should be explained, hasn't yet got to first amorous base—came over as highly droll and piquant, while drama entered with considerable impact on the husband's discovery of what's afoot. Much was due to the playing, with Mai Zetterling scoring delightfully as the wronging wife and Alec McCowen, looking somewhat like Chaplin's Monsieur Verdoux, playing up skilfully as the yet-to-grow-up lover. But Paul Rogers gained the day with his sympathetic portrayal of the stodgy, kind-hearted and sincere Charles. Rest of the small cast was competent, while production—apart from a couple of boobs early on—was firstrate. Erni.

CONCENTRATION

With David Gell
Director: Gordon Fleming
30 Mins., Tues., 8:00 p.m.
Granada-TV, from Manchester

"Neither a general knowledge quiz nor a panel game, but an exciting test of memory and observation," says Granada-TV. It depends what you mean by "exciting"; but the fact is "Concentration," which is being aired twice weekly on consecutive nights, certainly measures up well alongside most other tv contests.

Equipment involved consists of a board carrying the numbers one to 30. Each of two contestants calls two numbers in turn. If the second number reveals, on being swivelled, the name of an object corresponding with the object behind the first number called, then the caller gets that object as a gift. Additionally, the number slot swivels again to reveal a clue to an overall puzzle. The contestant who first solves the puzzle wins the game.

The concentration part of "Concentration"—apart from that required to follow the would-be description above—lies in remembering what's behind the numbers called in previous rounds. The effort pays off handsomely: one man received, in the issue under review, goods including a beaver coat, a couple of overnight cases, dancing lessons, a bag containing 400 sixpence, a holiday in France, a refrigerator, perfume and a drinks trolley.

Emcee David Gell steered the game smoothly and pleasantly through all the intricacies described, and others undescribed. Production was smart. Erni.

Madison Ave. Eyes Warden Agency's Campaign on Tobaccoless Smoke—On Other Fronts With Ad Execs

H. W. Warden Associates, one of the newer, smaller agencies, was making the big news in a quiet and humid ad week.

The billings lightweight with offices on Third Ave. set up a rumble in Dayton, O., that had reverberations on Madison Ave., especially in the tobacco precincts.

Dayton is the campaign test market for one of Warden's two clients, Vanguard cigarets, a tobaccoless smoke made by Bantob Products Corp. The opening salvo via tv, radio and newspapers sent tobacco account men scurrying after kinnies and tearsheets and monitor service reports. If some were showing little more than curiosity over the new entry they were still impressed by a bold and fresh creative approach. With "Now smoke without fear," as the key line, copy flails away like Inegmar at tobacco's current soft spots (Vanguards have "no tobacco tars, no nicotine, and more important, no arsenic"). But, combined with the hard copy in the opening print ad (double-truck in Dayton newspapers), is a departure in design as hip as anything out of Doyle-Dane-Bernbach. A page and a half are given to illustration and white space. Full newspaper page photo is closeup twosome, boy and girl (old enough to smoke) enjoying one Vanguard and, obviously, each other. Soft focus fore and background are set against grainy figures. And half of the facing copy page is white space.

Agency head H. W. Warden was executive veep at Kastor, Ferrell, Chesley & Clifford and before that a senior veep at Ogilvy, Benson & Mather. His other client is Salada Tea for Potato Plus, instant mashed potatoes, and an unannounced product about to test. It's understood from a trade source that Warden will be getting Junket quick fudge mix, another Salada product, from Sullivan, Stauffer, Colwell & Bayles. The Potato Plus campaigning is in spot tv in upper New York, New England and eastern Pennsylvania.

Vanguard campaign is not likely to bring a tobacco client into the Warden shop, but the splash may well get the agency more money than the maker in the long run.

Nelson Carter to N. Y.

Nelson Carter, veepee and manager of the L.A. office of Foote, Cone & Belding, is being moved to N. Y. for in undisclosed berth with the agency. His successor here is Louis Scott, veepee and supervisor on the Sunkist account.

Another change is the replacement of John Little by William Matthews as manager of the FCB office in Frisco. Little will be assigned another post with the agency. Ed Cashman continues as veepee and head of the agency's Hollywood office.

Tele Food Billings Up

Food and grocery manufacturers increased spot and network billings from $60,300,000 in the first quarter of '58 to $77,600,000 in the first quarter '59, says TvB. Breakdown for the first quarter of this year is $31,000,000 for network and $45,600,000 for spot.

Ogilvy for Fund

Ogilvy, Benson & Mather prexy David Ogilvy will chair a drive for public support of New York's Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts. It's part of the Center's $75,000,000 campaign. Ogilvy is a member of the N. Y. Philharmonic board of directors.

Stauffer Eases Up

Veteran broadcast adman Donald Stauffer of Sullivan, Stauffer, Colwell & Bayles goes into semi-retirement. One of the agency's founders 13 years ago, he will be taking more time away from the office but continuing as vice chairman of the board and a consultant. Stauffer has been in advertising for 30 years, was with Ruthrauff & Ryan, BBDO and headed Young & Rubicam's radio department. During World War II, he took leave to direct radio activities of the Office of War Information in Washington.

Switches: Dorothy Kaplan, who formerly handled publicity for Revlon's nail polish arnd lipsticks, takes over advertising of same with exit of Margo Mallory.

David J. Hopkins leaves N. Y. office of McCann-Erickson to manage the agency's Los Angeles HQ. Hopkins is a veep and was an account director in N. Y. Before joining McCann, he was sales director of CBS Columbia. Same time, Frederick H. McCrea, a vice president who has been with the agency since 1919, takes over as manager of the San Francisco office.

Benton & Bowles group head Olive Lillehei joins Compton in a similar capacity.

David A. Harris, once a senior time buyer at Ruthrauff & Ryan, joins Meeker Co., station reps, as an account exec.

Sal J. Agovino, formerly a broadcast supervisor at McCann-Erickson, joins the radio sales staff of H-R Representatives.

New Biz: Northam Warren Corp., Stamford, Conn., to Ellington & Co. for advertising of Peggy Sage cosmetics and Odorono deodorant. Ken Hurd will be account exec.

New Stripers: Three promotions in Ted Bates tv-radio department. John E. Kucera, director of network relations, becomes a vice president. John Calley, director of new program development, and William E. Watts, director of commercial film production, become assistant veeps.

New veeps at BBDO are Mortimer Berkowitz Jr., and Joseph Henrici. Former is account group head on General Mills. Latter is an account exec.

Dunay, Hirsch & Lewis executive art director Bernard Bloom is elected a veep.

FM's D.C. Current

Washington, June 30.

Uppercrust nature of FM audience is pointed up in Pulse Inc. survey for several Washington FM stations.

Study, as reported by Ben Strouse of WWDC here, showed that 40.3%—or nearly 230,000—of the homes in the Washington area have FM receivers.

Of these homes, 37% of the heads of families are college graduates with an additional 1.7% having done post graduate work. Another 12.4% had some college training, and an additional 33.5% completed high school.

Altogether, 67.4% of these families had annual incomes above $5,000; 3.7% had earnings of $15,000 or more; 13.9%, $10,000 to $15,000; 27.3%, $7,500 to $10,000. Another 9.7% refused to answer this question.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

In Atlanta for the North American Christian Convention, which ens today (Wed.), was the cast of the television show "Homestead, S.A.," created in 1954 to "depict Christian principles in a family tting."

Show's cast is made up of 17 people, all members of one family. is viewed in Atlanta on WSB-TV on Sundays and is exposed on ations in 30 states.

Four members of cast—the Vernon Brothers Quartet—were minters in the Christian Church before resigning their ministries to iter television.

Don Vernon said their resignations were prompted because tv gave em a way to reach more people with the Christian ministry. Makg up the Vernon family are the quartet, Don, B.J., and twins Bill d Bob; Mr. and Mrs. Dallas Vernon; the quartet members' wives; d the seven children of Bill, Bob, and B.J.

Vernon said program is financed "through gifts and contributions" the Christian churches. He estimated quartet has traveled more an 250,000 miles presenting to the churches the "challenge" of helpg support the program. More than 5,000 official delegates were in tlanta for convention.

Recent VARIETY item that the Chicago Tribune "has a policy barring ll-letter mentions excepting for the Trib-owned WGN stations" was is-stated. The reference was only to news stories and was not to have ertained to any department on the newspaper other than city side. urthermore, the Trib city desk has not a stated policy, as such, but as made such a practice of not crediting specific stations with news reaks that it amounts to the same thing.

A syndicate headed by Anthony Santucci has founded a new 1,000-att daytime AM station in Chicago Heights, Ill., which is expected begin broadcasting on or about Aug. 1. Santucci, who previously wned WCHI in that city and latterly was chief engineer for WBEE in arvey, Ill., is prexy of a board that includes Anthony DiCarlo, Gus . Hahn and Anthony D'Amico.

Station has signed veteran Chicago personality Linn Burton to host daily show and is dickering also with Kay Westfall. Chi comic Ron IcAdam has been inked for a berth on the sundowner.

Nielsen, TAM Merger

London, June 30.

Britain's two leading tv audience measurement companies are to merge. They are A. C. Nielsen Co. and the Attwood Group of Companies which issues Television Audience Measurement (TAM)).

Two companies will be formed, one for Great Britain and Ireland and the other for the continent. Bedford Attwood will be chairman of both companies and two Nielsen directors will join the TAM board. Nielsen Television Index Service closed down after its report for the week ending June 28.

ABC-TV's 'Oh Boy'

ABC-TV will be doing the Lambeth rock 'n' roll this summer. Replacement show going Thursdays 7:30 to 8 p.m. next week is "Oh Boy," a musical skein produced in England and featuring English rock and roll groups.

Touring American rock and rollers will do occasional guest shots.

Vicks, Peter Paul Into Hr. 'Lineup'

Slowly the barriers sponsors have set up against the new hourlong film shows for '59-'60 are being lowered. Last week, NBC came through with its first sponsor blood on the "Laramie"-"Bonanza"-"Riverboat" trio, and this week CBS-TV wrapped up a five-ply partial sponsorship for its hourlong Wednesday version of "Lineup."

Vicks Chemical and Peter Paul each bought an alternate third of the detective stanza and both deals call for alternate week exposure over 26 weeks. In these instances, a third sponsorship means that Vicks and PP will get a full-minute apiece on one week and a billboard the next.

Coming in on two, three and four week deals for "Lineup" are Manhattan Shirts, Corning Glass and Glidden, a paint firm.

"Lineup" begins in its new elongated form on Sept. 30. Even with the sponsorships lined up, show is still a substantial distance from SRO for the moment.

Vicks, by the way, made a heavy daytime purchase at CBS. Its pact calls for an initial 13 weeks in the fall and winter (when the cough and cold remedies do their biggest biz).

One week, Vicks will have a quarter hour in each of the following: "I Love Lucy" reruns, "Top Dollar" and "As the World Turns." On the following week the three quarter hours to go to "For Better or Worse," "Verdict Is Yours" and "Edge of Night." Sponsor has options for renewal after the first cycle.

KLZ Radio's Nighttime Moneybags

CBS Affiliate Bans Rock 'n' Roll, Steps Up Local Shows and Grabs Sponsor Coin

By T. BIDWELL McCORMICK

Denver, June 30.

The long time bugaboo of unprofitable nighttime radio has been given a smack in the kisser by Denver's pioneer radio station, KLZ, local CBS outlet, according to Charlie Roberts, program director.

Banning rock 'n' roll entirely from its programming and maintaining a consistent policy of "sweet" popular and classical music, interspersed with locally produced shows of local interest, the station for the past five years reversed the experience of many radio stations throughout the country and turned evenings into prime commercial time.

By developing and nurturing a loyal and measurable following, against the intense evening competition of other media, KLZ has achieved what every station has wished for but seldom found—nighttime radio sponsors.

Secret of KLZ's success, according to Roberts, lies in the popularity of its evening shows coupled with the fact that nary a record reeks of rock 'n' roll. Among the most popular of locally produced shows is Starr Yelland's "Party Line," five times a week at a highly competitive hour, which KLZ claims makes sense. A veteran panel moderator and news and sports commentator, Yelland has been on the air since 1940. "Party Line" permits Denver citizens to voice their opinions on all subjects from high altitude baking to H-bombs. The program is an open forum, a live "Letters to the Editor" column where Vox Populi finds room for expression of divergent views, attitudes and interests of a busy and growing metropolis.

Interspersed with music and comment by the moderator, and punctuated by rebuttals of statements made, "Party Line" frequently provides hilarious entertainment as well as sound information for the hourlong listeners.

Another local program, now four years old, is "Denver at Night," aired five nights a week at 6:30-7 and again at 9:30-10. This is a panorama of the living city, its drama and spectacle, as seen through the eyes of reporters at police headquarters, the general hospital, the scene of an accident or the excitement of some special event of city-wide interest.

In Roberts' opinion, there is a vast potential audience for quality evening radio in every city and community, but success comes from long and patient effort consistently maintained.

Printers Row Disrupts Television House, Hq's. Of British Com'l TV

London, June 30.

Television House, headquarters of Britain's commercial tv, was the hot-spot of a row on Friday (26), sparked off by the printers' dispute. An emergency issue of TV Times, the twice-weekly sheet which prints the commercial tv programs, was produced by private enterprise and the idea caused a rumpus.

Several hundred men, allegedly members of unions involved in the quarrel over extra finance and shorter working hours, picketed TV House carrying acrimonious posters. Some busted into the building protesting against the publication of the paper. Half-way through the squabble a lively character turned on a hose and the sedate foyer of TV House was inches deep in water. Traffic was halted and scores of people settled down to gander the unexpected interlude. The printers' dispute goes on, regardless.

with movie director Fritz Lang and that was a departure from the cliche inasmuch as it was the first item of this series which didn't concern an actor. Friedrich Luft, top film critic in Berlin, and Guido Schuette of NWRV-Hamburg acted as interviewers.

Questions chiefly centered around Lang's impressive film past and his most memorable pix such as "Metropolis," "Nibelungen" and "M" which all made German film history. With regard to his film work in postwar Germany, the 68-year old pic creator had this to say: "When I returned from Hollywood the first thing to do was to convince the German distributors that they still can make money through me. That's why I accepted the directorial jobs of those strictly commercial remakes of 'Tiger' of Eschnapur' and 'Indian Tomb.'"

His statement was a characteristic disclosure of the current world film situation in general and the present attitude of the German film industry in particular. After this interview, his 1932 German classic, "M", was shown. Copy of this interesting pic (with Peter Lorre, Rosa Valetti, Leonhard Steckel, Theodor Loos, Fritz Odemar and Ellen Widmann of whom some have long passed away) left much to be desired. With considerable footage missing and the whole thing in poor technical shape, it made a rather distorted impression. Hans.

UNO, DUE, TRE
(One, Two, Three)
With Ugo Tognazzi, Raimondo Vianello, Paul Steffen Dancers, Mario Bertolazzi Orchestra, Lynn Shaw, Annie Gorassini, guests.
Writers: Scarnicci and Tarabusi
Director: Vito Molinari
60 Mins., Sun., 9 p.m.
RAI-TV, from Rome

Started several years ago as a summer replacement, this comedy-variety stanza is rapidly becoming the most popular lightweight item of the Italian tv year. Appeal is principally centered in Ugo Tognazzi and Raimondo Vianello, whose video-attuned comedy sense helps rate them above some better-known confreres, at least as viewed on the little screen. Also a contributing factor to show's success: the sharp barbs it tosses at RAI-TV via satires and takeoffs on other programs, which constitute a very risible safety valve for the local television enterprise, too often bound to convention.

Show caught typically and topically took off two recent local events (and tv shows): the national bike races and a RAI teleseries about "The Woman at Work" — both good for much tomfoolery by the comics. Also on the pan: two w.k. RAI political commentators. Good guest roster included film star Sylva Koscina, Carmen Sevilla, an unbilled but excellent French pianist-satirist in the Borge manner, and singers Anita Traversi and Rino Salviati.

In between numbers, Paul Steffen dancers and soloists Budd Thompson and Evelyn Greaves provided their usual competent and imaginative terp numbers. Direction, lighting and other credits good. Hawk.

JUKE BOX JURY
With David Jacobs, Eric Sykes, Shani Wallis, Pete Murray, Mandy Miller Producer: Russell Turner
25 Mins., Mon., 7:30 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

As a gimmick allowing new pop disks to be played, this BBC-TV series just about makes the grade if the item under review was a representative specimen. Notion is that a chairman (David Jacobs) asks a panel to listen to a platter, then solicits comments before asking for a vote on whether the disk will make or miss the hit parade.

Much of the entertainment value resides in the facial reactions of the panel members while listening and in the wit of their dialog when commenting. This time neither factor was exactly forte. Highlight was to hear the condemnation of a Dinah Washington number when Miss Washington was herself in camera range without the panel being aware of her presence.

It's one of those programs that the viewer can take or leave but which could occasionally spark into real brightness. Erni.

Warner Bros. features are amazing. They never wear out with either audiences or sponsors.* According to Wally McGough:

"From 9:30 in the morning to well past midnight, there's no hour that we can't program Warner Bros. features and get top results. They've given us fantastic mileage in the three years we've been showing them. Believe me, they pay off!"

Consistently high ratings and enthusiastic sponsor backing have made Warner Bros. features a "hot item" year after year in TV markets everywhere. With big stars in well-known post '48 films,* these features offer you an opportunity to fatten ratings and profits. Why not call us right now for information?

3 Webs Get CBC Pool

When it came time on Friday (26) for the official dedication of the St. Lawrence Seaway, the three U. S. television networks sat back and, doing it the easy, though hardly satisfactory, way, let the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. feed them a "pooled" program of the event. Failure of NBC and ABC to preface the dedication by Queen Elizabeth and President Eisenhower with some interpretation infinitely lessened the true magnitude of the event and the Seaway itself. And in CBS' case, it unwisely took a prefatory hour, mostly on film, from CBC, which was by and large a pompous dud.

CBS began at 10 a.m. with the preface and was joined at 11 by ABC for duplicate coverage of the speechmaking, etc. NBC came off the best comparatively by delaying its coverage until 1 p.m., at which time it was able to slightly edit the video tape and turn a rambling 60-minute hoopla into a more cogent 30-minute fest.

CBC played it a bit preciously when it came to explaining and demonstrating the marvelous feats of construction and engineering that went into the Seaway. Both the words of the narrator and the background music were to grandiose, especially in light of the unimaginative film that was used.

As to the dedication proper, it was just another dedication the way it came off. Camerawork was, at best, competent but unimaginative. Art.

Co-Production

more active than most of the telefilmeries with the exception of National Telefilm Associates and ITC. CBS Films' last co-production was "Rendezvous," with 26 of the 39 episodes made in England. The series, despite a hefty Rheingold regional, initially had some tough sledding on the market-by-market trail. Future CBS Films-British ties remain to be seen.

Other than the aforementioned telefilmeries, the remaining houses making British coproduction deals are few and far between. Ziv will have an occasional one. Screen Gems did "Ivanhoe" in England. Although the series has been telecast in the U.K. and elsewhere abroad, SG has yet to release it in the U. S.

Why is there so little reciprocity? The question kicks up a storm on both sides of the Atlantic. Key issues in the debate concern quality, so-called "insular tastes," prejudices of American sponsors, lack of sophistication of the American public, etc.

The arguments go 'round and 'round—until a coproduction deal evolves into a "Robin Hood." Then, the chorus from both sides of the Atlantic is "who said it couldn't be done?"

the expected gross, projected from the foreign operations of Television Programs of America, the company acquired by ITC.

Mandell made two network sales in Japan as well as third-year renewal of "Lassie" and second year renewals of "The Lone Ranger" and "Fury."

Twelve series were sold in the Philippines, which along with the six shows already running give it SRO status there. In addition to the station sales to the Republic Eelectronics Co.—owner of the two channels there—"New York Confidential" was sold to Helene Curtis and "Your Star Showcase" to Parker Pen.

for all crews and technical personnel.

Webs have been hesitant about entering production directly through fear of jurisdictional tie-ups with their live personnel. But both NABET and IBEW have lost critical strikes over the past year and a half; RTDG, repping the live directors, has lost ground. Hence, the webs have gotten over their fears of union problems.

CNP still hasn't inked with the IA craft unions, and as long as it doesn't own its own studio, sees no need to. It's headquartered principally at Metro, so that the studio, using its own personnel, handles all below-line hiring, payrolls and accounting as part of its service. But CNP can now hire actors, directors and writers directly instead of through some intermediary company.

Subsid's assignment to below-the-line filming on all NBC house shows has been a long time a coming. Alan Livingston, now NBC Coast programming v.p., first broached the idea when he became prexy of Kagran Corp., CNP's predecessor. Idea was tabled because the Bob Kintner regime then taking over NBC's operation frowned on network production, preferring outside buys. But now the Earl Rettig-Frank Cleaver telefilm operation will get its first crack at making like a production company.

Dallas — James H. Foster has been named veepee of the McLendon Corp., headed by Gordon McLendon, which is engaged in radio, television, film production and exhibition. Foster will assist in the fiscal management of new and existing projects.

in the area of special programs, ankled the web to join Danny Seymour at J. Walter Thompson.

But apparently CBS has no intention of drastically reversing its position. When Lewine himself was offered an attractive job on the outside, CBS made it worth his while to stick around. Similarly, it's understood, Leland Hayward indicated he would like to get out of his contract as exec producer on specials, but again the network persuaded him to stay.

A few weeks back CBS had turned its back on something like 15 new programs that were in the works in which the network had an ownership stake. But some of these have been restored to the roster and are now on the drawing board. On top of that CBS let it be known this week that it was moving into new areas on creativity, with Irving Gitlin designated as program executive: creative projects.

house, NBC-TV's Sunday afternoon program picture is taking on shape. Web is seeking "Sky King" kidfilms for the 5:30 slot. If NBC can't get the stanza, it's going to shoot for "General Electric College Bowl," which has been on CBS-TV.

For the time being—depending on the future status of "Omnibus" —NBC has basketball pencilled in for the 2-4 p.m. Sabbath time and Screen Gems' filmed golf show (now three-fourths sold) from 4-5.

If "Omnibus" is sufficiently sold for fall, web plans to bump golf and put the egghead stanza in either at 4-5 or 4:30-5:30. ("Omni's" 4:30 status and whether Brinkley goes 5 or 5:30 depends on whether "Sky King" or "G-E College Bowl" fall through as the 5 o'clock entry).

cause it believed that the recent resurrection of the name Mafia, with all its evil connotations, was too pat an answer to organized crime in the USA today." NBC, the ad continued, "made the quiet, objective conclusion: that the Mafia is not a fact today; it is a fable; it is 'a foolish and distracting myth.'"

To date CBS-TV has nettled the USSR because of the former's presentation of "Plot to Kill Stalin"; it angered the Cubans with a charge of Communism, and now the Order of Italian Sons and Daughters of America have their dander up over "Playhouse 90" and other web presentations.

CBS caustically observed this week that it anticipated squawks regarding its upcoming "Invitation to Learning" series "A Pride of Isms" covering all the "isms" from Aristophanes to Karl Marx.

Dr. George Crothers, producer of the series, noted that a number of "isms" have been excluded from the series starting Sunday (5), among them theism, nudism, alcoholism, and cannibalism. Also extirpated from the list are Nazism, McCarthyism and Free Silverism.

Complaints regarding omissions from "A Price of Isms" should be directed to Lyman Bryson, who presides over the lofty weakly pow-wows, now in their 19th year and aired over some 87 stations but still regarded with considerable affection as the web's "69th most popular program."

Nix Bill to Curb Gyp Repairmen

Chicago, June 30.

Illinois Senate has voted down a bill passed by the House to license tv repairmen in this state as a means of keeping unscrupulous ones from fleecing innocent setowners. Measure was also seen as a means of raising around $500,000 in revenue for the state.

Bill, as it read in the House, provided that service dealers pay $55 a year for their licenses, tv technicians $15 and radio men $10. Opponents of the bill were freelance and parttime repairmen who, because they would not be licensed, felt they would be driven out of business.

The measure would have placed the tv service industry directly under the supervision of the State Dept. of Registration and Education. Licensed repairmen would have had to write out detailed bills in quadruplicate for every job performed, itemizing the parts used, the time devoted and the costs of each part and of labor.

Bill Ray Exits NBC Chi To Run Own Station

Chicago, June 30.

Bill Ray, longtime manager of NBC's central division news shop, is preparing to leave the company around Aug. 1 to take over station KASI in Ames, Iowa. Ray is purchasing the 1,000-watter from former Chi deejay Bill Evans for $100,000, pending FCC clearance. Evans, who bought the station around 18 months ago, is understood to be retiring for reasons of health.

Ray joined NBC in 1933 and four years later became head of the web's central division press department. In 1943 he became head of news and special events for the net in Chicago and has held that post ever since.

BIG CROSLEY ASSIST TO CINCY EDUC'L TV

Cincinnati, June 30.

WCET, Cincy's educational tv station, has been given a five-year renewable lease for $1 a year by the Crosley Broadcasting Corp. on its $500,000 sound stages and facilities of Mount Olympus, hilltop setup unused by Crosley's WLW-T.

The grant follows one of $50,000 by the Ford Foundation for a tape recorder to be installed for WCET by September.

Robert E. Dunville, CBC president, turned over the Mount Olympus keys to Uberto Neely, WCET general manager, and local educational and civic leaders at a luncheon in Crosley Square. Dunville is a member of the WCET executive committee.

Four years ago the Crosley organization stepped in with a fund-raising campaign to help WCET through financial difficulties. The educational station, which has studios in Music Hall, has used Crosley transmitter and tower facilities since it began telecasting.

7:30-8 Slots Still A Wed.-Thurs. TV Problem for ABC

ABC-TV, while it is still doing rather well in overall sales for next season, still has the problem of finding sponsors for the 7:30-8 p.m. slots on Wednesdays and Thursdays. Particularly now, since Liggett & Myers isn't interested any longer in buying the Thursday anchorage. L&M was thinking of California National's "Not For Hire" in the time.

Gale Storm is set as the Wednesday program, but so far there are no takers—if only because the half-hour stanza has to face off against the first half-hour of the formidable "Wagon Train" on NBC-TV. There was momentarily a chance that "You Asked for It," the longtime Sunday-at-7 stanza, would take the Thursday anchorage, but this is no longer a possibility, according to high-ranking ABC sources.

"You Asked for It" was slated some weeks ago for the tv program cemetery by ABC, at which point the producers for the long-running show copped a plea and said they'd run out of reasonably good subject matter. Yet there was still some subject matter left, as was evident, when agent Frank Cooper tried to push a new series of the film stanza last week.

Incidentally, the Sunday time slot on "Asked" will be filled next season by some new "Colt .45" half-hour telefilms. Nestle has bought a third of the show over 13 weeks. Nestle will sponsor some new and some rerun material. Procter & Gamble bought "Colt" reruns for 12 summer weeks, with the show holding down a Sunday-at-9 time.

Radio Press Effects a Merger With International Transmissions

Two indie radio news gathering services—Radio Press, Inc., and International Transmissions Inc.—are merging and henceforth will be known as Radio Press International, Inc. About 70 stations now subscribe to the services.

Negotiations to consolidate both companies, subject to stockholder approval, were revealed this week. Additional finances obtained recently will enable RPI to enlarge its operations in the voiced news field.

New organizational setup will have George Hamilton Combs as chairman of board and editor-in-chief; Sumner J. Glimcher as prexy. Glimcher is now prexy of International Transmissions, Inc.

Other execs in the new outfit will be Donald Hirst, chairman of executive committee; Noel Bernard, veep for foreign news; Thomas M. Heyman, veep, and Lloyd Garrison, assistant veep for news and operations.

Among the International Transmissions' present subscribers is WMCA, N. Y., but the merger won't affect RP's exclusivity deal with Herald Tribune Network (see separate story). WMCA will be getting a totally different type of news feed.

The merger of the two major services in the voiced news field will provide subscribers with greater coverage. For one, it will mean a greater staff in Geneva for the resumed Foreign Ministers' conference. Radio Press International also plans making a noisy splurge in features syndicated gab for both indie and web clients and expects to usher in a regional service out of Washington but plans for this haven't yet jelled.

Herald Tribune Network (Stone, Whitney Group) In Radio Press Tieup

Herald Tribune Radio Network, recently-created Martin Stone-J. H. Whitney hookup of suburban indies in the Gotham region, this week inked a 10-year deal with Radio Press giving the four-station web exclusivity to RP service for the New York metropolitan area.

Radio Press, until now did not have an outlet in this vicinity, but did maintain an informal "swapping" deal with Station WNEW. New Stone-Whitney arrangement with Radio Press will obviously end the exchange alliance with WNEW.

Stone, prexy of VIP Radio Inc., which runs Herald Tribune Network, said his stations would present RP's daily overseas and domestic pickups in hourly newscasts as an additional feature to the Trib's columns and correspondence now aired on the chain.

VIP Radio is operating WVIP, Mt. Kisco, and WVOX, New Rochelle, in Westchester County; WFYI, Garden City-Mineola, on Long Island, and WGHQ, Kingston-Saugerties, covering Hudson Valley. Network feeds originate from WVIP. Web already has both AP and UPI, utilizing UPI's newspaper service as well as radio wires.

John Hicks negotiated the Radio Press pact with VIP Radio Inc. George Hamilton Combs, prexy and chief editor of Radio Press, viewed the tieup with Herald Tribune web as a prestige affiliation. Web scorns rock 'n' roll, gimmickry and programming razzle-dazzle in favor of "modern" music and interpretive, in-depth treatment of news, and feels that the Radio Press operation fits into H-T Network's notion of what constitutes news treatment and coverage both here and overseas.

Radio Press, which came into being last November, has about 50 stations throughout the country subscribing to its services. Some 50 correspondents and about 300 stringers supply the indie news gathering outfit with spot and feature news. Taped pickups are fed by leased wire to subscribers.

WXIX-TV BACK ON AIR; 8 HRS. A DAY

Milwaukee, June 30.

WXIX-TV, the UHF station here that suspended operations last spring when CBS relinquished the channel, resumes broadcasting July 20 on an eight-hour per day basis. Station will sign on at 4 p.m. and go off at midnight daily.

The U so far has signed a pair of local talents, 11-year old Steve Hildebrand to host films for the juve set and Bruce Kanitz for daily news analysis and commentary and for the station-backed editorials. Bulk of programming undoubtedly will be filmed.

KIEV HEAD SUED FOR $1,750,000

Los Angeles, June 30.

Edward "Cal" Canon, mayor of nearby city of Glendale and general manager of Glendale's radio station KIEV, is named defendant in suit asking $1,750,000 damages filed in Superior Court by oilman George E. Cameron and Broadcasters of Burbank Inc.

Canon and other defendants are charged with having illegally conspired to prevent KBLA—operated by plaintiffs in Burbank, which adjoins Glendale—from acquiring a transmitter site in Glendale after plaintiffs had received a favorable decision from Glendale Zoning Administrator permitting use of a 30-acre site for a new 10,000-watt transmitter.

Further charge is made by plaintiffs that KIEV itself has a petition before the FCC for a similar 10,000-watt permit. Both stations now have 250-watt outlets.

Des Moines—Meredith Publishing Co. has announced the election of E. K. Hartenbower, Kansas City, Mo., as vice president of the KOMO division of the company. He is general manager of KOMO radio and television station in Kansas City.

college buddy. As for director Ralph Nelson, it appeared as if he threw up his hands in helplessness right at the start. Chan.

Bat Masterson

Don Brinkley, credited with the original teleplay, "The Conspiracy," must have found this slab on Lincolnia tucked away in the musty archives. That he came across something valid and vital, worthy of "Playhouse 90 or "Desilu Playhouse," is not to be gainsaid. As a two-parter in this series, a week apart, it raises some doubt. The public memory, say the wise men, is short.

Last Wednesday night's shirt tail to the cliffer needed more synopsis of what went before. It tended to confuse, there being so many suspects in the plot against Lincoln's life. Story concerned John Suratt, who was acquitted of being a conspirator. His niece seeks out the aid of Masterson (Gene Barry) to help prevent publication of a story of the plot in a small town Wyoming paper, supposedly sold by Suratt for $10,000. If the story runs, protests the niece, it will harm many innocent people and anyway Suratt is dead and she can prove it by his headstone in the cemetery.

In the double header Barry fights his way out of many tight spots with cane, fist and gun before the real culprit is brought to book. The stone cutter is actually Suratt but covered his earthly tracks with the headstone. It was a novel denouement to the mysterioso but some of its dramatic effect was lost because of the delayed reaction.

As the dude swashbuckler, Barry Breezes through his heroics with the sweep of a Loretta Young entrance. Next to his gold-headed cane he values most his wardrobe and just hates to get mussed up. Diane Brewster as the niece supplied the light feminine touch and others according nominal support were Arthur Shields, Paul Richards, Jerome Cowan, Willis Bouchey, Ted De Corsia, John Hart and Royden Clark. Direction of Alan Crosland, Jr. stepped up the action and kept the suspense mounting. Helm.

Open Hearing

Throwing the spotlight on World Refugee Year, which begins today (Wed.) in the U.S., was a half-hour documentary aired Sunday (28) on ABC-TV's public service program, "Open Hearing." The timely live-and-film production brought the problems of some 15,000,000 refugees into fresh focus.

Theirs is a pathetic existence as the forthright commentary of John Secondari, ABC News Washington Bureau Chief, pointed out. "These people are guilty of nothing," he said, "except that they are still alive." Integrated in the documentary were filmed scenes of homeless wanderers in Berlin, Vietnam, Korea and the Arab countries.

What is their future, what nation will admit them? Secondari asked. There's no easy solution to the plight of the refugee, it was indicated, but this Helen Jean Rogers production may have helped to reacquaint the American public with what more than 60 international and national voluntary agencies are up against. Gilb.

Alaska to Get CBS-TV Pro Hockey, Football On the 'Kinnie Circuit'

CBS-TV is mulling the idea of shipping kine copies of pro hockey and football telecasts next season to stations in Alaska. Odds on the web carrying through with the plan seem pretty good, since the web seems to have had itself an immediate click with pro baseball in the 49th State.

Alaskan stations previously didn't get regular network feeds from the other 48 states, but started receiving CBS-TV's "Game of the Week" kines on June 7, the day after the Saturday baseball show was originally telecast. What CBS does is have an indie production company in Seattle kinescope the games via KIRO-TV facilities. The kines are flown almost at once to Alaska. So on Sunday, a day after the first exposure, the ballgame is exposed over KHVA, Anchorage. On the following Wednesday, it's shown on KHVF, Fairbanks, and the next Saturday, a week later, it's seen in Juneau on KINY-TV.

Though Alaska has never gotten regular baseball feeds before, it's had shortimers such as the World Series.

CBS is investigating ways of turning the kines over to the Armed Services in the Aleutians and Alaskan outposts. No final decision has been reached yet in this regard.

WWOK Bags a Mitt-Full

Charlotte, N.C., June 30.

Radio station WWOK, trying to help combat the plastic bag problem, had so many bags on hand as a result that officials started laying plans for a "bag-burning" ceremony.

The drive started when the station announced it would give away a recording for every bag brought to its studios. This resulted in more than 2,000 bags at the station within 24 hours. One person brought in 350 in exchange for an equal number of records.

The plastic bags are of the type that have been blamed for a number of deaths across the country recently, particularly among small children. News director Reginald Laite said the aim of the campaign was "not to hurt the manufacturer, but only to bring to the attention of parents the danger element in carelessly discarded bags."

Laite added that the station had decided it would hold a public "bag-burning" to get rid of the items after the campaign ended.

Satellite Stations To Up BBC-TV Aud

London, June 30.

New BBC-TV viewers to a total of around 200,000 will be grabbed by a chain of 14 low-power satellite stations, due to be completed by March, 1962. Approval in principle to the Corporation's proposals has been given by Britain's Postmaster-General, Ernest Marples.

Scheme will up BBC's television coverage from 98.7% to 99.2% of the population, leaving only some 500,000 people in Great Britain without a tv service of some kind. They'll get the tele, too, in due course according to a corporation spokesman.

Added significance of the building program is that the satellites will improve existing reception for about 1,000,000. Possibly this will have some slight effect on the thriving relay tv trade in Britain, inasmuch as hire-tv looks to fringe reception areas for much of its custom.

BBC's satellite scheme also involves the erection of 10 VHF sound stations. Most of these, and most of the tv satellites too, will be designed to work unattended, picking up signals from an existing BBC station and retransmitting them on a different channel for local reception.

Meantime, commercial tv is currently claiming that, by the end of the year, about 6% only of the population will be outside its service.

Gewinner's Atlanta Post

Atlanta, June 30.

Holt Gewinner Jr. is new director of promotion and publicity for WSB-TV, AM & FM, owned and operated by Atlanta Newspapers. Gewinner began his career at WMAZ, Macon, in pre-tv days and later was advertising director for Georgia Theater Co., headquatering in Columbus, Ga.

His experience in advertising and promotion spans 23 years. He fills post left vacant due to death of Walter Paschall.

Albany—Fred S. Daiger, who served as program manager for the now defunct WKXW here and who previously had been a broadcaster in Connecticut, Florida and California for almost 20 years, has resigned as executive director of the Convention & Visitors Bureau of the Albany Chamber of Commerce to take a similar post in Syracuse.

vestors would have to hold on to their holdings at least six months.

A spokesman for Lazard Freres denied that the deal was made for a contemplated public stock offering in a reorganized Ziv corporate setup.

Ziv's Statement

Ziv's short statement on the deal follows: "Frederic W. Ziv, chairman, and John L. Sinn, prez of Ziv Television Programs Inc., announced that Messrs F. Eberstadt & Co. and Lazard Freres & Co. of N. Y. are making an investment in Ziv Television Programs. The transaction involves no change of any sort in the management or operations of the company. Messrs Ziv and Sinn will retain their present offices and remain substantial stockholders."

Ziv, reached by phone, declined to make any further comment regarding the reported $14,000,000 purchase price, or the reported 20% stock interest retained by Messrs Ziv and Sinn.

Ziv Television Programs, a pioneer in the telefilm biz with Coast studios, is a privately held corporation. It's understood that Maurice (Bud) Rifkin, v.p. in charge of sales, was recently given some stock in the company, and in all probability his stock also figures in the Eberstadt and Lazard "investment."

Ziv in recent years has expanded its operations, from a strictly syndication one to network entries as well. For the upcoming season, Ziv has sold four network shows. Outfit is estimated to be grossing about $25,000,000 yearly now.

Understood the deal is now being finalized in paper form for a round of signatures.

Ziv's roster of network shows for the upcoming season include "Tombstone Territory," "Space," "Challenge" and "Bat Masterson." Outfit, which releases six newly produced syndicated properties yearly, a feat unduplicated in the market-by-market biz, has "Lock-Up" at its most recent entry. For regional clients, Ziv now is pitching two series, "This Man Dawson" and "Luke & the Tenderfoot."

In a recent countdown of sales personnel, Ziv stated it had about 117 sales execs. It also has an extensive and effective foreign sales operation.

Still Repercussions From NABET Strike; 8 Coast Defections

Hollywood, June 30.

Eight engineers and technicians, members of NABET, are leaving NBC-TV reportedly because of dissatisfaction with the way its union handled the recent strike against the network and terms of the settlement. Four more will be checking out later to form their own taping company. Most of the departers will move to other jobs.

At the network it was said that their defection at this time, when live programming is at the year's lowest ebb, would not require replacements but their ranks will be filled with the start of the fall season. All are either engineers or technicians.

Dale Applegate and Ed Pontes have received a construction permit from FCC and will build an FM station in Omaha (KCOM-FM). Bill Wallace, who won an Emmy for his technical direction of the Fred Astaire Emmy-winning special, is joining Ampex. Dick Stump and Wendell Seward have been taken on by Bendix (research) and Boris Isaacson is entering the swim supply business. John Cravens is moving north and George Birdno is hanging out his own shingle.

Organizing Tapex for a partnership next fall are John Agalsoff, Dave Graham, Lou Fusari and Howard Duhamel. Company will handle taping jobs for tv.

JILL JACKSON SWITCHES

New Orleans, June 30.

Jill Jackson, Hollywood commentator and director of women's programs on WWL radio and WWL-TV, has resigned to join staff of WDSU-TV effective July 8.

It was simultaneously announced that Stan Cohen is the new director of program research for WDSU-TV.

Two More Affils Exit CBS Radio

CBS Radio lost two more affiliates this week. KWKH, Shreveport, La., and KTHS, Little Rock, both 50,000-watters, will discontinue longtime affiliations in early July.

Move was made to pave the way for membership of the two stations, both under the direction of Henry B. Clay, in Radio World Wide, the much-talked-about "program service type" network to which many of the nation's powerhouses have been looking for programming salvation, what with the decrease in network programming and network compensation.

Clay said the move would "give the stations full control over hours it could use for programs of local and regional interest." He said Radio World Wide would focus heavily on live, on-the-spot news coverage—local, national and international, plus documentaries, etc.

KWKH has been with CBS since 1936, KTHS since 1953, when it moved from Hot Springs to Little Rock. Clay said: "Evolution of network radio for the past several years, culminating in PCP, makes it mandatory from an economic point of view for our kind of radio operations to develop new methods and techniques to insure our future prosperity and consequent well-rounded program service."

ND Games on Tape For Next Day Telecasting

Notre Dame's 10-game football schedule this fall will definitely be video taped for rebroadcast the following day.

Producer Sports Network Inc. will edit the games down to one hour, stripping out time outs and half times. In most cases, stations will carry games on Sunday, slotting them before or after live pro-game broadcasts.

Stations will be receiving the edited tapes by both AT&T lines and regular tape distribution. In some instances they will be retaping games off the line for individual slotting.

United Press International is handling sales.

DECREE BROAD ASCAP CHANGE

Publishers Hem in Disk Pirates By Legal Clamp on Pressing Plants

Pursuing a new angle in a continuing campaign to stamp out disk piracy, music publishers have now succeeded in putting a legal clamp on any plant which presses unlicensed platters. Two publishing firms, Reeve Music and Robbins Music, won a motion for summary judgment in Brooklyn Federal Court last week when Judge Matthew T. Abruzzo found that Shelly Products Ltd., a pressing plant in Huntington Station, N.Y., and Crest Records, an indie label at the same address, were liable for damages due to their unauthorized manufacture of disks. Julian T. Abeles, legal rep for the publishers and their agent, Harry Fox, claimed that the action against the pressing plants was essential in the industry's fight against bootlegging and piracy, especially since no criminal action can be taken under the Copyright Act against anyone who infringes in a musical copyright via mechanical reproduction. Abeles has already won decisions against the labels which turn out unlicensed material and, more recently in the so-called "Goody decision," against the retailers and distributors which handle bootlegged disks. Judge Abruzzo's ruling, which cited the Goody decision, held that a pressing plant could be penalized under that part of the Copyright Act which "extends to unauthorized manufacturers" that could not be sued under sections of the act referring to authorized manufacturers.

It's expected that the decision will now cue greater scrutiny of accounts by major disk companies who operate custom pressing plants for other labels. In some cases, the custom divisions pressed platters which were bootlegged from their own commercial label.

In an affidavit submitted to the court by Fox, it was pointed out that disk piracy is generally committed by individuals who operate from state to state and even in-

Mex Tunesmiths Say Everybody's Doing It (Stealing Their Songs)

Mexico City, June 23.

Mexican tunesmiths are in a dither about the "plagiarism" of many Mexican melodies, not only by U. S. composers but also by confreres in South America. But the general consensus is that nothing can be done to change the situation. A veteran writer admitted that "in many cases it is hard to tell which of disputed melodies really came first."

The writer admitted that song piracy is a universal affair, and that Mexican composers are not free from "barefaced appropriation of foreign tunes and phrases." This is in direct contrast to the "holier than thou" attitude of majority of tunesmiths here who rant to high heaven at the "flagrant gringo piracy" of such Mexican ditties as "Etsrellita," "Jarabe Tapatio," "La Bamba," "La Raspa" and other nationally conceived numbers whose popularity has been appropriated for exploitation abroad.

A more objective composer here, not prone to brick throwing, said that song plagiarism by American fashioners of words and music, drawing on lilting Mexican melodies, has been a problem for years. He expected that now, with possibilities of a formal musical exchange program, there may be a chance to contain baldfaced plagiarism. In some cases, there has been changing of phrasing and a "stealing" of segments of musical phrases. In others, a total pirating of words and music.

It is alleged that this situation is result of fact that U. S. laws protect local authors, whereas Mexican law attempts to give protection to both local as well as foreign song writing talent.

Newport Without Satchmo a Break For 'Progressive'

By DAVID B. BITTAN

Newport, R.I., June 30.

The sixth annual Newport Jazz Festival starts Thursday (2)—minus the services of its perennial feature attraction, Louis Armstrong.

Festival director George Wein said he will not book another attraction to fill Armstrong's spot on the Sunday evening concert which closes the four-day jazztravaganza.

"Who could replace Armstrong?" Wein asked.

Wein gave no indication of whether the Armstrong All Stars, including Trummy Young and Billy Kyle, would play without their leader.

Armstrong's absence will leave a definite void in the Sunday event, coupled with the pullout of Red Nichols, who had been scheduled. Still scheduled are Dave Brubeck, Stan Kenton—and a pair of non-jazz attractions, the folksinging Kingston Trio and singer Pat Suzuki.

Another last-minute switch found Mahalia Jackson bowing out of the Sunday afternoon gospel concert. Several additions have been announced to the program, including Gene Krupa & His Quartet, Coleman Hawkins, Roy Eldridge, jazz flutist Herbie Mann, and young tenorman Johnny Griffin. They replace singer Ernestine Anderson and the Mastersounds, who canceled out.

The last-minute booking switches are expected to have little adverse effect on attendance at the festival, to be held again at the open-air Freebody Park. A record 60,000 jazz fans made the stadium bulge for last year's festival. As many are expected this year.

Rank Records of America is readying a new label to be known as Jaro International. It will be made available through a distributing network separate from that of Top Rank International which was launched a couple of months ago.

A full complement of LPs as well as singles are scheduled for the new label. First release will be two singles featuring Woody Byrd and Johnny Cruise. Jaro's initial LP is scheduled for Aug. 1.

FINAL HEARING SET FOR OCT. 19

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Broad changes in the operation of the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers will take place as a result of a new consent order amending the 1950 decree. The amendments, covering voting, distribution and survey procedures, were filed by Dept. of Justice and ASCAP attorneys with N. Y. Federal Judge Sylvester Ryan Monday (29). Judge Ryan ordered that all ASCAP members be notified of the proposed changes by July 17 with final hearings set for Oct. 19. Although squawks from some die-hard critics are expected to be heard, it's almost a foregone conclusion that the amendments will be adopted as proposed.

The changes in ASCAP's voting is designed to cut down the power of the Society's top earners, whether writers or publishers. Under the proposed order, no single writer or publishing firm will have more than 100 votes. Currently, writers get one vote for each $20 earned and publishers get one vote for each $500. Irving Berlin, who earns around $100,000 annually, now gets 5,000 votes. Writers and publishers' voting power, under the consent order, will be rated according to performance credits with a sliding scale adjusted to keep the top money earners from commanding too many ballots. Writer members will get one vote for each 1,000 credits up to 20,000 credits, plus one vote for each 2,000 credits up to 26,000 votes, plus one vote each 3,000 credits up to 35,000 credits, etc. The publishers' system will work in a similar manner with the basic votes determined by each 4,000 credits up to 100,000 credits.

Affiliates of each publisher member, as for instance Robbins, Feist and Miller firms in the Big Three setup, or the Remick, Harms, New World, etc., firms in Music Publishers Holding Corp. setup, will be considered as individual firms. However, the decree limits any increase in the votes of the top 10 firms in ASCAP to no more than 10% of their votes when the order goes into effect.

While cumulative voting was rejected, new election procedure permits any group of writers entitled to cast one-twelfth of all writers votes to elect one candidate to the board. Similarly in the publisher director elections.

In the payoff revision, writers and publishers now have the option of choosing a 100% current performance base or a mixed base which continues the present availability and seniority factors. In the publisher division, the 15% seniority factor will be eliminated on a gradual basis over the next five years, leaving the publishers' formula at 70% for current performances and 30% for availability, or "recognized works performance fund."

The publishers' availability factor will be revised so that any number one year old or more,

Pressure Building For Price Drop On Single Disks As Sales Slump

The idea of a drastic price slash for 45 rpm singles is now taking shape in the thinking of many top disk execs. At least one top label has already begun serious skull practice on a sweeping price cut and it's believed that such a move is to be expected within the next few months.

While a reduction of 45 rpm prices has been bandied about for some years, the pressure really began to build up in the past few months due to the slump in single sales. The drop in the single market has been extended and profound and some even believe that it may become permanent. One exec put it, "Why should a kid spend $1 for a record when he can buy a transistor radio for under $20 and hear the top records as often as he wants to." It's believed that a sharp reduction in prices would revitalize the single market by bringing the kids back into the stores.

Another aspect to a drop in single prices is the hope that it will drive many of the marginal diskeries out of business. The only way the latter can operate now is by cutting in disk jockeys, making fancy deals with distributors and virtually giving away disks to jukebox operators. All this is possible because it has become inexpensive to make disks while the list prices have remained high.

Dealers also are asking for a price cut. At the National Assn. of Music Merchants show in New York last week, Mike Spector, prexy of the Society of Record Dealers, urged the majors to come out wtih a 59c single as a way of drawing traffic. Spector cited Decca's success with a 35c platter during the depths of the depression in the 1930s and pointed out that every cut in LP prices has resulted in bigger business.

British Cleffers Gain in Fight For More BBC Time

London, June 30.

Though there has as yet been no followup to the confab held April 17 between Sir Ian Jacob, director-general of BBC, and Capt. G. R. Chetwynd, M. P., and toppers of the Songwriters Guild of Great Britain, on the subject of ensuring more airtime for British pop songs, indications are that the discussion took favorable effect.

Major pointer to a revision of feeling within BBC is that the Songwriters' Guild has gone pianissimo in its heretofore forte overtures to the Corporation, and the Guild's not a body to call off a campaign midway. Additionally, although the only official reaction from Sir Ian Jacob at the time of the get-together was a promise to examine the position, inquiries within BBC suggest that his interest has inspired a measure of greater pro-British thinking among producers and disk jockeys.

There's no reason yet to believe that U.S. pubberies will suffer unduly. A breakdown prepared by the Songwriters' Guild of BBC programs in 1958 showed that, in all pop music disk shows aired, 64.92% of the items were American as against 24.99% British, while in other programs 59.02% were U.S. comparing with 33.31% British.

RCA Longhair Dept. Romances Pop Jocks

RCA Victor's Red Seal division is going after the pop disk jockey. Under the aegis of Bernie Miller, advertising-promotion manager for Red Seal, two promotional disks culled from Red Seal releases are being shipped to the deejays.

The promotional platters are a one minute and 12 seconds excerpt of Van Cliburn playing the Rachmaninoff 3d piano concerto and a 45 rpm coupling of two songs from Mario Lanza's new LP, "Mario."

Montilla In CBS Int'l Deal

CBS International has taken over the manufacture and distribution of Montilla Records which specializes in Spanish-made recordings, for the U.S., Canada and Latin-America.

Fernand J. Montilla, head of the diskery, will continue to supervise the selection and production of the Spanish disks.

Too Many Jazz Clubs Swinging in Britain; B.O. Take Tapers Off

London, June 30.

There are signs that the jazz club movement, which has had an upswing here in the last year or so, has reached or maybe passed its peak. Though there's nothing to suggest that public interest in jazz has lessened, the situation of several spots suggests that the audience doesn't hold any more potential.

What in fact looked like and was a boom until several months back has now levelled off into a fair-to-middling paying proposition owing to the amount of competition that has sprung up to the then-existing clubs. Jazz fans in outer London, for instance, can generally find clubs locally with name talent whereas once upon a title they had to travel into the metropolis; so that a centre such as The Flamingo, billing itself as "the jazz showplace of Europe," has felt the pinch in terms of falling b.o. and is doing okay biz instead of boffo.

Taking the statistics of the country as a whole, the numbers of jazz hungry have probably increased in the past year, if anything. Material point, so far as the U.S. is concerned, is that there are ample appetites still for visiting combos to the order of 70,000-90,000 patrons, and outfits such as Count Basie—already pencilled in for a return tour next year — needn't have any worries about grossing the coin.

Album Reviews

Johnny Horton: "The Spectacular Johnny Horton" (Columbia). Currently riding the top of the pop best seller lists ~~with~~ the flashly "Battle of New Orleans," Johnny Horton has a natural LP seller in this wrapup of country-flavored items that includes his single click as well "When It's Springtime In Alaska," "Sam Magee," "Mr. Moonlight" and others in that idiom. Although he's hillibilly-oriented, his crooning vitality helps him cross over into pop areas.

Abbe Lane: "Where There's A Man" (RCA Victor). Abbe Lane knows what to do with a lyric when the words concern the opposite sex. Peg for this album is just that with tunes like "No Man Gets Me Right Away," "The Man I Love," "The Gentleman Is A Dope" and "I Must Have That Man," to name some. Sid Ramin's orch lays down strong support, and although she's no great shakes as a singer, she gets by.

Patti Page: "On Camera" (Mercury). Subtitled "Favorites from TV," this package wraps up a dozen of thrush's most requested numbers in her two years on camera. They're all standards, naturally, and Miss Page puts 'em in an attractive vocal setting. Jack Rael's orch offers able support.

Ray Anthony: "Sound Spectacular" (Capitol). The Ray Anthony trumpet is given plenty of room to blow up a storm in this set giving it an exciting and dynamic motif. Plas Johnson's tenor sax helps make the orch's sound all the more vivid. Some of the titles are "Blue Bells Of Scotland," "Chop Sticks" and "Annie Laurie."

Billie Holiday: (MGM). Although a lot has happened to Billie Holiday since she was riding the vocal crest, her style circa 1959 still makes a lot of sense and packs an emotional wallop. Some of the purists may say "she isn't singing like she used to," but then again, who is. As it stands, it's a worthwhile set for the collectors and it's good to hear her work over such as "All The Way," "I'll Never Smile Again," "It's Not For Me To Say" and "There'll Be Some Changes Made." Ray Ellis supplies a reliable orch backing.

Sabicas: "Furioso!" (Decca). There are few flamenco guitarists around who can top Sabicas for pure musical excitement. The repertoire in this package gives him wide range and he gives out with the kind of zest that bounces across the grooves. For added appeal there are some vocals by Dolores Vargas.

Eddie Le Mar Orch: "Broadway '58-'59" (Warner Bros). Eddie Le Mar has collected tunes from "Flower Drum Song," "Gypsy," "Redhead" and "Destry Rides Again." It's a slick roundup of Broadway's current (1958-59) scene and Le Mar plays it in an easy dancing mood with his expert keyboard leading the way.

Henry Morgan-Isobel Robins: "The Saint and the Sinner" (Offbeat). The blending of song (Isobel Robins) and patter (Henry Morgan) comes off extremely well in this concert-styled LP. The patter is especially good on spoofs of hi-fi and the poetry-and-jazz movement and Miss Robins shows up best on the Martin-Blaine tune, "Ev'rytime," and a light-hearted cha cha number.

Alexander King: "Readings From His Best Seller and Other Stories" (Urania). Alexander King's ability as teller of tales has been evidenced by his bestselling nonfiction tome, "Mine Enemy Grows Older" and the popularity of his WNTA (N.Y.) gab show. This disking combines the best of both and also includes some of the stories he's going to tell in his upcoming book, "May This House Be Safe From Tigers." His readings are vibrant and his stories have punch, so the album could stand the test of replays, too.

Eugene Conley: "Immortal Melodies of Love" (Request). The "immortal melodies" are out of Beethoven, Schumann, Brahms, Schubert, etc. and they've been handily adapted by Irwin Rowan and John Peters. Eugene Conley's tenor pipes make them all romantic and attractive which should help this indie rack up a provtable score.

Artist-Disk Deals

UAR: Kaye Ballard

Kaye Ballard, nitery singer-comedienne, has joined the United Artists Records roster in a long-term deal. Her first album on the UA label, due for release this month, is titled "Kaye Ballard Swings." It was recorded during one of her performances at the Bon Soir, N. Y., where she's currently appearing.

Finch: Lulu Godfrey

Lulu Godfrey will make her disk bow via the Finch label. Her first two sides are "Stop Cheating On Me" and "Moanin'."

WBR: The Nortones

The Nortones, a singing duo, have been pacted by Warner Bros. Records. Bernie Reed and Steve Barry, the two 18-year-olds who comprise the group, play their own guitar accompaniment as well as write their own material. Karl Engemann, WBR a&r man, will supervise the sessions.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Gene Vincent (Capitol): "THE NIGHT IS SO LONELY" (Central Songs†) has a teen-styled ballad mood that will attract lots of spinning attention. "RIGHT NOW" (Vanderbilt*) is a jumping rocker that will keep the jean set swinging.

Kay Armen (Decca): "ANNA-BOSHA" (Topper*) is a brisk novelty item and Kay Armen belts the Near Eastern motif to the hilt. "ONLY THOSE IN LOVE" (Topper*) has an appealing ballad mood that's delivered in an attractive style.

Robin Luke (Dot): "FIVE MINUTES MORE" (Melrose*) is the oldie worked up for current deejay and jukebox tastes with a flavorsome vocal. "WHO'S GONNA HOLD YOUR HAND" (Statco†) holds on to the teenage franchise with an okay lyric and melodic pattern.

George Morgan (Columbia): "THE LAST THING I WANT TO KNOW" (Acuff-Rose†) is a plaintive ballad that will do nicely in alfalfa areas. "LITTLE DUTCH GIRL" (Cedarwood†) bounces along at a pace that will lure the juke trade in the hillbilly belt.

Dino Fitzgerald (Coral): "SHYEST BOY IN SCHOOL" (Willow*) has a perky beat and a likable vocal approach. "LULLABY IN RAGTIME" (Dena*) sways with a lilt that will appeal to some deejays.

Frank Curtis (Palette): "THE MADONNA OF TEARS" (Zodiac†) is a sentimental ballad highlighted by an effective vocal workover. "LAUGH OR CRY" (Compton*) is a slow and not too effectual ballad try.

The Bongos (Splash): "MY LOVE, MY LOVE" (Portrait†) gets a slick terp treatment that should fare well in juke situations. "THAT'S ALL" (Portrait†) plays with a cha cha tempo for good results.

Louis Armstrong & All Stars (MGM): "THE BEAT GENERATION" (Robbins*) is a blues-styled effort that gets most of its appeal from Armstrong's hoarse vocal. "SOMEDAY YOU'LL BE SORRY" (International*) is a neat rhythmic concoction with some attractive vocal riffs.

The Delicates (Unart): "RONNIE IS MY LOVER" (Saxon†) is a lightly built and delivered entry for teener appreciation. "BLACK AND WHITE THUNDERBIRD" (Saxon†) has a bouncing rocking mood that the kids will pick up for a spinning ride.

The Signatures (Warner Bros.): "CLING TO ME" (Peer†) works a south-of-the-border tempo into a fair offering for the gringo market. "PLEASE DON'T PLAY THE CHA CHA" (Prince†) is an okay variation on a familiar theme.

Bobby Brookes (Carlton): "LOOKA, LOOKA, LOOKA" (Shapiro-Bernstein*) is a flashy item with a hot juke-pegged beat. "THE GREATEST ADVENTURE OF ALL" (Hill & Range†) is a big, moody ballad that gives the crooner a chance to show off his dramatic styling.

The School Belles (Hanover): "THE COUNT DOWN GAME" (Trinity†) plays up a dance-styled novelty for so-so results. "SWING-SWANG" (Trinity†) has a cute beat and lyric idea that kids may swing to.

Los Congaceiros" (Urania): "VENUS CHA CHA" (Renbed-Lansdale†) makes the most of the Latino tempo, giving it a good chance for jock and juke play. "ALEGRE CHA-CHA" (Amour) has a colorful chile flavoring.

Lindsey Meehan (Buddha): "WHERE IS SHE" (P. T. Hayes†) is an average ballad handled in a fair manner. "CORAL ROCK" (P. T. Hayes†) works around a catching melodic turn that could keep the jukes spinning.

*ASCAP. †BMI.

Julian Adderley has teamed up with his brother Nat to form a new jazz group which will be known as Julian (Cannonball) Adderley & The Quintet. Combo will record exclusively for Riverside Records.

Best Bets

ELVIS PRESLEY......................A BIG HUNK O'LOVE
(RCA Victor)......................My Wish Came True

Elvis Presley's "A Big Hunk O'Love" (Presley†) is another hyped-up shaker pegged for a big hunk o'spins. "My Wish Came True" (Desiard†) sets Presley in a more subdued mood and his fans will be attracted to it, too.

JAMIE COE......................SUMMERTIME SYMPHONY
(Addison)......................There's Gonna Be A Day

Jamie Coe's "Summertime Symphony" (Music Development†) is a surefire payoff platter because of the way it plays right up to teen trends in all departments. "There's Gonna Be A Day" (Music Developments†) switches to a slower mood, but it, too, has solid teener appeal.

BROOK BENTON......................THANK YOU PRETTY BABY
(Mercury)......................With All My Heart

Brook Benton's "Thank You Pretty Baby" (Eden†) is another socko rhythmic ballad side that will keep him on top of the spinning lists. "With All My Heart" (Raleigh†) has a rocking ballad mood that stands out because of the top drawer delivery.

MARTIN DENNY ORCH......................SAKE ROCK
(Liberty)......................Martinique

JIMMY DAREN......................ANGEL FACE
(Colpix)......................I Don' Wanna Lose Ya

Jimmy Daren's "Angel Face" (Brenner†) is a neat ballad that will attract those who made his "Gidget" a click and will pay off similarly. "I Don't Wanna Lose Ya" (Knollwood) moves along bright rocking lines that's good for current market.*

(Time)......................Betty Dear

The Bell Notes' "That's Right" (Brent†) hits the right mood in beat and lyric, putting it in a payoff position. "Betty Dear" (Brent†) toys with a rocking beat with familiar vocal mannerisms.

JIMMY NEWMAN......................GRIN AND BEAR IT
(MGM)......................The Ballad of Baby Doe

Jimmy Newman's "Grin and Bear It" (Cedarwood†) has a frisky hillbilly beat and a novel message that's sure to cross over into a pop payoff. "The Ballad of Baby Doe" (Cedarwood†) has an interesting, swinging ballad lilt.

KATHY LINDEN......................SO CLOSE TO MY HEART
(Felsted)......................You Don't Know Girls

Kathy Linden's "So Close To My Heart" (Trinda) sets up a highly appealing ballad mood that will have a positive attraction to jock and juke players. "You Don't Know Girls" (January*) is a bright rhythmic entry that the teeners will pick up for lots of play.*

ternationally in a manner that was difficult to trace. The pirates cut prices, use inferior manufacturing materials and otherwise discourage purchases of legitimate platters. Fox also pointed out that piracy "has mushroomed into a serious threat to the music publishing and legitimate phonograph recording industries." Songwriters, moreover, have been deprived of the mechanical royalties they would have received from their publishers. Hence, Fox said there was urgent need to strike against the "base of manufacture" of the pirated records.

In the current case, Fox outlined the devious methods by which the piracy was committed in an operation that shuttled between the U.S. and Canada. Fox originally received information, he said, that a Toronto firm, Solitaire Records, was flooding the Canadian market with bootleg records. As usual, Fox asserted, the owner and address of this label in Toronto could not be located. However, it was disclosed that Shelley Products did the manufacturing, but the latter firm asserted that all orders were taken verbally and no records were kept. Crest Records, which has the same prexy, Clark F. Galehouse, as Shelley Products, mastered the platter for Solitaire.

A special master will now compute the royalties due from the defendants. Plaintiffs are asking for the 2c statutory royalty plus 6c treble damages on each disk pressed, in addition to legal costs.

Reevé Music, owned by Lew Chudd of Imperial Records, owns the copyright on "I'm In Love Again" while Robbins Music owns "Too Young To Go Steady," both of which tunes turned up on the unlicensed disks.

Newport

dition of presenting longhair artists and Broadway-type musicals, Tamiment-in-the-Poconos booked the Ellington orch in an effort to beef up business in the "week-before-July 4," always a slow one.

The experiment paid off—artistically and at the cash register. Several hundred persons were refused reservations because of a lack of sleeping accommodations. And hundreds from the immediate Stroudsburg area who wanted to attend the Ellington concerts were turned away because the Tamiment Playhouse seats only 1,000.

Last year, only about 400 persons stayed at the resort for the same period. And the eighth annual Tamiment Chamber Music Festival held June 18-June 21, attracted only 800.

Surprisingly, most of the guests were not jazz buffs, but persons who stayed at the plush resort in past years.

The fact that Ellington packed the big playhouse at both evening concerts Friday and Saturday (26-27) shows the universal appeal of this veteran leader-composer-arranger-pianist.

Jazz authority Marshall Stearns traced the history of jazz, with the aid of phonograph records, at a lecture Thursday night. He presided over a roundtable discussion Saturday afternoon with members of the Ellington orchestra. On Sunday morning, jazz dancers Albert Minns and Leon James displayed their unusual talent in showcasing steps from the beginning of jazz to the present day.

ASCAP Decree Changes

rather than the current two-year limitation, will be counted on a straight one-year basis, rather than on the current five-year average. The writers' availability fund is being revised to allow 30% fund for tunes one-year old or more, averaged over five years.

Writers' Formula

Writers who do not choose the 100% current performance formula, will continue to get 20% for current performance, 30% for a five-year average, 30% for availability and 20% for seniority. Under the new system, a writer may jump 50% of his current standing and fall one-third in any one year. At the same time, the maximum seniority has been limited to 42 years of membership.

While the amended decree gives every ASCAP writer the privilege of choosing between two payoff systems, a special provision has been made for the top 100 writers, the so-called super-dreadnaught class rated above 1,000 points. Under the decree, ASCAP may withhold the option of a 100% current performance payoff from super-dreadnaughts provided that a majority vote of that class approves such a rule. It's understood that a majority of the top writers have already given their okay to the proposal that they be disallowed from taking the 100% performance base.

On ASCAP's survey or logging procedures, the decree provides that an independent outside agency, appointed by the court, and paid by ASCAP design a scientific sampling system that would cover performances over radio, tv, wired music services and in night clubs and concert halls, if feasible. The depth of the sample is to be determined by considerations of sampling efficiency. The outside agency would also be empowered to periodically review the survey methods. ASCAP will set up a pilot project to determine the best sampling methods.

Themes, Cues, Etc.

Other provisions of the consent order would reduce the spread of credits awarded to themes, background music, jingles, cues, bridges, etc., from the existing 100-to-1 ratio to about 10-to-1. Standards which are used as themes will get one full credit for the first use on a show and one-tenth of a credit for each subsequent performance on a single program. Any tune which does not qualify as a standard, either via listings in the "VARIETY Music Cavalcade" book, or on the top 10 charts of VARIETY and another trade paper, or on the "Lucky Strike Hit Parade," will get a minimum of one-tenth of a credit. At present the minimum is one-one hundredth of a credit.

New consent order boosts payments for concert works with a 5% special fund set aside for prestige compositions. A special committee, independent of ASCAP, will determine how the fund shall be allocated.

ASCHER EXITS DISKERY

Sidney H. Ascher has resigned his exec post with Worcester Records to concentrate on his public relations, personal management and tv production enterprises. He has also bowed out of Teen Age Survey, Inc., the research org he founded eight years ago with Mrs. Ruth Scalyer.

Worcester company was the diskery producing masters for the Felsted label of London Records.

New Acts

CROSBY BROS. (4)
Songs
58 Mins.
Chez Paree, Chicago

Bing Crosby's four sons are launched on the cabaret scene in high style. The freres—Gary, Phillip, Dennis and Lindsay—have a superlative act that is likely to abash those skeptics who surmised the boys would trade merely on the lustrous family name. Inevitably, of course, and what ever the quality of their turn, the name will mean something at the boxoffice. But the act is no freak for one-shoting around the circuit—it is a savvy presentation of songstering and laughs that clicks along with solid entertainment values and the built-in dynamics to carry the boys far into professional orbit as a unit.

Its success is no chance result, considering the wise pros who shaped it. Nick Castle's loving staging, notably, is standout, and Dick Stabile's (ex-Martin & Lewis) batoning is a crafty exercise in support of the vocalisthenics. When a punk note is sung, for example, the maestro makes sure it's sufficiently masked from the bandstand. Greater love hath no conductor.

Gary, the eldest brother, is the galvanizer. He has the experience and moxie to steward the ensemble in bigleague fashion, generating the quips with a familiar airiness, and otherwise impressing his personality with an easy, polished deportment. And if anything, it's a helping sentimental endearment outfront that he's a chip off the old block in sound and demeanor, especially when he gently spoofs his stylized papa in a windup olio of such Bing-identified tunes as "Small Fry" and "Swinging on a Star."

The brothers' sock songology owes much to the crisp and clever arrangements of Bill Thompson, another behind-the-scener with nosegays coming. His note-tailoring is marked by a constant freshness that's especially evident in "Mack the Knife" and "Singing in the Rain." More than equal to the evergreen excitement are the Harry Crane-Jack Brook specialties, including "You Gotta Have One of Each" ("to have a whirl a boy and girl is what you need"), and a dandy self-ribber called "You Gotta Think About the Act," which describes offstage temptations to be spurned for the sake of their careers. Latter number also exhibits some winning ensemble hoofing.

Solo spotlight shines once on each brother ("In a Little Spanish Town," "You Are Too Beautiful," "Old Man River" and a "Baltimore Oriole" blues), and in one or two cases Stabile's shrewd covering helps make the sale. It's amply clear from this segment that the harmonizing fore and aft derives its smooth underpinning mainly from Gary's intrinsic vocal ability. Earlier, an effective folksong potpourri strikes some arresting contrapuntal chords, chiefly with "Noah" and "Joshua Fit de Battle of Jericho." Segment showmanly employs two mikes, one to feature Gary centre stage on a couple of the offerings.

Important to any act, and perhaps crucial to this one, the Crosbys register strong right off with a song-and-patter intro that identifies the lads and sends some of them offstage to handshake ringsiders. It's immediate rapport that builds right up to a getaway soupcon of "A Lovely Way to Spend an Evening." For backing, the boys not only have Stabile but a pair of capable sidemen, pianist Sidney Bulkin and drummer Fred Otis, to augment house orchs.

In sum: a rouser of an entry for the big rooms and vaudeo, with no fear of name-trading on a famous sire. Pit.

YVONNE DE CARLO
Revue
38 Mins.
Chaudiere, Ottawa

While Yvonne de Carlo's nitery presentation is mainly songs, she has surrounded herself with a neat package that can best be described as a miniature revue. It strings together four items, each distinct in itself but woven into a unit via smooth scripting and cleffing. The Chaudiere Club preem of the stint shows need for tightening and trimming which can be expected before next bookings. The act has strong potential not only as a showcase for the screen actress but as a piece of entertainment in itself.

With Miss de Carlo in the stanza is standout guitarist Manolo; a chant foursome, the Regents, and Benno Rubiny at the baton. Act opens with the Regents in a fast-paced circus intro, bringing Miss de Carlo on as the girl from the flying trapeze to work in a "Be A Clown" bit that moves into a "Be A Star" parody to allow theming about the loneliness of a star. Then comes an uptempo Irish item, a classroom sequence where the actress is a professor analyzing love. Closer is built around a Spanish theme, using Manolo sparingly and a heel-pounding flamenco terp by Miss de Carlo.

Staging is clicko throughout and a fast pace is maintained except in an overlong handling of the professor bit. Customers were also left wanting more of Manolo's superb work on the guitar in the Spanish sequence. Closing is also weak, giving the effect of stopping in the middle of a number with more to come. It needs more fanfare to mark it as a finale.

Faults that will likely be cleared up as the act progresses through its projected nitery circuit include an in-the-dark delay while the miniature set is put into place before the opener, which could be utilized to build the opening itself and the act as a vehicle for Miss de Carlo. There is also a general impression that the star doesn't get enough showcasing throughout, although it would be difficult to determine how this could be done without the danger of being redundant in the performance.

Costuming is colorful and lends impact, with Miss de Carlo's gowns bringing gasps to the audience femmes while the males gasp at what's in them. She's a top looker and garners plenty attention by sight appeal alone. Her piping and terping are adequate, not strong but enough to carry her through the chores with the help of the Regents. Gorm.

Crowds, Scribes Hail Danny Kaye In Sydney Stand

Sydney, June 23.

Debuting at the Empire Thursday (28), Danny Kaye racked the biggest score ever by a single performer here. Here for J. C. Williamson Ltd., he had a plush first-night audience in his grasp at $5 top. Working for two hours solid, comedian had them yelling for more after an 11:15 p.m. finale.

Kaye hit the top with "Minnie the Moocher," "Ballin' the Jack," and reduced the customers to hysterical laughter with skits of a tenor singing offkey, and a Negro number about bones.

After working for about an hour, Kaye decided to take a breather and just sat down on the stage and spoofed the mob outfront until he was ready to commence again with some nifty dancing.

Newspaper critics hailed Kaye as "the comedian who brought to Australia a brand of comedy hitherto unknown."

In for a four weeks' stay at this acer, with a similar term in Melbourne in association with Garnet Carroll, Kaye, who is reported as working his Aussie tour on a top (undisclosed) figure plus percentage, should take out quite a wad of coin covering his eight weeks' span. Comedian has nixed local tv offers and is playing eight shows weekly.

Kaye was wise in his choice of support for his Aussie tour. Kavus Grunn, juggler; Senor Wences, ventriloquist, and the Dancing Dunhills all went over solidly.

Kaye is the best thing that has happened here since the country's discovery by Captain Cook. Rick.

Duncan Renaldo Bails Out Ersatz Diablo For 10G After Court Writ

Cleveland, June 30.

Duncan Renaldo, television's "Cisco Kid," making personal appearances here, had his horse, auto trailer and other props impounded on a court writ of attachment filed by Neil Personnel Inc. of Cleveland.

Latter company of show promoters claim the western actor failed to fulfill a rodeo contract at Berea (O.) Fairgrounds May 7-10. They're asking for $50,000 damages, alleging Renaldo did not bring all the performers he promised in his act, that he did not show up for a press interview and that he cut out one performance.

Renaldo had to appear without his hoss last week during a shopping center date. Later he bailed his stallion out of jail by posting bond for $10,000. Then he had to admit that his horse was not his famous Diablo, still stabled in California, but was an imposter. "Cisco Kid" also got back his station wagon and trailer in time to keep an engagement in Dayton, O.

Macdonnell to Become London Palladium Chief

London, June 23.

Leslie Macdonnell, who became joint managing director of Moss Empires at the beginning of the year, will assume direction of the London Palladium next Jan. 1. This was revealed by Prince Littler in his report to stockholders.

Macdonnell's appointment at Moss Empires was a sequel to Val Parnell's desire to be relieved of his duties as managing director in view of the heavy pressure of his job as managing director of Associated TeleVision. He did, however, retain control of the London Palladium. His last production there will be the Christmas pantomime.

Danny Thomas Carries Union's $250,000 Gift To St. Jude's Hospital

Memphis, June 30.

Danny Thomas, currently making the personal-appearance rounds to raise funds for a proposed St. Jude Hospital here, presented to a local committee on the project a check for $250,000 which had been given him by the Hotel & Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union.

The money, which was presented to Thomas in St. Louis last week, represented a gift of $50,000 from the union's exec board and contributions of $200,000 from individual members. Thomas is pledged to raise $1,500,000 and the Memphis steering committee another $500,000.

Timmie Rogers' 100G Suit Vs. U.S. and Major Bailey

Timmie Rogers has filed a $100,000 damage suit against the U.S. Government and an Army major as a result of a beating administered to him by the officer at an Army post in Germany last August. Rogers, who entered the suit under his square handle, Timothy Louis Ancrum, said he was attacked by Maj. Leonard V. Bailey in an officers club at Baumholder. The Negro performer was hospitalized for three weeks at Weisbaden as a result of the beating, it was charged.

Suit contends that the Government was negligent in failing to properly supervise, care for and control the activities of one of its agents. Maj. Bailey was found guilty and fined $1,000 by a general court martial last September.

'NO DICE' ON NEW VEGAS INNS

Chalfen Eyes Ice for Other Reds As Segue to Moscow 'Holiday' Click

Minneapolis, June 30.

Back from Moscow, where his "Holiday on Ice" ice show was a sensational click, local impresario Morris Chalfen says he now hopes to take the attraction into Red China and some of the eastern European Soviet satellite countries, including Mungary. He anticipates permission to do so.

"Holiday on Ice" ran eight weeks in Moscow to capacity houses and, even though he lost money because of the shortage of dollars there—a condition that also will prevail in China and the satellite countries—Chalfen is happy and eager for the show to play other Iron Curtain engagements.

Chalfen expected to lose $50,000 on the Russian deal, but as a result of the 74 performances' total attendance of nearly 900,000, the sum was considerably less than that.

He thought that "Holiday" created goodwill between the Russians and Americans, reaching the masses—the waitresses, the factory worker, etc.

Premier Khrushchev not only saw the show but entertained the cast and told them he thought the cultural exchange was good and in the interest of world peace, Chalfen said.

Impresario believes he can get State Dept. permission to take his show into Red China, and the fact that one of the latter's opera troupes is scheduled to appear in Canada this summer gives him hope he can obtain Chinese visas. The State Dept. wouldn't be asked for any financial support for any of the engagements.

He already has started negotiations for Poland, Czechoslovakia and Romanian appearances. En route home, he and his wife stopped in Budapest and found eagerness, he says, for an American ice show and jazz groups.

"Holiday" was televised from Moscow, giving many more Russians the chance to see it. The Russian ministry of culture was delighted with "Holiday," all the more reason because while it was giving the Chalfen show the equivalent of $1,500 a day in rubles, plus room and board for the cast, it was receiving more than $20,000 a day and, accordingly, was earning a good profit.

La Concha Opens In Atlantic City; 'Helicopter' Hotel

Atlantic City, June 30.

This resort's first major hotel since the 1920s, a five-story structure in mid-city which drastically reveals the vast changes in hotel architecture over the years, came into being here Saturday (27).

La Concha, erected at a cost of more than $2,000,000, joined the resort beachfront hotels when a party with celebrities from metropolitan areas, including Bess Myerson, a former Miss America, filled the Latin-type structure.

Miss Myerson and Earl Wilson N. Y. Post nitery columnist, arrived Saturday afternoon to do something which Arthur Brisbane, the late Hearst editor, predicted would one day be accomplished. They landed by helicopter atop the hotel. Brisbane, in 1923, wrote a special story for the Atlantic City Evening Union, which carried his column, and predicted that this would be done one day.

Hotel has 129 guest rooms, starting on the third floor. A penthouse rents for $130 per day and the services of a Japanese houseboy is included.

Public rooms, located on the mezzanine, include a cocktail lounge, supper club, coffee shop, all with Caribbean atmosphere, and three large meeting rooms, indicative that convention business is expected.

Cafe Condado, the cocktail lounge, has a seating capacity of 125, and the eye-catcher is an aquarium of tropical fish behind the bar. Each table has a Swiss phone, so that guests can chat to those at other tables.

A supper club is located in the Castillian Room, which seats 165. Here name bands will be featured with name acts. Lilo, Joey Adams, Al Kelly, the Jones Bros., backed by Ted Huston orch., opened the spot Saturday night.

A portable platform on the roof, adjacent to the penthouse, will be used for other helicopter landings.

A swimming pool will be enclosed with a plastic bubble in cold weather, and an ice skating rink will also be available.

Hotel is owned and operated by the Fleetwood Motel Corp. which has other motel and hotel holdings here. Victor Mongelli is president; R. Peter Miller, executive v.p.; Ray W. Hart, treasurer and general manager; Richard A. Miller, v.p., and H. Palmer Woodcock Jr., secretary.

CURRENT CROP IN EXPANSION

By JOE COHEN

There's enough trade in Las Vegas to accommodate more hotels, but increase in the number of inns is being inhibited by the lack of names, say talent handlers, and by the lack of new executive ability, say the hosteliers. These two factors are combining to make the present well-established hotels more secure and more prosperous and make the addition of new hostels more dangerous and financially uninviting.

This is borne out by the fact that during the 1956 season four hotels shuttered. However, since then, there has been an increase of about 40% in rooms but managements are fewer. Of the present crop of inns, there are a couple that are still to make it, including the New Frontier, operated by Bill Miller and Warren (Doc) Bayley, and the Tropicana, which while not completely out of the woods shows signs of remaining on the local scene.

Of all the hotels, the Desert Inn Group seems to be the most rapidly expanding. Not only has this group successfully launched the Stardust as well but it has taken over the Royal Nevada next door. Construction has already started on an arcade to connect the RN and the Stardust. The combined room capacity will be 1,365 which will enable it to get several conventions under one roof. The large cafe at the Royal Nevada and the casino area will be converted into convention and showcasing space. All the gaming will be in the Stardust section of the setup. The new arcade will house a Polynesian restaurant.

Lotsa Potential

The present managements feel that the potential of Las Vegas is still on the upbeat. For example, the Sahara is constructing a 14-story wing; the Dunes, Tropicana and virtually all other established hotels are blueprinting added rooms.

A still more important facet is the expansion of hotels on Route 91 Strip into the downtown sectors and in other hotels. For example, operators of the Fremont Hotel (the largest in the downtown area) Eddie Levenson and Eddie Torres, together with Jack Entratter and Carl Cohen of the Sands, have purchased substantial holdings in the Riviera Hotel. The Sahara has interests in the Lucky Strike and Mint in the downtown portion of the town. The Thunderbird owns the Silver Dollar. The Flamingo has the Pioneer, also downtown, and operators of various hotels have some points in the other clubs. Thus with the interconnection of Strip and city gambling centres, an effort is being made to popularize the downtown portion. The Las Vegas Chamber

$500 AGVA Bond Hits Mt. Agents

The small agents booking the Catskill mountain resorts are being hard hit by a demand by the American Guild of Variety Artists to post a $500 cash bond with the union by July 1. This is to be held in escrow to insure payment for performers.

The smallies are particularly disturbed about this edict because of the fact that some are financially unable to do so prior to the season's peak bookings which start around July 4. In most cases, the bonds are usually put up by the talent user, but in this case, the bookers are asked to advance the coin.

Also demanded by the union from the agents is the repsonsibility of the AGVA Welfare Fund payments, and filing of contracts or booking reports in advance of the engagement.

Las Vegas, June 30.

One aspect of the muddled status of the lavish foreign entertainment on the Las Vegas Strip was cleared Thursday (25) with an announcement by the U.S. Immigration Office that it has approved visas for 60 Japanese performers skedded for the New Frontier.

At the same time, Stardust Hotel officals, producers of "Le Lido de Paris" shows, were studying an American Guild of Variety Artists ruling that there must be a 60-40 percentage favoring American talent in all shows.

The ruling does not affect the current Lido show, since commitments were made for it over a year ago.

The Immigration Office overruled a protest of AGVA in granting working visas to the Japanese entertainers, set to arrive here July 5 and open at the New Frontier July 14.

Ralph H. Holton, deputy district director of immigration in San Francisco, told VARIETY, "We would be unjustified in denying the petition (for visas) because of the protest."

Fred Haettel, branch manager of AGVA in Las Vegas, said the union launched the protest because so many members in this country are unemployed.

'Show Will Go On'

Bill Miller, producer of the New Frontier shows, said, "The show will go on. It will be settled shortly because I am abiding with the AGVA ruling by employing more members in the New Frontier lounge to balance the total employment situation according to the new AGVA ruling."

He said over $100,000 has been spent on costumes and arrangements for the new Japanese show and that money had been sent to the company to pay its transportation to Las Vegas.

Miller added that the AGVA ruling will "make a decided change in forthcoming foreign shows."

"We must abide with the AGVA rulings and we will," he declared.

Warren "Doc" Bayley, New Frontier prexy, said the Japanese entertainers are skedded for a 12-week run, with an option to renew for a year. The visas cover that length of time, he said.

The question of future Lido shows at the Stardust remained clouded. A Stardust spokesman said that "it's too soon to find out" the effect of the AGVA ruling on future productions.

Miller said that he understands 20 of the 60 incoming Japanese entertainers carry AGVA cards from past work in Hawaii and other AGVA areas.

Diana Dors' Hot Madrid Cafe Bow; Plenty Pesetas

Madrid, June 30.

Diana Dors, making her smsah Continental cabaret bow at chichi Villa Rosa, last week (23), is reforming Spanish impresario outlook on top international late-spot bookings.

British screen star, in for two nights and optioned for a third at 90,000 pesetas ($1,750) per performance, filled al fresco Villa Rosa to capacity with a blue ribbon outpouring seldom seen in Spanish capital city boites, despite hiked minimums to 800 pesetas ($15) for dinners and 300 pesetas ($5.75) for drinks. Boniface Diaz Prieto registered in excess of 300,000 pesetas in food tabs alone.

Within days after inking Madrid pact, Miss Dors' debut parlayed to circuit proportions and added dates in Barcelona and Tito's Palma de Mallorca showcase. An example of upbeat boite trade economic thinking was pre-opening move here by rival boniface from Madrid's class Pavillon to sign Miss Dors unheard and unseen for four days after she winds in Majorca, June 29.

U. S. Dates Cancelled

Diana Dors has cancelled a series of cafe dates booked for her in the U. S. Miss Dors, who last week played a stand in Madrid, has been reported suffering from a virus, and will be unable to make her engagements which were booked by personal managers Berger, Ross & Steinman through the William Morris Agency.

Keystone of her tour was to have been four weeks at the Tropicana, Las Vegas, starting July 16. Miss Dors was to precede that with the Casino Royal, Washington, July 6, and was also slated to play the Gatineau Country Club, Hull, Que., Aug. 31.

Probabilities are that the dates will be rebooked for the fall, when she will also do a series of guesters on the Steve Allen tv show.

Oasis Full of Japan

Honolulu, June 23.

Bill Pacheco's Oasis, keenly aware that several other niteries are featuring imported Japanese talent, is spotting 16 such performers in its current show.

Headliner is Chiyogiku, banjo-playing Japanese singer who specializes in—of all things—songs with a Texas drawl ("Yellow Rose of Texas," "Davey Crockett," etc.). Also in the four-shows-a-night roster are Peaches Kiyono, exotic dancer; Yuki & Fumi, comics; Kabuki Dancers, line gals; and Gene Roland, singer-emcee.

Ella Fitzgerald

Washington, June 23.

Super Attractions present Ella Fitzgerald in The Ella Fitzgerald Songbook; orch under Nelson Riddle; Oscar Peterson Trio; at Carter Barron Amphitheatre, Washington.

Ella Fitzgerald was slightly off her best form here as she opened (22) a seven-night stand at Carter Barron Amphitheatre.

But to nearly 3,000 of her admirers on hand, Ella Fitzgerald not at her best is still better than anyone except . . . Ella Fitzgerald at her best.

She had to cope with murky, enervating heat, insects and a loosely knit program format which, with the orch, appeared lost at times. As Miss Fitzgerald began her second number—"My Baby"—an insect became lodged in her throat (as happened to Red Skelton on the stage two weeks ago). In obvious discomfort, she continued singing, punctuating every other phrase with a cough until Nelson Riddle was able to find water backstage.

She recovered her voice, but a little of the verve was gone for the evening. Her selection was large, varied and very warmly received nonethelss. It included: "A Train to Harlem," "Desert Caravan," "I'm Beginning to See the Light," "They Can't Take That Away From Me," "Lucky So-and-So" and "Man I Love." Featured were numbers from her Duke Ellington and Gershwin albums. She offered a different selection altogether on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday—based on Cole Porter and Irving Berlin.

The Oscar Peterson Trio, alternating with Miss Fitzgerald, stirred a lot of excitement, and the audience obviously yearned for more than the program allowed. Riddle's group did a fine job by itself, but appeared to lack rehearsal when accompanying Miss Fitzgerald.

Overall, there was a certain lack of direction. There were times when no one onstage appeared quite certain as to what was coming off next. But with talent like Miss Fitzgerald's and Peterson's, no one seemed to mind. Lew.

of Commerce is plotting a contest for a new and more inviting name to the downtown sector so that it will attract more people on its own and perhaps get a few major gamblers.

How To Make the Grade

The Strip hotels sometimes come out of difficulties through management know how and sometimes because of the talent involved. The Dunes, for example, made it on the strength of the Harold Minsky shows. The Stardust, long a white elephant on the Strip, was taken over by John Factor, and the Desert Inn took over the casino operation on a lease. The casino and show room were eminently successful because of the Lido show. There was rarely an empty table in its Continental Room during the run of the first show. Later Factor dropped out of the hotel as well. The success of this room came as a result of talent and management savvy. The Riviera, following its initial difficulties, was taken over by the late Gus Greenbaum and Ben Goffstein, who cut down on expenses to the point where it could operate solvently with the shows plotted by Sammy Lewis.

The Sahara established itself on the soundness of its shows plus a strong bankroll which operater Milton Prell had to extend because of a losing streak during the early part of the operation. Names and its sound lounge and cafe operation with bookings by Stan Irwin have kept it in the black ink since the early days.

House That Jack Built

The Sands, with Jack Entratter heading, has remained one of the top prestige inns in the resort since its opening. This spot still is able to entice such toppers as Frank Sinatra, Dean Martin, Lena Horne, Danny Thomas, and a few others of that stripe. El Rancho, owned by Beldon Katleman, is a fluid operation because of its one-man say. Joe E. Lewis, however, is the strong attraction here and is certain to bring in the big gamblers. Milton Berle is also strong here.

The Flamingo does well under the Al Parvin management with its judicious use of names. However, it's doing one of the excellent public relations jobs in the area through Abe Schiller who is a traveling goodwill ambassador. Dressed in conspicuous cowboy regalia, Schiller is seen at important events throughout the country, preaching Las Vegas in particular and Flamingo incidentally.

The demand for rooms is growing primarily because of conventions, industry incentive programs and other gimmicks that have increased the flow of tourists to breaking points on some weekends and during the summer. The 12,000 rooms on the Strip (including motels) are frequently insufficient.

There are still failures dotting the scene. The Desert Spa is soon to be converted into a shopping area, over the objections of neighboring hotels. What's more, there is still Strip acreage available with no builders grabbing it up.

Talent Angles

Executive talent is being developed slowly in Las Vegas, some of it for export to the Caribbean gaming spas. However, it is a highly prized commodity in Las Vegas, and most of it is being kept in its own area. There has never been enough talent to go around. The Strip spots are using longterm contracts and are repeating acts more often while looking. Stan Irwin last week went out to the Chez Paree, Chicago, to case the Four Crosby boys. Major Riddle of the Dunes went to see Frankie Vaughan at New York's Copacabana. All the hotels have bankrolls and will travel to see the right names. Entratter is casing talent in Europe at this point and Lewis together with Desert Inn booker Frank Sennes are also global travelers when it comes to searching for new names.

Just as long as names and show ideas are scarce and hotel executives just as rare, the presently existing hotels will grow larger and starting of new spots will be kept within bounds.

the thesps. Liberace, making a few cracks about his successful lawsuit, was joined in his act by redhead Jenet Medlin, with Gordon Robinson as guest conductor of Charles Windsor's Palace Theatre orch.

Several first-line British comics were on parade to dish out the yocks, notably Arthur Askey, young Roy Castle, Jewel & Warriss, Benny Hill, Dickie Henderson and Al Read in a sketch with Jimmy Clitheroe.

Five of the commercial tv's "Army Game" cast gave with the laughs, and a bit that particularly earned the Royal nod was the 49-strong Children's Ballet from Blackpool's Tower Ballroom, in a Joan Davis arrangement of the number, "Be A Clown." Numerous other artists helped this to be a truly Royal show proving, despite all evidence, that vaude is not really dead in Britain. Alec Shanks with decor and John Russell as production manager did a standout job, and behind the scenes throughout was the VABF's energetic organizer, Arthur Scott.

WOO PITT CASINO AS PART OF BURLEY CHAIN

Pittsburgh, June 30.

Maurice Bortz, lesseee of the Casino Theatre, the burlesque house here, has been contacted by its former ops, Frank Bryan and Frank Engle of Boston, to join their new 15-house circuit.

Bryan and Engle would serve as producers and bookers of each travelling unit and are seeking indie houses to supplement their own circuit and allow them to make better deals with people they have contracted for their own houses.

Bortz, who is having a very good year here, is now weighing the proposition.

House Reviews

Roxy, N. Y.

Robert C. Rothafel presents Gretchen Wyler, Blackburn Twins & Jerry Collins, Robert Boucher Orch; "This Earth Is Mine" (U), reviewed in VARIETY, April 22, '59.

New outing at the Roxy represents a continuation of the recently adopted policy of offering acts in lieu of production; current lineup attests to the wisdom of the change. Theatre's on-the-boards shows had fallen into an unimpressive groove, having been suggestive of road companies out of the more elaborately-projected Music Hall.

Although it appears incongruous that a single turn should take over the massive stage, the fact remains that a good turn can entertain the customers regardless of setting. Take Gretchen Wyler, for instance.

Topping the bill, this musical comedy figure comes through very well, indeed. Miss Wyler opens with only mild effect via a rendition of the Cole Porter tune about CinemaScope and other technological cinematic turns. It's not too strong a song and Miss Wyler, heavily (albeit tastefully) gowned, has no easy time in getting it across. She follows with "Got You Under My Skin" with better results, due largely to nice phrasing.

She then gets down to serious entertainment business, peeling to a striking green leotard which is substantially more fitting for her type of song-dance business. She shows off well in a leggy and fancy chassis way and especially scores with a cool-cat version of "Frankie & Johnny" plus an imitation of Ray Bolger with his famed "Once in Love with Amy." Her vocals and legwork are cleverly delivered and bring the appropriate mitting. Miss Wyler ought to lay off one item, though. This is her bid to the audience to join in on an "Amy" chorus, which brings her only an embarrassing silence, at least at show caught.

But let's keep the criticism in balance. The important observation is that Miss Wyler is a strong contender on a big stage and very likely would be even more at home in an intimery or on television. Talent shows through in her case, no matter where.

Opener at the Roxy is the Blackburn Twins teamed with comic Jerry Collins. They're a hardworking combo and get the laughs in reasonable abundance, as Collins plays the zany in counterpoint with the freres' look-alike dance and patter. There's just too much conversation, however, about the audience's reception of their clowning; if the laughter doesn't come, why not let it go unsaid?

Robert Boucher's house orch starts the show with some likable jazz, including nifty trumpeting upfront by Alan Smith, and backs the balance of the program competently. Gene.

Apollo, N. Y.

"Dr. Jive's Rhythm & Blues Show" with Shirley & Lee, Ebonaires (5), Nappy Brown, Shirrells (4), Cavaliers (4), Beverly Ann Gibson, Quintonian Cubs (5), Valerie Carr, Wilbert Harrison, Imperials (5), Brook Benton, Reuben Phillips Orch (14); "Wolf Larson" (AA).

New York deejay "Dr. Jive," whose square handle is Tommy Smalls, has rounded up a rock 'n' roll package that's sure to please the teenage set. There's little appeal here for the adult, so the house will have to count on the pro-juke jeaners to fill it up.

With 11 vocal acts on the bill, the kids have plenty to listen to although much of it is in the same monotonous groove. Smalls does little more than act as a traffic guide onstage, but the kids seem assured by his presence and join in his enthusiasm for the turns he intros. The songs, for the most part, are divided into only two categories—the raucous rocker and the boring ballad with seemingly no beginning, middle or end. However, the kids recognize the first few notes, through the disk association, and their heroes or heroines can do no wrong after that. The acts come and go with rapidity, limited for the most part to two numbers. Only the big disclickers get a crack at a third tune.

Among the diskers in the layout who have the most stage substance were Brook Benton, Valerie Carr and Beverly Ann Gibson. They seem to have the vocal stature to keep 'em around for some time. As for the others, they'll probably stay around as long as their last record. Gros.

Copacabana, N. Y.

Frankie Vaughan, Charlie Manna, Tony Franco, Copa Girls (8), Paul Shelley and Frank Marti Orchs; staged by Douglas Coudy; songs, Al Foster & Keefe Brasselle; costumes, Billy Livingston (Mme. Berthe); $5.50 minimum.

Copa boniface Jules Podell has a strong summer attraction in Frankie Vaughan, British import. Singer would be a strong winter draw also since his vocal impact has no seasonal segregation. He's a hard-working, highly effective personality interpreter of the present pop parade and past perennials, endowing each with an undeniable strong sell. Not for nought has the Copa established a first—a British headliner. Vaughan will do beaucoup biz.

Vaughan looks like a young Victor Mature and his vocal style is a blend of the Tony Martin romantics and Sinatra drive, which isn't a bad parlay in anybody's saloon. Singer is a hot disk and deejay fave in Britain; in the States he's on the Columbia label which, via table placecards, heralded "Big Deal" and "Honey Bunny Baby" as his latest American releases, plus the fact that the FV international fan club's headquarters is in Twickenham, Middlesex, England. Vaughn, of course, would have accented audience identification with some concurrently riding pop platter (he's been very effective in his native Britain with several hot juke faves), but he has so many basic solid values that the vinylite spotlight would only afford added gloss.

For an obviously young man Vaughan has the authority of a vet. In a 1953 VARIETY review at the Empire, a Glasgow variety house, Gord summed it up that "the 25-year-old singer, born in Liverpool, lacked advance ballyhoo of American singers, but this did him no harm . . . Now in his fifth week of headlining a U. K. tour, he is a cinch for the American market, both in video and vaude, and also shapes up as a useful nitery asset."

Last month this reviewer caught Vaughan in London as star of the Palladium show, to solid business for eight weeks. As virtually a one-man show Vaughan gave of himself generously then, but the only error at his Copa debut is his over-generosity. In fact, it's a wonder that his voice can stand up with those 20-odd numbers he unreels in virtually a one-hour tour-de-force. As result, he runs to peaks and valleys with his marathon of music which needs pruning, not only for heightened customer effect but for personal professional and physical purposes.

Vaughan is an undeniably ingratiating performer with an intimate audience impact that hasn't been around too much in recent years; i.e., the crooning, in closeup, to the ringside femmes which he does disarmingly with showmanly reserve and understanding, such as keeping the lights low with no glare on the gals as he serenades a line of the lyric to one, and another there.

Podell's good show also includes two other male components, Charlie Manna's offbeat comedy and Tony Franco's chores in leading the choral numbers. Latter manifests opportunities for greater vocal horizons and, incidentally, Manna is also possessed of a good voice although his metier is the funnybone. The corpuscle routine is fresh and original albeit somewhat cranial. His "handkerchief singers" evidences a nice concept of the risible. His "Figaro" nonsense ("English translations" of the Italo lyrics) indicates he can carry a tune.

Manna reminds of a goodlooking Danny Thomas in personality. He might broaden the base of his brand of humor for wider audience values. As a newcomer, from the esoteric Village Vanguard - Blue Angel belt, he merits the wider Copa exposure and augurs strong professional future.

The Copa octet are a good set of fillies; the costuming is seasonally fresh and summery; and Al Foster and Keefe Brasselle have fashioned a sprightly set of special songs for Douglas Coudy's staging.

Chez Paree, Chi

Chicago, June 25.

The Crosby Bros. (4) (with Dick Stabile), Yonely, Chez Adorables (6), George Cook Orch (11); $1.95 cover $4 minimum.

This is the first major cafe stop for Bing Crosby's four boys on a break-in tour, and they line out a sock session of harmonizing (see New Acts) for husky plaudits. It's a potent turn constructed and abetted by such potent talents as stager Nick Castle and conductor Dick Stabile.

In the warmup, musical humorist Yonely makes his Chez bow and proves an easy winner against the anticipation for the Crosbys. He gets 'em early and sustains interest with his panto nonsense and instrumental trickery. Lotsa laughs are builtin per his playing of midget instruments, and latterly with such astounders as upside-down fiddling and the use of baseballs at the keyboard.

Chez Adorables (6), in two appearances, including a holdover stint, are as line dancers most ordinarily are, and George Cook's AFMers back well.

Show's in for 18 days, with a follow bill still to be set. Pit.

Nat King Cole, Allen & Rossi, Freddy Martin Orch (25); $2-$2.50 cover.

Nat Cole's slight case of laryngitis at Cocoanut Grove opener didn't hamper him enough from proving his right to the "King" monicker. His act came across with the serenity of royalty.

As expected, the Grove was packed. Advance reservations indicate that Cole's drawing power will keep the sardine atmosphere here throughout his four-week stay.

Cole's songathon of 15 tunes, several of which he popularized, encompasses ballads to blues. It's a mixture on which few singers with the mellow vocal qualities of Cole would tackle and make yardage. For example, his opener, "Ballerina," and then a closer like "Joe Turner's Blues." With a minimum of chit-chat he gives out with "The Very Thought of You," "Continental," "Madrid," "Mardi Gras" and "Mona Lisa." All come across, but his "Dinner For One" bit is a heart tugger that hits home most. He also takes a turn at the piano and shows some fancy finger action on "Tea For Two," "Where Or When" and "Look Out For Love."

Marty Allen & Steve Rossi, a young, personable comedy team, come on before the singer to loosen up the first-niters. This they do on several occasions but not throughout. While both look to have the ingredients to make the big leagues, their stiffness in spots shows they need more work together. Rossi, who looks and sounds somewhat like Tony Martin, is the straight. Allen, the shorter of the two, is the laughgetter. His "poor soul" attitude onstage is an asset. A bit on a Jap holdout (Allen) meeting the Yanks (Rossi) is a cutie. Kafa.

Latin Quarter, N. Y.

(FOLLOWUP)

The Andrews Sisters have come back to New York for their first date in about 10 years with a crackerjack turn which, at the Latin Quarter preem last Thursday (25), earned them an authentic ovation. The past decade has matured this pop vocal trio into a highly savvy combo that knows how to parlay music, nostalgia and comedy into a whammo payoff.

It's still predominantly a singing turn and Patty, Maxine, and LaVerne hang their routine on a catalog of standard tunes, many of which they made hits when they were hot in the disk market. It's a great songbook and this trio delivers in a highly listenable style doubly welcome in its contraast with the contemporary vocal groups riding the rock 'n' roll breakers.

But even more important than their singing is the staging of the act. It's loaded with nifty pieces of business which look so casually inserted and ad libbed but which, in summation, made it a standout sight-and-sound turn. After opening with a group of the old disk hits, such as "Bei Mir Bist Du Schoen," "Don't Fence Me In," "South America Take It Away," et al., the gals go into a quick gown change for their piece de resistance, a rundown of tunes from the 1920s.

With Patty in the pivot slot, the short-skirted trio performs the jazz age numbers with a dash and humor that's all the more effective since most customers in any typical nitery audience have memories of that era. The gals sing, hoof and clown up a song folio consisting of such numbers as "Collegiate," "Keep Your Skirts Down," "I Love Him In The Morning," "Barney Google" and "Show Me The Way To Go Home," done with tricky strobe light effects and an oldfashioned bouncing-ball community-sing gimmick good for a fast laugh.

Also new on this bill is comic Jack Durant who's still knocking himself out with his punishing pratfalls and self-breakups. Durant delivers his gag routine at a furious non-stop pace and, by sheer dint of his own enthusiasm, spreads a broad contagion of laughter. He's very effective in this room where even his singing on the square is received strongly.

Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y.

Tommy Sands was brought into Starlight Roof of the Waldorf-Astoria as a booking designed to attract the younger, prom crowd. He is doing just that. Taking the place of Ella Fitzgerald and the Lou Levy Quartet, who moved on because of prior commitments, this is proving the highlight of his current and initial nitery trek which has taken him to Buffalo, Washington and Philadelphia since early spring. This is the blowoff show for the Roof which is shuttering tonight (Wed.), a first in its summer operation, because of the paucity of desirable attractions to lure the hot weather trade.

Formerly known as a rock 'n' roller, Sands smartly has patterned his act to include standards and pop tunes; and so he no longer is strictly an r&r singer. He has done this by devoting the first portion of his act to tunes in the popular idiom and then packing his jive numbers into the second half when backed by the Sharks, instrumental-singer trio. And it's all to the good.

If he looks like a much different lad from his May appearance of 1957 on the N.Y. Roxy Theatre stage, Sands, too, shapes a much improved singer in a space of two years. The important thing appears to be that he has lost none of the crowd which made him more or less a "teenage idol" while seemingly enlarging his audience to the older folks.

Launching his appearance here with "Everything's Coming Up Roses" from the musical, "Gypsy," youthful singer swiftly swings into "Ain't We Got Fun" for contrast. Then comes "Still of the Night" at much slower pace but which he really blasts out. "I'll Be Seeing You" also is in more moderate tempo. With "What Is This Thing Called Love," Sands holds the final note almost to the breaking point.

To bridge the change to the rock 'n' roll tempo, Sands is persuaded to take off his dinner jacket in favor of a scarlet coat, the garb of the Sharks. He loops a guitar over his shoulder and four are on their way—first with "I'm All Shook Up," quickly followed by "Short Shorts," one of the better efforts.

"Nothing But A Hound Dog," also in the rocking category, is supplanted by "Unchained Melody," truly a highlight of this part of his act. This "Melody" ballad marks Sands as having arrived as a warbler beyond the r&r field. Lad relates how he recorded this tune some five years ago, but it's fullblown here on this nitery appearance.

Otherwise, it's the same show which opened here about a month ago with Count Basie's crew giving out with the special arrangements and Joe Williams on for about three vocals. All to good effect. Besides the Basie orch, the Bela Babai combo plays for patron dancing. Wear.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, June 23.

Peggy Lee, Jack Carter, Don Kirk, Jeannie Stevens, Flamingoettes (11), Jack Cathcart Orch (17); produced by Barry Ashton; costumes by Lloyd Lambert; $3 minimum.

Peggy Lee and Jack Carter seesaw the Flamingo Room's new bill, which is a solid show with good balance.

Miss Lee's distinctive song styling and warmer-than-in-the-past personality registered easily with first-nighters as she delivered "It's All Right With Me," "Hallelujah, I Just Love Him So," "When A Woman Loves A Man," "Don't Fool Around With Calico," "Well All Right, Okay, You Win," "Life Is For Living," "What A Little Moonlight Can Do," "You Can Always Judge A Gal," a medley of her disclicks, and "Diamonds," latter being "Fever" with updated lyrics. Top-level assistance is given Miss Lee by Bill Miller at the 88; Larry Bunker, drums, and Max Bennett, bass, with Jack Cathcart orch (17). Staging and special material are by Sid Kuller, arrangements by Jack Marshall and Dave Cavanaugh.

Carter, long a Vegas fave, seems to improve with each visit. This, his first appearance at the Flamingo, was the talk of the Strip immediately after his first show. The glib comedian breezes through some very funny new material punctuated with sock songology, all good for booming yocks.

Curtain-raiser is nifty holdover production number by Barry Ashton, featuring chirps by Don Kirk and terps by Jeannie Stevens, fronting the Flamingoettes (11). Show set for four frames. Duke.

The World's Costliest Floorshow—Stardust's $500,000 Lido Array

Stardust, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, June 30.

Le Lido de Paris, long a symbol of the French postcard civilization, has in its U.S. transposition become synonymous with opulence, lushness, and b.o. insurance, even though none of its epidermis accent is missing. Peculiarly enough, it cost more to adorn the undressed. The costuming bill on this opus, the second edition to be used at the Stardust, is much over $300,000. While cost accountants haven't finished tallying up all the charges, it's expected that this show will run in the neighborhood of $500,000, making this the costliest floorshow ever to be presented in the U.S. or maybe anywhere in the world. An idea of the shows size and opulence is that 1, It required two chartered planes to transport the production and talent from Paris; 2, the show necessitates a backstage crew of 32 stagehands, elestricians, etc; 3, extra pumps have to be built for the spectacular waterfalls effect (imported), to supplement the six pumps already installed.

The initial shock of nudity, if ever there was one during the first edition of Le Lido layout which closed recently after a year's run, is gone. The show has to make it on its own. Nudity, it so happens, is a small (but important) element here. The show has so many other important attributes that it can get along handsomely for its contemplated 18-month run, and continue with the standup business that the Stardust has become accustomed to.

There are times when the spectacle is overwhelming. The sight evident than in this number in which white-dressed courtiers and of 6,000 gallons of water per minute cascading onstage is sufficient to incite gasps. There are other awe-inspirers such as the burning of Paris during the Revolution, and a torrent of fireworks at the finale. There are many elements of spectacular proportions.

On the opening last Tuesday (23), it was evident that the production had to be cut from its 105 minutes, it was also evident that the acts needed reroutining and perhaps a replacement or two, but these are defects easily managed, and the returns are expected to be as strong as it has been.

Probably the most opulent episode is the Versailles number. The attractiveness of the undraped upstairs cheesecake was never more extravagant red costuming of the courtesans make for brilliant spectacle. In this sequence, the sacking of Paris takes place. While the firemaking apparatus didn't perform at its peak, there was tremendous excitement. The Brazilian number similarly begat gasps. The waterfall is used at this juncture with the Alfredo Alaria Ballet sparking the number. The Japanese sequence is similarly strong with ceramic masks worn by the dolls giving the proceedings an unreal and old-print look, but withal having a great deal of charm.

Worthy of recognition is the CinemaScope stage, which can do as many tricks as a troupe of Arabian tumblers. It's a rival to the Radio City Music Hall in its inventive design. The stage is equipped to make rain, snow, fire and holocausts of various descriptions. The Stardust is still to use the full potential of its facilities.

The act retinue is spotty, unfortunately. The major item is the holdover of Gino Donati & George, who had already gone back to Paris with the end of the run of the first Lido edition, but were called back when the replacing comedy act wasn't working out. They somehow didn't fit into this layout, and therefore deprived the show of an important comedy element. These singing-acrobats are essentially a clever act and were the hit of the first edition.

Another major act, the Alaria Ballet, showed a mixed-up tendency. The 11-person troupe is excellently disciplined, is live and responsive, and there's been a lot of creativity poured into this turn. Unfortunately, its viewpoint seems warped. There's a neurotic quality in many of its efforts. The makeup, for example, is unreal. It is seemingly seeking to symbolize orthodox dances, but they go into a murky and turgid area in which many viewers would feel uncomfortable. Its explorations of the nether world of terpsichorean thought give an insight to a rarely seen facet of the dance, but a nitery housing an essentially escapist show is hardly a likely exhibition spot for this turn. The flamenco numbers give strongest evidence of the tendency to oversymbolize what is essentially an earthy type of dance. Showing up better were a Brazilian sequence which permits a comedic byplay and which takes off some of the curse of its viewpoint.

Les Lucky Latinos (3) are an expert troupe of dancers with a flair for comedy. They turn in stretches of song and comedy which, coupled with genuine acrobatic ability, provide a combination that puts them well ahead.

Probably as charming a turn as has been seen in a nitery are Les Marottes, a puppet turn which needs five operators as presented here. It's a fanciful and happy romp during which they overwhelm the viewers with weight of numbers and loads of charm. Their opening is centered around a line of mice. While all the verbiage wasn't caught, there's enough to please. A topper is the caterpillar and snail duet, and there's a Russian sequence that provides many laughs. The costuming and general conception are ultra-imaginative.

There are many production aides that come off well including Beverly Richards in song, and dancer Marion Conrad. The vocals by John Juliano and Jack Rains dress up the works and a brief, tasteful and exciting ice skating sequence is by Marjii Lee during the Japanese number.

Donn Arden has done a masterful job of collating the numerous and diverse elements that constitute this exhibit. He has used his usual good taste and expert organizing ability to top advantage.

The backing by Eddie O'Neal, while too loud at the preem, was handled expertly. The special songs by Landreau, Brienne & Delvincourt, with lyrics by Charles Jarrell, fit in well with the production scheme, and the fanciful sets by Harvey Warren & Fost dress up the show. Another brilliant performer is costume designer Folco who has combined imagination and a near limitless bankroll into garb of spectacular proportions. Jose.

Fairmont, San Francisco

San Francisco, June 25.

Joni James with Joseph Berlingeri, Ernie Heckscher Orch (11); $2.50 cover.

Joni James draws an enthusiastic response from crowd in the Fairmont's big Venetian Room during her 45-minute stint. She works hard, does 17 songs (five or six above par for the course) and shows herself as a sweet, big-eyed and rather pretty, though slightly zoftig, brunet who's had topnotch promotion.

First part of show is devoted mostly to her record hits—"Your Cheating Heart," "Have You Heard," "There Goes My Heart," etc. These are pleasant. She then digs up a few oldtimers, "Among My Souvenirs," "Always," "There Must Be a Way," goes into an Italian-language set and winds up with a final group of pops.

Director-pianist Joseph Berlingeri accompanies well, though he allows Ernie Heckscher's orch to get too loud on occasion.

As show wears on, some of audience gets impression that Miss James has no change of pace from her rather syrupy ballads and much watered-down r&r accompaniments. Result is a sameness which seems inappropriate in a night club act, though she continues to get heavy response from a large segment of audience.

Miss James also seems a bit flat in some numbers. Nevertheless, her fans get a big belt from the act and she should do nice business through July 8, when show closes.

Unclad Leading Ladies Doing Naught For Mexican Dramatic Prestige

Mexico City, June 30.

A morality drive is hitting the legit theatre here. Office of Public Entertainments (which grants permits to theatrical impresarios) will not okay any future plays where leading ladies disport about the stage loosely clad in anything from negligees, girdles and bras, bikinis to wispy next-to-nothing lace panties.

In recent months producers have turned full force to production of local bedroom farces whose only difference from burlesque is that the leading ladies do not actually bump and grind on stage. But only reason for the "plays" is so that actresses can parade their charms across stage for several hours.

Dialogue, bawdy and double-entendre, is secondary to the undressed ladies, and action centers usually about bedroom misadventures of the eternal triangle, or a quartet of principles.

Now city fathers, who have given mild warnings in the past, are up in arms. The Mexican stage is not to be a thin excuse for voyeurism. As one official put it "Mexico is a cosmopolitan city and our theatre should reflect this in presentation of serious works."

But the door is open for theatregoers who prefer spicy dialogue and unclad leading ladies. One theatre will be designated where this type of performance can be given. This apart from the Tivoli, the classic burlesque house here.

There is a rumor, too, that impresarios, deprived of legitimate theatres, may lobby for establishment of a special theatrical zone for the presentation of "frivolous" theatre entertainment.

Further Crackdowns

Office of Public Entertainments has since refused license for production of three plays, and ordered cutting of scenes in one already giving public performances.

Affected are "Atentado al Pudor" (Design Against Virtue), a Carlos Prieto play; "La Sed" (Thirst) which was being readied for presentation at the Bon Soir Theatre and "Canasta de Ninos" (Basket of Children) slated to premiere at the Ariel last week.

In each case, Octavio Peredo, head of the Office, dubbed plays as "immoral" and unfit for public presentation.

University of Mexico's School of Architecture, presenting "El Alfarero" (The Potter) was told to cut some lines of dialog deemed too strong, and also a scene simulating childbirth.

Veronica Lake's 'Game' Reopens Atlanta's Arena

Atlanta, June 30.

Arena Playhouse here, usually inactive during the summer, is scheduled to reopen next Friday (3) for a 10-performance run of Veronica Lake in "Fair Game."

The in-the-round offering will be presented in the former Latin Quarter club.

Off-B'way Makes Print

"The Off-Broadway Theatre," edited by Richard Cordell and Lowell Matson (Random House; $5), is a collection of seven plays, presented with varying success in recent seasons in "smaller" theatres away from Times Square, N. Y. Reprints include O'Casey's "Purple Dust." Jean Anouilh's "Ardele," Prisetley's "Dragon's Mouth," Joyce's "Ulysses in Nighttown," James Lee's "Career" (currently being made into a novel from playscript and screen play), Alfred Hayes' "The Girl on the Via Flaminia," and James Forsyth's "Heloise."

The editors trace the history of the "off-Broadway" movement in a factual foreword. Excellent service to contemparary show biz is provided with this volume, possibly publication of such plays will occur annually. However, in future intros to selected plays, vital statistics should be included, such as dates, theatres, credits for casts, creative personnel and production staffs. William Gibson's "Seesaw Log" (Knopf), would be a fine example.

BRITISH REVUE OFF-B'WAY

'Share My Lettuce' Will Crash The Village Gate

An off-Broadway production of the British revue, "Share My Lettuce," which was presented in London during the 1957-58 season, is planned for a mid-July opening at the Village Gate The venture will be sponsored by Saul Gottlieb, Bathsheba Garnett and G. Roy Levin, with the last named doubling as director.

A cast of eight will be recruited for the show, written by Bamber Gasgoigne, with music by Keith Statham and Patrick Gowers. It's not certain whether the production will operate under the jurisdiction of Actors Equity since the union as yet hasn't been contacted by the management.

Jog Symphonies Re Race Bias

Urban League of Greater N. Y. has been stepping up pressure on Manhattan longhair orchestras to break their traditional disinclination to hire Negro musicians. Actually this is an old campaign. The CBS house orchestra and the NBC Symphony under Arturo Toscanini were under pressure 20 years ago.

A helpful precedent is the employment of a viola player, Selwart Stewart, 25, as contractor (hiring agent) of the Municipal Concerts Orchestra which will give 10 concerts this summer in parks. It means Stewart will have a part in recruitment of 42 musicians. He's believed to be first instance of a Negro orchestral contractor.

Urban League's recent check showed that the Little Orchestra (Thomas Scherman) had used one Negro musician and the N. Y. City Center, a tympanist. Lewisohn Stadium is just now breaking the ice.

Urban League is pointing finger at U. S. State Dept. for financing many international tours of American symphonies without a single Negro member included. Implication: this is a major flop in public relations, the very purpose for cultural subsidy overseas.

TAKARAZUKA DANCERS (OF 'SAYONARA') HIT U.S

Anton Guadagno, of the Metropolitan Opera Staff, will conduct.

Method to U. of Minn.

Minneapolis, June 30.

U. of Minnesota Theatre wants to go into the New York Actors' Studio type of histrionics. So it has brought Lee Strasberg, the Studio head, here to teach it.

Strasberg will spend all this week at the university, bringing the Theatre's actors up to date on The Method's acting technique.

He's also giving lectures every day with the public invited to attend without cost.

Nat'l Ballet In Mex Hits Snags

Mexico City, June 30.

Move by the National Institute of Fine Arts to create an official ballet company has hit some inevitable snags. Four top dancers of the 20 selected from individual dance groups have resigned.

After a period of "reflection," dancers Carlos Gaona, Valentina Castro, Aurea Turner and Vieves Paniagua declined the invitation to become permanent members of the company being created by Ana Merida, chief of the dance department at Bellas Artes. The quartet returned to its original group, the Mexican National Ballet.

Under the old setup, Mexico totaled five dancing groups—the National Ballet, the Contemporary Ballet, the Popular Ballet, directed by Guillermo Arriaga, which was virtually disbanded last year during a European tour, with only four of 14 dancers returning, and the others accepting jobs with European companies, night clubs, musicals, etc.; the New Theatre of Dance and the University Ballet.

Major part of dancers of first three groups were sustained by salaries received from Bellas Artes, even though these were irregular and small in quantity. The New Theatre of the Dance never received any federal subsidy for salaries although at times the Institute underwrote costs of theatre, costumes, produtcion, etc. This same applied to the University Ballet.

Before the selection of the 20 dancers, with this broken down into five from the National Ballet, four from the Popular and the entire Contemporary company, the Institute had issued suspension notices to all dancers receiving money from Bellas Artes.

This arbitrary selection has been widely criticized in dance circles. All this is further complicated by the fact that Bellas Artes wants an official group on a par with the Saddler Wells Ballet, the Bolshoi Theatre and the Paris Opera Ballet.

Show Abroad

Los Signos del Zodiaco

(The Signs of the Zodiac)

Mexico City, June 23.

Sergio Magana production of his own three-act drama. Stars Maria Douglas, Carlos Fernandez, Pilar Souza and Raul Dantes. Staged by Julio Prieto. At Teatro del Bosque, Mexico City, June 13, 1958; 12 pesos (96c) top.

This is a restaging of Magana's hit play of eight years ago, presented then at the Palace of Fine Arts. Part of the cast, including stars Maria Douglas and Carlos Fernandez, had appeared in the original version.

Main importance of the work is that it accents the position of this play in contemporary Mexican drama. Playwright-director Sergio Magana is among the very few here, of recent times, who can translate a slice of Mexican life with realism and efficiency. Basic theme of play is hopes and disillusionments, laughter and tears, virtue and vice that make up life of a cosmopolitan city.

With a top heavy cast, director Magana has achieved balanced performances from his actors, with work of Carlos Ruiz and Raul Dantes especially good. Mario Garcia Gonzalez, Pilar Souza, Irma D'Elias, Maria Douglas, Graciela Doring, Carlos Fernandez and the others are more than adequate. Felipe Santander, in a bit part, gave stark reality to a rebellious scene, marked by its sincerity and emotion.

Stage settings by Julio Prieto are functional and up to his customary excellence.

Inside Stuff—Legit

Fact that the touring company of "Music Man" has not yet tapped an SRO week during its long run in Chicago is not necessarily an index to ticket demand. The 2,100-seat Shubert in Chi is plagued with posts, and the show's management has made a policy of not selling the bad seats until curtain time. Even then, it's with warning that they are undesirable seats and with promise of refund if they're found insufferable. Management's motive is to show the tuner under most favorable circumstances to all customers.

Grosses for the past two weeks, topping $70,800 in each case, are felt to be as high as they will probably ever get, under the circumstances. Capacity week would be around $71,500. Show has never dropped below $63,000 in its 20 weeks in Chi and is aiming to break the city's longrun record for a tuner of 67 weeks, set by "South Pacific" in 1952. "My Fair Lady" closed after 66 weeks last season.

The presentation this week of "Diary of Anne Frank" at the Spa Theatre, Saratoga, N. Y., involves several performers connected with the Broadway production of the drama, although not as original cast members. They are Lilis Skala, Renee Haffner, Steve Press and Mildred Trares. Clifford Cothren, production stage manager for the Broadway presentation, directed the play for its Spa outing.

The Misses Skala and Haffner appeared on Broadway during part of the show's run as Mrs. Frank and Margot Frank, respectively. Miss Skala, who's dittoing as the heroine's mother at the Spa, also played the part on tour. Miss Haffner's New York association with the play also included understudying the title role, which she's playing in the Spa production.

Cleveland Amory's "The Last Resorts," originally published by Harpers in 1952, has gone through eight legit options with an eye to a musical version. Irving Berlin, Leland Hayward, Lindsay & Crouse, John Patrick, Hal Prince & R. E. Griffith, Ketti Frings and Jean Kerr all have had a crack at it at different times. Amory's previous book, "The Proper Bostonians" (1957), has also been eyed for legit. His newest is "Who Killed Society?" (also Harpers) and just published is "Belle Out of Order" (Holt), memoirs of Prohibition hostess Belle Livingston, for which he did the preface.

Boris Sokoloff, Minneapolis Symphony orchestra conductor, took umbrage at a newspaper interview remark attributed to Morris Chalfen in connection with his "Holiday on Ice" show's smash success in Russia to the effect that this particular kind of attraction was more effective in getting the American and Russian people together than "long hair attractions which would appeal only to intellectuals."

In a letter to the Minneapolis Morning Tribune editor, Sokoloff accused Chalfen of "hitting below the belt" and he explained why he disagrees with the latter's contention.

"First," wrote Sokoloff, "I think that many 'intellectuals' enjoy a good ice show and other forms of light entertainment, but implying that so-called long-hair attractions appeal only to 'intellectuals' gives a false picture.

"Speaking of the experience of the Minneapolis Symphony which appeared in 24 concerts in eight countries in Europe and the Middle East, by no stretch of the imagination could it be said that it appealed only to 'intellectuals.'"

Gingham Mingles With Mink as Central City (Colo.) Taps New Lode in Opera

By T. BIDWELL McCORMICK

Central City, Colo., June 30.

Central City, old gold burg high in the heart of Colorado's Rocky Mountains, long since a summer tourist trap, came alive anew for travellers and Denver society. Resuming its seasonal color and gayety at the inaugural Saturday (27) the 28th annual "Festival" of opera and drama at the historic Central City Opera House was launched with Johann Strauss' "Die Fledermaus," (Rosalinda), with libretto in English by Gottfried Reinhardt and John Meehan Jr., and lyrics by Paul Kerby.

Leading roles opening night were sung by Jack Harrold, Eva Likova, Judith Raskin, David Lloyd, John Alexander, Clifford Harvuot, Osie Hawkins, Arthur Malet and Grant Williams. These roles will be sung at alternate performances by Sarah Fleming, Paul Franke, Jeanette Scovotti, William Metcalf, Chester Ludgin and Joseph Folmer. Artists are chiefly from the Metropolitan and New York City opera rosters.

Orchestra was under the direction of Emerson Buckley, of Lyric Opera, Chicago, who returned for his fourth season at Central City. Stage direction was by Nathaniel Merrill, a Metropolitan Opera stage director. Original stage sets were those of Robert O'Hearn. Choreography by Mattlyn Gavers, ballet mistress of the Metropolitan Opera. Alternate performances will be conducted by Walter Taussig of the Met. doing his ninth season in the ravine.

First night of the 1959 Central City season took on the appearance of a Metropolitan Opera opening with white tie and tails, mink stoles and high fashion gowns mingling with the bluejeans and ginghams of the local mountaineers who, with good showmanship, dress up the old town a la 19th century when Central City was known as "the richest square mile on earth" and was the largest gold mining city in the world. Day and evening festivities were climaxed by "The Opera Ball" at the equally famous Teller House, one of the primitive west's most luxurious hotels, famed because "Ulysses S. Grant slept here."

Denver newspaper critics were lavish in praise of "Die Fledermaus" opening performance. Marjorie Barrett in the Rocky Mountain News said: "One of the frothiest and funny opera evenings ever presented at Central City . . . . Jack Harrold stole the show as Prince Orlofsky (usually sung by a woman) . . . Eva Likova brought to Rosalinda a rare quality of magic."

Alex Murphree writing in the Denver Post said: . . . even the sets designed by Robert O'Hearn waltzed to a Vienneze rhythm . . . utilizing stage wagons and revolving stages, O'Hearn achieved a fluidity as easy as motion pictures . . . vocal honors were about evenly divided between Eva Likova and Judith Raskin . . . and for pure fun the honors went to Jack Harrold . . . a comic high spot was the performance of Arthur Malet . . . Edith Jerell and Thomas Andrew, soloists of the ballet, accomplished choreographic difficulties with distinction."

'FOR 2c PLAIN'

Willson, Lee, Lawrence Partner on New Golden Musical

Hollywood, June 30.

Three popular figures of radio and early tv in Hollywood, who hit the jackpot on Broadway, will team up for their next stage production. They are Meredith Willson ("The Music Man") and Robert E. Lee and Jerry Lawrence ("Inherit the Wind" and "Auntie Mame").

They'll transform into a musical Harry Golden's latest tome, "For 2c Plain," the story of his early youth on the East Side of N.Y. when 2c bought a soft drink without the flavoring. Willson will compose the score and collaborate with Lawrence & Lee on the stage play. Willson starts work on the musical after he completes scoring "The Unsinkable Mrs. Brown" for Dore Schary as a Broadway production.

NEARLY KILL U. S. FUN-FUNDS

Pitch 'Open' Union For Legit P.A.'s But Managers Yet To Have Their Say

By JESSE GROSS

An open-door policy for new members is being advocated by the N. Y. pressagents chapter of the Assn. of the Theatrical Pressagents & Managers. The publicists group has resolved that the union's yearly limitation on the enrollment of apprentice drumbeaters and the admittance of regular p.a. members be eliminated.

This coincides with the termination next Labor Day of a two-year moratorium on the enrollment of new apprentices for the chapter. The moratorium was put into effect to permit an overflow backlog of p.a. novitiates to enter the union at the completion of the required three-year apprenticeship period. The backlog has been absorbed.

The chapter's stand on the lifting of restrictions includes a proviso retaining the present limitation on the admittance of its members to overall membership in the union. Thus the pressagents, in moving to take in new members as they see fit, are also taking the precaution to sidestep any infringement on the union's management and road agent chapters.

The pressagents have not yet presented their resolution to the ATPAM board of governors. It's figured the resolution will meet stiff opposition from the manager group, which, in the past, has tended to be conservative in any modification of entrance restrictions.

Under present regulations, the N. Y. pressagents chapter is permitted to enroll six new candidates annually and only two-a-year

Mexican 'Fair Lady' In Latin Tour Scratch, But Eyes Texas, Philippines

Mexico City, June 30.

Mexican company of "My Fair Lady" has cancelled its projected Latin American tour, which should have begun at end of this month. Too much political unrest in far too many countries has cast worried about being involved in "incidents" and producers feel that boxoffice returns would suffer.

It's only a temporary suspension, it is asserted. And musical will hit the road when its fair political weather ahead.

Meantime, plan is to tour the Mexican provinces, going back to Guadalajara and Monterry. Later shift may be made north of the border to Los Angeles, San Antonio and Laredo.

During American tour it is hoped that agreement will be signed permitting a tour of the Philippines.

'Fledermaus' in English At Santa Fe Opera Co.

Albuquerque, June 30.

"Fledermaus" in English opens the third season of the Santa Fe Opera Co. on Wed. (24).

Musical director John Crosby will conduct the opera orchestra and the singers for the performances. A total of six performances of the opera are planned. Other dates are June 27, July 3 and Aug. 7, 15 and 18.

Cast includes Saramae Endich as Rosalinda and Mildred Allen as Adele. Others are Elaine Bonzzi, Charles Anthony, Rolf Sander, Peter Binder, Robert Trehy, Robert Rue and Roy Lazarus.

The production is being staged by George Mully with sets and costumes by Patton Campbell.

Last week, a group of 23 Albuquerque business men opened a city-wide fund drive for the Opera Company on the theory that it is "good for the state as whole."

Gifts are being sought on an industrial and business, but not on a personal basis.

Tom Popejoy, president of the U. of New Mexico, is one of the leaders in the drive.

Denver, June 30.

Nature's own ampitheatre near here, Red Rocks, general admission tickets are to remain at $2 for the Music Festival events this year.

The decision to make no increase in prices is to encourage the attendance of families, (children are 75c)

Agatha Christie's Summer Bonanza On Royalties

British author-playwright Agatha Christie is in for a royalty mopup on the strawhat circuit this summer. She'll be represented by a flock of productions involving at least five of her London-originated plays. Of those only one, "Witness for the Prosecution," has been presented on Broadway.

The other four are "The Hollow," "Spider's Web," "Towards Zero" and "The Mousetrap." The last named, the longest running production in the history of the British theatre, is still playing in London where it opened Nov. 25, 1952. Miss Christie is also currently represented on the West End by another entry, "The Unexpected Guest," which has been running since Aug. 12, 1958.

Both Equity and non-Equity groups are giving the plays a workout this summer. The vehicles represent an almost steady yearly output by Miss Christie since 1951, which was the year "Hollow" debuted in London. "Mousetrap" opened there the following year, while "Witness" preemed on the West End in 1953. "Spider's Web" opened in London in 1954 and "Zero" bowed on the West End in 1956.

ED PLOHN REMEMBERS ACTORS FUND ($64,000)

Washington, June 30.

Actors Fund of America will receive about $64,000 from the will of Edmund Plohn, onetime general manager for George M. Cohan's productions and longtime manager of the National Theatre here, who died in Washington June 8.

Plohn's $130,000 estate, accordinf to court records, also included gifts to Jewish charities in Washington and New York and to the local Salvation Army division.

Plohn was also once manager of New York's New Amsterdam Theatre. He managed the National here from 1937 until his retirement in 1954.

12 WEEKS FOR TOTEM POLE

Tryouts Include Lane's Mystery, Stickney's 'Lovely Light'

Fayetteville, Pa., June 30.

"Divide by Two," a mystery-comedy by Robert Lane, is scheduled for a July 20-25 tryout at the Totem Pole Playhouse here. Also lined up for an early September booking at the barn as part of its pre-Broadway breakin tour, under the production auspices of Sol Hurok, is Dorothy Stickney's "A Lovely Light," in which the adaptor-actress will star.

The Totem Pole, operated by William H. Putch, began its sixth season last week with television quiz-winner Barbara Hall in "Late Love." Putch is also director, with Francis Benko, as designer; William Falkner, as stage manager; Roger Titus, as technical director, and Putch's actress-wife, Jean Stapleton, doubling as pressagent and resident cast member. The semester runs 12 weeks.

AIMED AT TICKET TAX DEDUCTIBLES

Washington, June 30.

U. S. Senate rejected the effort by Sen. Joseph Clark (D.-Pa.) to impose a $1,000 annual maximum on income tax deductions for all forms of entertainment.

The vote was 44 to 34, but left Clark with an idea to try it again later. There were 20 absentees, who, if present, could have easily turned the vote the other way.

Clark offered it as an amendment to the corporation tax extension bill and may offer it again as an amendment to any tax bill coming before the Senate. It differs slightly from his original bill to disallow "expense account" income tax benefits. His first plan laid down night club and legit theatre tickets as not deductible in any amounts. But the amendment he offered cut out all entertainment expenses topping $1,000 per year.

Paar's TV Guests Build Barn's B.O.

John Kenley, operating the Kenley Players for the second summer in Warren, O., is continuing to cash in on performers associated with Jack Paar's NBC-TV show. Peggy Cass, a frequent guest on the Paar's program, established a record straight play gross of $24,663 for the Kenley operation as star of the June 16-21 season opener, "Born Yesterday."

The show ran seven performances (six nights and one matinee) at the 2,418-seat Packard Music Hall, with the b.o. scaled to a top of $2.20 for the evening performances and $1.65 for the matinee. Besides the Paar exposure, Miss Cass also recreated the role she originated on Broadway in the film version of "Auntie Mame," which was released late last year.

Kenley previously hit the jackpot with another Paar regular last summer when French singer Genevieve starred in "Can-Can" and set a record musical gross for his low-priced stock venture, which operated in other locales prior to setting up shop in Warren.

Tallchief As Terp Lead With Chi Lyric Opera

Chicago, June 30.

The Lyric Opera Co. has signed Maria Tallchief as its star ballerina for next season. She will appear in all the performances of Ponchielli's "La Gioconda," in which she will do the "Dance of the Hours" sequence.

Ruth Page's Chicago Opera Ballet will again work as Lyric's ballet complement in all productions. Miss Page has been the company's choreographer and ballet mistress from its inception.

Tony Randall Slides In

Tony Randall, starring this week in George Bernard Shaw's "Arms and the Man" at the Westport (Conn.) Country Playhouse, had to some "jet-age" hustling to get to the barn early last week for rehearsals of the play. He began warming up in the Shaw vehicle Tuesday (23) after a hectic Friday-Monday (19-22) performing schedule in New York and Los Angeles.

His Friday chore involved 12 hours of filming an Archibald MacLeish television play in New York. After that, he planed to the Coast to tape a "Playhouse 90" tv presentation, on which he spent 12 hours Saturday, 19 hours Sunday and 12 hours Monday. Immediately following the completion of his "Playhouse 90" stint, Randall planed back to New York and from there raced on to Westport.

N.Y. Court Sez It's O.K. For Party Org To Toss Theatre Benefit For Itself

The right of a non-charitable organization to toss a theatre party benefit for itself was upheld last week in the summonses part of the N. Y. Magistrate's Court. The court tossed out a claim by N. Y. City License Commissioner Bernard J. O'Connell charging the National Lawyers Guild committed a misdeameanor by reselling, at more than the stipulated b.o. price, tickets to a performance of the Bolshoi Ballet at Madison Square Garden, N. Y.

The tickets were sold as a theatre party benefit to raise money for the Guild. The commssioner charged that the Giuld, in reselling the tickets at upped prices, violated the law by doing so without a broker's license.

The court action in the Guild case is regarded by Mortimer Greif, attorney for the Assn. of Theatre Party Benefit Agents, as a significant step "in the striking down of unwarranted restrictions imposed by the license commissioner on theatre parties."

Mt. Kisco Tryouts

A tryout of either Muriel Bolton's "Oh, Genevieve" or Davis Snow's "Starlight" is planned for this summer at the Mt. Kisco (N.Y.) Summer Theatre, which begins a 10-week season next Tuesday (30) with Jack Sterling in "Tunnel of Love." The barn will be operated this season by Charles N. Hill, who's associated with Edward R. Murrow on the "Person to Person" television show.

John Kirkpatrick will be resident director at the barn.

Jane Moultrie Loss, $8,000, Off-Broadway

Around $8,000 is figured to have been dropped on the recent 15-performance off-Broadway run of Jane Moultrie's one-woman show, "Cast of Characters." It's understood the costs involved about $5,300 to open the show and approximately $1,300 in weekly operating expenses. The gross for the entire run reportedly totaled $96.42.

The presentation, in which Miss Moultrie was assisted by actors Clay Jones and Jesse Jacobs, ran at the Downtown from June 10-21. The program was produced by Calinda Productions, presumably the name of a firm formed by Jon W. Schwartz and Frederick Halaman-Daris, who leased the house for 14 weeks, with "Characters as their initial offering.

MONY DALMES PENDING FOR BROADWAY DEBUT

Comedie Francaise actress Mony Dalmes may make her Broadway debut in "La Bonne Soupe," Felicien Marceau's current Paris smash which is closing down for the summer, after a year's run, reopening in September. Garson Kanin is adapting and producing the play with his wife, Ruth Gordon, starring in the role created by Marie Bell.

Latter has recommended to the Kanins that Miss Dalmes would make a good second lead in the American adaptation. Latter has been studying English and, apart from tv and a strawhat production last summer, this would mark her New York stage bow although she was seen on Broadway some seasons back with the Comedie Francaise in repertoire.

CENTRAL CITY AGAIN

Alternate 'Baby Doe' and English 'Fledermaus' This Year

Denver, June 30.

This summer's two works at Central City, the mining ravine hamlet which comes alive annually for Denver chi-chi and theatrical art, will be "Ballad of Baby Doe" and an English version of "Der Fledermaus."

Some 25 singers of Met and N. Y. City Center credits are in Central City for the performances, which run through July.

"Die Fledermaus" will be an adaptation of a Reinhardt version. Original staging by Nathaniel Merrill and sets by Robert O'Hearn.

A special press reception was held at the historic Teller House here in Denver. Due to the very limited seating capacity of the famous old Central City Opera House extra advance performances have been arranged for both productions to deadhead the press.

Ralph Alswang is designing the sets and lighting for "The Girls Against the Boys."

Hartford, June 30.

Sylvia Leigh's "Dark Halo," which preemed at the Arts Theatre, London, last April, is scheduled for production this summer at the Canton (Conn.) Show Shop. The barn, which is being operated for the second consecutive year by Robert Andrews, began a contemplated 20-week season June 17 with a fortnight's run of Edward Everett Horton in "The Reluctant Debutante."

Air-conditioning has been installed in the house this season and the seating capacity has been reduced to 250, but will be enlarged to 650 next year if the current semester is successful. Andrews' plans also include the launching of kiddie shows later this summer.

The silo's staff includes Lowell Matson, co-editor of the recently-published "The off-Broadway Theatre," as general manager and pressagent; Robert Judy, house manager; Arthur Haag, art director; Hubert Rolling, stage manager; Robert Russell, children's theatre director, and Allan Schwartz, technical director.

Meg Mundy in "Bell, Book and Candle" is current.

Symph Orch Proposed For Oil-Gushing Town

Albuquerque, June 30.

Proposals for a San Juan County symphony orchestra in the New Mexico oil boom town of Farmington are receiving favorable comment.

Officers are slated to be picked July 7, Walter Thimble, who is in charge of organizing the group, said.

Tentative plans call for six concerts by a 40 to 50 piece orch, four youth concerts and five chamber concerts.

Condutcor will be Bruce Bullock,, who played oboe with the Salzburg festival orch for two years while studying in Europe. He later played with the Albuquerque symphony.

Geo. S. Kaufman in Orbit

Albuquerque, N. M., June 30.

The Albuquerque Summerhouse Theatre here is presenting a George S. Kaufman Festival. The first of the festival entries earlier this month was "Once in a Lifetime," co-authored by Kaufman and Moss Hart. The second, opening tomorrow night (Wed.), will be "Solid Gold Cadillac," a Kaufman-Howard Teichmann collaboration. That'll be followed by another Kaufman-Hart comedy, "The Man Who Came to Dinner."

The barn is in its 12th season.

B'way Sags, But 9 Shows Sellout; 'Destry,' 'Raisin' Set House Records; 'Pleasure' $31,200, Phoenix $23,100

Business on Broadway dropped last week for most of the non-regular sellout shows. The b.o. decline is expected to continue through the summer. The lineup of Main Stem entries, down to 15 this week, will be temporarily cut to 13 next week because of the single-stanza layoff of "Redhead" and the start of a four-frame vacation by "La Plume de Ma Tante."

Hitting capacity last week were "Destry Rides Again' and "Raisin in the Sun," both setting house records, and "Flower Drum Song," "Gypsy," "La Plume," "Majority of One," "Music Man," "My Fair Lady" and "Redhead."

Once Upon A Mattress, Phoenix (MD) (7th wk; 56 p) ($4.60; 1,150; $29,382). Almost $23,100. Previous week, $24,400.

Closed Last Week

West Side Story, Winter Garden (MD) (92d wk; 732 p) ($8; 1,404; $64,200). Nearly $58,800. Previous week, $56,500. Exited to tour last Saturday (27) at a profit of approximately $550,000 on a $300,000 investment. A Broadway return is planned following the termination of a Chicago run, which gets underway Oct. 8.

ARLENE FRANCIS $30,000

Westport, Conn., June 30.

"Once More With Feeling," with Arlene Francis repeating the role she originated in the recently-closed Broadway production, grossed a smash $30,000 in 12 performances from June 18 to last Saturday (27) at the Westport Country Playhouse here. The top at the 755-seater is $4.40 for all evening performances except Saturday night, which is scaled to $4.85.

Tony Randall in "Arms and the Man" is current.

'Guys and Dolls' With TV's Bob Horton Hits Sock 35G in Warren, O.

Warren, O., June 30.

The Kenley Players production of "Guys and Dolls," starring Robert Horton, of tv's "Wagon Train," grossed a robust $35,000 last week in eight performances at the 2,418-seat Packard Music Hall here. The musical set an attendance record for the operation, but the gross, held down by 5,000 subscriptions, fell short of the record $36,000 take established at the spot last summer by Genevieve in eight performances of "Can-Can."

The house is scaled to a top of $2.20 for evening performances and $1.65 for matinees. "Seven Year Itch," with Dick Shawn, Sherry Britton and Sherry O'Neil, is current. Miss O'Neil also appeared with Horton in "Guys and Dolls."

Philadelphia, June 30.

"Fallen Angels," costarring Nancy Walker and Margaret Phillips, grossed a sturdy $17,300 last week at the Playhouse in the Park here.

Luther Adler in "A View From the Bridge" is current.

Concert Review

Lewisohn Stadium
(With Leonard Bernstein)

Minnie Guggenheimer premiered her annual fresco concerts Tuesday night (23) with Leonard Bernstein on the podium in front a portion of his New York Philharmonic. "Lennie," with added dignity and authority as the American-born-and-trained maestro of one of the world's great orchestras, was his own soloist in the opening menu, which offered a mixed fare of Beethoven and American composers, with the conductor-composer-pianist performing Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue."

In recent years, the Lewisohn Stadium ensemble has been dubbed the Stadium Symphony, because a number of the first-chair men of the Philharmonic elected to take the summer off. This year, however, with an ANTA European tour slated for summer season's end, most of the regular sidemen are in action and the band bears a closer resemblance to the winter-season Philharmonic. (A few were missing, 'tis said, at the Tuesday night opening, because of recording commitments which conflicted as a result of the one night's postponement due to heavy rains.)

Beethoven, a major b.o. draw at summer sessions as well as indoor concerts, was represented by his "Egmont" overture and the seventh symphony. Following intermission, Samuel Barber's second Essay for Orchestra, a suite from Aaron Copland's "Billy the Kid" and the aforementioned Gershwin Rhapsody were performed. The classical works were only adequately-presented. "Billy the Kid" fared better, with Bernstein and his cohorts playing the cowboy tunes with obvious relish and abandon.

The maestro's keyboarding in the familiar "Rhapsody" and his doubling in conducting at the same time, brought the opener to a rousing close and incited the first genuine enthusiasm of the evening.

Stage Manager As Equity Deputy

[IT'S PRACTICALLY UNKNOWN]

Mortimer Halpern, stage manager of "Song of Norway," which opens June 25 at the Jones Beach (N.Y.) Marine Theatre, has been elected by the company as its Equity deputy. The handling of the deputy's duties by a stage manager is believed to be unprecedented in the history of the union.

In the past, the eligibility of stage managers for the deputy post had been discounted on the theory that they were representatives of the producers. About a year ago a recommendation that stage managers be eligible for the deputy assignment was presented to the Equity council, which decided there was no conflict of interests and issued a ruling in support of the recommendation.

Road Sturdy, Bellamy $44,500, D.C., Ustinov $36,527 House Record, L.A.

Business on the road continued generally good last week. The musicals held strong, as did two of the straight plays, "Sunrise at Campobello," in its fourth week in Washington, and "Romanoff and Juliet," which established a house record in its third week at the Hartford Theatre, Los Angeles.

"West Side Story" joins the touring lineup tonight (Wed.) in Denver.

Estimates for Last Week

Parenthetic designations for out-of-town shows are the same as for Broadway, except that hyphenated T with show classification indicates tryout and RS indicates road show. Also, prices on touring shows include 10% Federal Tax and local tax, if any, but as on Broadway grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes. Engagements are for single week unless otherwise noted.

Literati

From Ballet To Jazz

Macmillan's "Ballet Annual 1960," edited by Arnold L. Haskell (14th year of issue) and "Theatre Annual No. 10 (1958-1959)," edited by Frances Stephens, are due in November and December respectively. Former accents ballet in U. S., Canada and England; the theatre annual is on the London legit which, of course, includes such Broadway imports as "Rose Tattoo," "West Side Story," "Auntie Mame," "Two for the Seesaw" and "Long Day's Journey Into Night."

New Yorker writer Whitney Balliett is bringing out "The Sound of Surprise (46 Pieces on Jazz)" via Dutton in August. An anthology of another sort, also a Dutton publication, will be "The Pick of 'Punch': 1959 Edition," edited by Punch's editor, Nicolas Bentley. "Best Short Stories from 'The Paris Review,'" with an intro by William Styron, is slated for October issue by Dutton, as is Ted Key's "The Hazel Jubilee," his cartoons, in the Satevepost.

Thomson's U.S. Addition

Roy Thomson, head of Scottish Television Ltd., indie program group in Scotland, has extended newspaper interests to the U.S.A., with the purchase of The Progress-Index, published at Petersburg, Va. This brings the total of newspapers owned by Thomson Newspapers in Canada and the U.S. to 28, of which 25 are dailies. Company plans to extend its interests still further in the States.

In the U.K., Thomson's interests include The Scotsman, prestige Scot daily, The Weekly Scotsman, The Evening Dispatch, and the TV Guide, all published from Edinburgh. He also acquired, recently, a group of weeklies in Inverness.

As chairman of Scottish Television Ltd., he is also responsible for shaping the pattern of home entertainment for several millions of viewers in the north of Great Britain. His company is making rapid development in this field.

The Petersburg Prograss-Index has an evening circulation of 18,154, with a Sunday circulation of 18,127.

Slang Dictionary

Harold Wentworth and Stuart Berg Flexner have collaborated on an updated "Dictionary of American Slang" which Crowell will publish in November.

"This Is Nature (30 Years of the Best from 'Nature Magazine')" is also a Crowell item for this fall, as is Jerome Beatty Jr.'s humor book, "Show Me The Way To Go Home (The Commuter Story)," due in October.

Groucho's Grouches

"Groucho and Me" is Groucho Marx's personal memoir, a Random House publication in September, wherein the veteran comedian will sound-off against certain show biz mores, personalities, ghost-written "autobiographies" and will indulge in some sharp intra-trade observation. From reports, these include references to Keith-Albee, comedians in general, the Shuberts among other things.

Cerf's Show Biz Galaxy

Random House's fall list is replete with show biz byliners, among them Groucho Marx's autobiog. Moss Hart's "Act One"; "Alfred Hitchcock Presents 'My Favorites in Suspense'"; Abigail Van Buren's "Dear Teen-Ager"; Art Linkletter's "The Secret World of Kids" (he also wrote the introduction for Max Shulman's "I Was A Teen-Age Dwarf"; "Ellery Queen's 14th Annual"; and "My Eyes Are In My Heart," by sportcaster Ted Husing with Cy Rice (who coauthored the Pancho Gonzales autobiog).

Debate Dayan's Daughter's Novel

Literary talk of the day in Israel is an autobiographical novel by 21-year-old Yael Dayan, daughter of Israel's famed G.O.C. Moshe Dayan, recently retired. Current song-parody by Israel's comedy quartet of the Theatre Club ("Dayana," derived from Paul Anka's "Diana") compares novelist to a French Francoise Sagan.

Miss Dayan wrote her first novel, "New Face in the Mirror," in a secluded villa at the Britanny Coast after having been discharged from the Israeli Army; story describes life in the army from the viewpoint of a self-centred, different, love-hungry girl, with many Israeli key-figures discernible. Israeli criticism centres round the obvious characterisations, alleged distortion of army-life, and the fact that work was written in English while Israeli-born author snubbed at her native tongue, Hebrew.

While the original English version has not been available yet from the (London) publishers, the novel was serialised in a Hebrew version in Israel's leading evening tabloid and in a German translation in a German-language newspaper in Tel Aviv. French version was just released in Paris and won rave reviews. In a London tv-interview, Miss Dayan said she was now negotiating for film rights and intends to use the summer for the writing of her second novel, which this time will be originally penned in Hebrew.

World has just published it in the U. S.

Jeann Beattie's 4th Novel

Jeann Beattie, who for seven years worked for Maclaren ad agency in Toronto (handling Wayne & Shuster among others), has her fourth novel, "Behold the Hour," published by Ryerson Press. It's about a writer-singer who, after success in Canada, gets his own tv show in N.Y.

Miss Beattie now edits Royal York Magazine, David Crombie's new slick monthly distributed in all Canadian Pacific Railway hotels, trains, planes and ships.

'Open' Union

are allowed to enter the union after completion of the full apprenticeship period. An individual is eligible for overall ATPAM membership after three years in a chapter.

The present setup, therefore, permits only two members of the N. Y. pressagents chapter to become overall union members each year. That's based on the chapter steadily admitting two new members yearly, who, after three years in the chapter, are eligible for overall membership.

The proviso in the pressagents' resolution goes along with this pattern of admittance to overall membership. In other words, no matter how many new members are taken in by the N. Y. pressagents chapter annually, the number eligible for overall membership, after the three-year waiting period, would still be two.

Thus, if the chapter admits more than two members annually, the waiting period for eligibility to overall membership will be more than three years for some. That's the situation now in regard to the backlog of apprentice pressagents admitted into the union during the moratorium period.

Swiss Crazy Over 'Mad Lucy'

Zurich, June 30.

The Swiss have re-discovered "Mad Lucy." The old hambone Italo opera of 1835, Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammormoor," not produced in Switzerland for decades, was revived at the Stadtheatre here and caught on. Result: in a five-month season, 25 performances of the work, unheard of locally and 80% of the performances sold out.

Verdi's "Destiny" and Smetana's "Bartered Bride" were runners-up in repertory with 19 performances each.

Sopranos love "Lucia," because they can go dramatically crazy. A showpiece for their voices but as tired an opera libretto as they come, the present success is divided between young Italian conductor Nello Santi and a Swiss miss, Eva Marie Rogner.

Lou Little, Quentin Reynolds, John Wayne and Craig Wood.

Gleason recalled "the things that you wouldn't believe could happen did happen here"; Considine tongue-in-cheeked that he "spent all afternoon in makeup putting a lump in my throat," but Reynolds was openly sentimental with a touching screed to Rory Shor who, at 21, on July 31, 1971, was to open this open letter and learn "what his father, Toots, was really like." Reynolds took the axiom of a 13th Century Portuguese poet—"whom man delights in, God delights in too"—as his thesis.

Television producer Jack Hurdle, Jim Fletcher (prez, Midnight Sun Broadcasting Co.) and Edward Duryea Dowling arranged the fete for the "Shor Alumni Assn."

It was a sentimental type of postmortem to a favorite sanctuary — "the joint" the regulars called it—and, in actuality, somebody cracked, "This is just like a real wake, we got the booze and there's the corpse only Toots is very much alive and kicking because he'll be out of action for a few months until the new joint's ready."

Look mag assigned Jerry D. Lewis to do the feature. He's calling it "Toots Shor, Act II." Lewis looks upon Shor's Prohibition cycle, from bouncer at Leon & Eddie's to partner in Billy LaHiff's Tavern, as Act I. The third act will be in Shor's new saloon.

by the considerations that move the State Dept., last week estimated that the dropping of 263 hydrogen bombs on 224 military targets in the U.S. would kill 48,900,000 Americans. The estimate did not take into account the number of persons who would be killed through fallout in the days, months and years following such an attack.

Spread of radiation, whose deadliness is assumed in Stanley Kramer's "On the Beach," is still a subject for controversy in the U.S. where many scientists are concerned over the pollution of the atmosphere in the wake of hydrogen and atom bomb test explosions.

The State Dept. does not have the power to prohibit the exportation of any film to the free world. It has a definite say-so when it comes to the Communist countries and nations covered by the International Media Guaranty program. Kramer and United Artists plan to simultaneously premiere "On the Beach" in more than 22 capital cities throughout the world this fall. This includes Russia and the satellites.

length color pic which is slated for and Oct. 26 preem at New York's 55th Street Playhouse. Film, which stars Shoshana Domari and Shai K. Ophir, was produced by the Habib Film Studios. National distribution of the pic is currently being set up while the date at the 55th Street is being sold to organizations and parties a la legit. ("Hatikvah" is the third pic to hit the U.S. from Israel. Other two being "Hill 24 Doesn't Answer" and "Tel Aviv Taxi." "Hatikvah," however, is the first Israeli color pic to be shown in an artie.) Frank Quinn, N.Y. Daily Mirror film critic, acted as technical advisor on "Hatikvah." He assisted on the editing, cutting and English titles. Steve Allen is planning a promotion of the pic on his NBC-TV hour.

Israeli Legitier

On the legit end, there are plans afoot for the presentation of an Israeli musical on Broadway in February 1960. The production is to star Shoshana Domari. Also entering the legit field is Eris Productions. Outfit plans to present Israeli plans in New York. In addition Eris is arranging a distribution setup for Israeli recordings and films and also is planning an exhibit of Israeli painters. Eris, which is headed by Jacob Baal-Teshuva, also has a subsid talent agency, the Israeli Artists Bureau, which now represents 70 performers.

Saul Richfield, propagandist for the Israeli pitch through his ties with impresario Leo Fuld, attributes the swing towards Israeli entertainment to the Cafe Sahbra in New York's West 70's. The Sahbra, which means "native born Israeli," was launched by Fuld in April, '57 and served as a spring board for Israeli talent in the State. Up until then Israeli appearances were limited to Hadassahs, bond drive rallies, etc.

Ed Sullivan's TVer

With the Sahbra as the starting off point many performers have moved on to tv guest shots, especially Ed Sullivan's CBS-TV hour. Shoshana Domari, a Sahbra regular, is also expanding into the pop disk fiield. Columbia records' Mitch Miller is currently working out plans for her U.S. disk debut.

Other Israelis who have worked their way into the U.S. scheme are Shai K. Ophir, who's played at the Blue Angel, in N. Y. cafes around the country and on tv specs, actor Nehemia Persoff currently in "Some Like It Hot" (UA) and recently appeared on tv as Mussolini, folk singer Theodore Bikel, who has doubled as a thesp and won an Academy Award nomination for his work in "The Defiant Ones"; singer Hanna Ahroni, who starred at New York's Chateau Madrid, Angel Lopez's latino boite; Ziva Rodinn, once voted "Miss Israel," who was spotted in tv's "Pete Kelly's Blues," and actress Haya Harareet, featured in the Metro blockbuster, "Ben Hur."

Others who are making their dent here are Oraneem Zabar, folk singing group; Nico Feldman, Israel's top singer of the Opera Tel Aviv; Zvika & Taiya, folk dancers; the Karmen Israeli Folk Dance troupe, which played New York's Latin Quarter, and Hilel & Aviva, folk singing instrumental duo recording for Elektra Records.

Further action on the pic production end are Leo Fuld's new operation to co-produce films in Israel and producer-director George Stevens' plans to film "The Greatest Story Ever Told" in Israel, using local actors in small parts.

In New York there's an Israeli colony growing between West 72d Street and West 120th Street with its own version of "espresso joints" cropping up in the area. So far there's the Royal at 91st St. and Broadway; the Casit on upper Broadway, and the Cellar Coffee House at 91st St.

for example, that some of the hot Broadway musicals such as "My Fair Lady," "Destry," "Music Man," "Gypsy" and "Redhead" could hit this type of draw in the large showshops. They feel that one company could, grosswise, take the place of three touring companies playing orthodox houses, and profit return would be much greater. They predicate this on smash N. Y. reviews and necessity to make the arena tour during shows' tenancy in a Broadway house. Offhand, that's the only readymade domestic attraction that arena men say could get this coin. The homegrown ballets couldn't get this take, and it's doubtful that even Elvis Presley, or some of the hot tv western stars, could lure this kind of coin, although the latter have been doing well in sporadic appearances.

TV'S ALLTIME TOP 10 GROSSERS

'Nuts to Broadway Nostalgia,' Says Groucho, But Where Are the Old Laffs?

By ABEL GREEN

"Nuts to nostalgia," says Groucho Marx, now in New York preparatory to his strawhat tour in "Time for Elizabeth," "but the reason we decided to stay at the Hotel Astor is because it's certainly central for all the theatres, we don't have to worry about taxis, etc., but I must say mebbe I should have stood in the Brown Derby." Marx was referring particularly to the low comedy state of Broadway musicals.

"Sure, I knew where all the comedians have gone—to tv, the the niteries, etc.—but never in recent history has there been such a paucity of laughs in a legit musical. Why shouldn't the customer get more comedy than he is now—he's certainly paying enough for it.

Only Wanted Best Terms, But It Involves Foreman In Cypriote Political Row

American film-makers, in their global wandering for authentic and new locations, can become unwittingly involved in local political situations. For example, producer-writer Carl Foreman was accused by a section of the Cypriote press of being a British agent when he declared that his decision to employ Cyprus as the location for his $5,000,000 production of "Guns of Navarone" depended on whether or not the strife-torn island remained in the Sterling area and became part of the British Commonwealth.

His prime consideration, Foreman stated in New York yesterday (Tues.), was that Cyprus remain part of the Sterling bloc because, for practical business reasons, he

Dogs Vs. Humans

Although "Sleeping Beauty" has proved a nervous entry, Walt Disney is going ahead with another cartoon feature. And there will be an advantage with the next, titled "101 Dalmatians," because the cast will comprise only dogs.

"Beauty" had humans, very tough to draw, and the production cost was $6,000,000. "Dalmatians," with the more easily sketched canines, is figured at $4,000,000.

Negro Authoress' B'way Clean-Up

Lorraine Hansberry is making a financial killing for herself and Uncle Sam in her debut as a Broadway playwright. She's thus far earned about $260,000 on her click drama, "Raisin in the Sun." The play, the first by a Negro authoress to hit the Main Stem, is currently in its 18th week at the Barrymore Theatre, N.Y., where it's been playing to capacity business.

Miss Hansberry's royalty on the play is the Dramatists Guild minimum of 5% of the first $5,000 gross, 7½% of the next $2,000 and 10% of the balance. At capacity, with standees, the production takes in about $42,000 weekly. Her share of that is around $3,900. It's figured her royalty take thus far, covering 17 weeks on Broadway and seven pre-New York stanzas, totals about $80,500.

Additional income of $180,000 is represented by her 60% author's share of the $300,000 sale of the film rights to the play to Columbia Pictures.

GODFREY IN LEAD WITH $150,000,000

By GEORGE ROSEN

Arthur Godfrey is far and away the No. 1 personality in television in terms of advertising revenues accruing to the networks. Since the premiere of his "Talent Scouts" on CBS-TV back in 1948, Godfrey single-handed has been responsible for an estimated $150,000,000 in billings through his multiple video showcasings. In the process he's become a millionaire himself.

The Godfrey figure nearly doubles the No. 2 contender for top grosses—Ed Sullivan, whose Sunday night 8 to 9 show has poured an estimated $80,000,000 in advertising revenues into CBS-TV's coffers since it went on the air as "Toast of the Town" back in '48.

Here are tv's alltime Top 10 grossers and their estimated billings records:

1.	Art Godfrey....	$150,000,000
2.	Ed Sullivan....	80,000,000
3.	Perry Como....	65,000,000
4.	D. Garroway....	60,000,000

Lovely Weather For Ozoners; Big Summer Looms

The drive-ins are heading for a record season. Distribution executives say ozoner attendance is tops thanks in large part to the weather which has favored the outdoor operations this year as rarely before.

There are now some 5,000 drive-ins throughout the country. Last year, these situations were handicapped by generally poor and rainy weather through the spring. They never caught up. This year, with spring arriving early, the ozoners

Is Moscow Film Fest Circusy Stunt To 'Distract' From U.S. Expo There?

By FRED HIFT

The real reason why the U.S. State Department nixed participation of American films in the competitive frame of the Moscow film festival is that the Government considers the timing of the festival a deliberate Soviet stunt to draw attention from the U.S. Exhibition in a Moscow park.

The Exhibition opens July 25 and runs into early September. The film festival is skedded from Aug. 3-17. It was hurriedly arranged. Invitations were received in New York after the deadline for the submission of applications had already passed.

The American film industry, via the Motion Picture Export Assn., originally—and at the advice of the State Dept.—nixed participation at the Moscow event, which carries an "approved" (but not a "recommended") rating from the International Federation of Film Producers Assns. Later on, Washington changed its mind, but with a proviso—American films would go to the Moscow festival, but only out-of-competition.

The explanation given to VARIETY was that (1.) it was too late to pick an entry for the competition, and (2.) there could "never" be competitive participa-

Paris as Roadshow

Paris, July 7.

A new twist is being discerned among the cosmopolitan tourists as far as the Lido's show is concerned.

A lot of Yanks have been bypassing this display—they've "seen it in Las Vegas."

Russians Have Landed—But Big

There couldn't be more Russians in New York short of The Revolution. At the same time, the proletariat is supporting the moujik moves with a plentiful b.o. gate. At this time there are four Russian enterprises that are powerful magnets for the masses. The biggest, of course, is the Russ cultural and technological exhibit at the N. Y. Coliseum which has broken the attendance record in the building, having scored 250,000 admissions in its first six days at $1 for adults and half price for youngsters.

The Russian Dance & Music Festival with the Moiseyev Dancers, which opened at Madison Square Garden last night (Tues.), has an advance of about $300,000, according to an S. Hurok spokesman. Figure is considered good for mid-Summer, although, it's conceded that it's less than 50% of the Garden capacity.

With these two attractions, agents from Moscow have taken over two of the largest showshops in New York.

There's a third attraction also

Lady Godiva Puts in For 'Fingerprinting' of Hoss In Atlanta (As Per Law)

Atlanta, July 7.

Every night club performer booked into Atlanta is required by city statute to report to the police station and submit to fingerprinting. Law sets a fee of $3 per head for this "service."

Booked into Harem Club and opening last week was Frances du Bay, billed as Lady Godiva, and like the original Lady G, a horse plays an important part in her act, an exotic turn. In fact, steed, a handsome honey-colored palomino, helps Godiva do her strip.

In the olden golden days of vaudeville, units frequently showed up shy of number of persons onstage as called for in contract. Often as not, there was a dog or two traveling with entourage and a softhearted house manager would

Queen Congratulates Stratford Players Then Critics Tear Show to Pieces

By ROBERT McSTAY

Stratford, Ont., July 7.

In the most brutally-panned performance by international drama critics since the Stratford (Ontario) Shakespearean Festival was founded seven seasons ago, "As You Like It" was witnessed here by Queen Elizabeth, Prince Phillip and a 2,194 capacity audience at $5 top. All seats were prior reserved except 66 for which some fans lined up 19 hours ahead at the b.o. (In the lead were a group of Idaho nurses who brought their own cots.)

In a town whose 20,000 inhabitants have paid off all their mortages from earnings during the 10-week period of the July-September festival—even women's associations have stopped selling meals in church halls because they don't need the money—the two alternated productions this summer are "As You Like It" and "Othello," with Her Majesty unwisely choosing the former.

Leaving the Royal yacht Britannia in Toronto's harbor and travelling by Royal train (really that of the Governor-General, Hon. Vincent Massey, brother of actor Raymond Massey), the Royal pair arrived here 30 mins. before evening performance time, met the mayor and local dignitaries, signed the city's guest book.

The visit marked the Royal duo's first to the Festival and their travel-route from the City Hall was down festooned avenues lined with cheering citizenry, with most gathered at the theatre where the Queen and her Prince were greeted by a 21-gun salute and fanfares while the 2,194 customers waited inside—where all flashbulb and other cameras were checked at the b.o.

Under her white mink stole, Elizabeth's dress was a lavender and rose taffeta, with a swathed bodice and stiffened short panels.

Still Leaves Mate Behind, Ex-Congresswoman Now Entering Film Biz in N.Y.

Minneapolis, July 7.

Former Minnesota Congressional representative Coya Knutson (D), who was defeated for re-election after her husband publicly complained about having to be separated from her because she was in Washington practically all of the time and declared her place was in the home with him, is entering filmmaking.

She'll still be separated from her husband, however, because she will be in New York on the board of directors of a new unnamed firm that will produce a series of children's films for motion picture theatres and television.

Instead of returning to her home in Minnesota since her defeat last November she has continued to live in Washington.

Friars Feteing Deano

Hollywood, July 7.

Dean Martin will be kudosed with a testimonial banquet by The Friars, Nov. 8 at the Beverly. George Jessel will toastmaster.

Event, first for Friars since its Lucille Ball-Desi Arnaz fete last Nov. 24, will benefit the City of Hope, with the Eddie Cantor Camp for Underprivileged Boys, SHARE and Thalians also to participate in proceeds. Dinner is expected to top $325,000, record for Friars here, reached at original Friars Frolic in 1948.

Sam Goldwyn Now Is, and Works For Own Foundation

By ABEL GREEN

The boxoffice reaction, including the strong teenage patronage already being evidenced at the Warner Theatre, on Broadway, for his "Porgy and Bess" filmusical, keyed Samuel Goldwyn to expound on his Foundation more than is his usual wont. Goldwyn's press and prolific radio-tv interviews, including those of Frances (Mrs. Samuel) Goldwyn invariably are keyed to whatever he is merchandising. And it long has been axiomatic in the picture business that each production becomes a case of "have picture, will travel," as both he and his wife hit the road to exploit same.

However, since "Porgy" is the first fresh production destined for the Goldwyn Foundation directly, the veteran producer has a somewhat special and sentimental interest in rooting for the film's boxoffice achievement since, so far as he personally is concerned, it becomes a non-profit undertaking.

Goldwyn Productions, of which James A Mulvey is president, has already been set up whereby Mrs. Goldwyn and their son Samuel Jr.

Hawaii's Duke, Swim Star, Losing Job as Sheriff

Honolulu, July 7.

Hawaii's famous Duke Kahanmoku, onetime Olympic swimming champ and long a friend of Hollywood and international celebs, is going to lose his job as sheriff of Honolulu city-county. The job is being abolished when Duke's term expires next year. For years, he's been a top vote getter.

There's been no formal announcement as yet, but Kahanamoku probably will move to Kona, Hawaii island, to join the staff of the million-dollar Hotel King Kamehameha, construction of which started last week.

Anti-Nazi Play Frankfurt Hit

Frankfurt, June 30.

This city which two years ago was weeping its eyes out at the tragic anti-Nazi, "Diary of Anne Frank" is laughing hysterically—and fighting to buy tickets—to an anti-Nazi play that looms as the No. 1 hit of the season on Frankfurt's City Stage. This is Bertold Brecht's "Schweyk in World War II," which has been a sellout every night in the three weeks it has been playing at the 1,320-seat Grosses Haus here.

In its first performance in West Germany, it met with many preproduction objections, from Frankfurt residents who resented "making a comedy out of mass slaughter," and from anti-Communists who objected to producing any play at all by Bertold Brecht, who died in the Red-controlled East Germany.

According to boxoffice figures,

Jane Wyman's Daughter In 'Miss America' Bid But Wants It on Own

Washington, July 7.

Maureen E. Reagan, 18-year-old daughter of Jane Wyman and Ronald Reagan, wants to be "Miss America."

The tall (5 feet 8) blonde looker has entered the "Miss Washington" contest, locally under radio WWDC sponsorship, with the initial judging to take place Friday (10). Both Miss Reagan and WWDC have attempted to keep her parentage a secret to avoid possibility of influencing judges.

In talent line, she's chosen two songs for the contest, "In the Cool, Cool, Cool of the Evening" and "Pink Shoe Laces." She's strong with personality before a mike, but her voice is on the weak side with limited range.

Miss Reagan came to the Washington area to attend Marymount Junior College, dropped out after a year and took a job as a secretary with a Washington real estate firm, Walker & Dunlop.

She's 36-24-36.

Busy Eddie Cantor

Eddie Cantor's medico advised both him and Ida, his wife, that the best surcease following death of their 42-year-old daughter Marjorie, a victim of cancer, was "as much work as possible." Accordingly, both are doing that, and this week the star delivered to Prentice-Hall the mss. of his newest book, "The Way I See It"; an article for Satevepost, a closeup on Will Rogers, his costar in a yesteryear "Ziegfeld Follies," which Cantor titles "Have Gum — Will Travel," plus radio-tv activities.

NBC's Herbert Sussan and he have been huddling on a 90-minute tv spectacular, "Just Off Broadway"; and for NBC-Radio Cantor has taped several three-minute shorts, built around his "Maxie, the Taxi" character to be integrated into the NBC "Star Dust" series.

The Cantors expect to come east end-September.

Soviet Exhib Talent Yens Fan Mail

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

A small contingent of entertainers is in Manhattan in connection with the Russian Exhibition at the Coliseum. They will be "spotted" in the fashion show (which looms as a top side-event) and in other ways, though nobody seemed informed on plan or schedule at a special "press concert" last Friday (3).

Three soloists, their accompanist Naum Walter, and a guitar-accordion-bass trio all performed for 30 journalists, half a dozen New York cops, various members of the IATSE and assorted pressagents—not an easy audience, though a friendly one. Afterwards, via a translator, all the artists answered questions, which tended to be fan-like to wit: What did the soprano like to cook best for her husband?. Was the 16-year-old son in Moscow of the folk singer also an artist? How old was the Bolshoi basso?

Artur Aizen (he's 32) proved to have a superb operatic voice, as exemplified in Moussorgsky and Gounod selections and one folk song in (they said) English. Not afraid to go in for a little characterization while singing. Aizen was cannily selected to please the eye of American gals. He's pink-cheeked, soft-smiling and boyish.

Alla Solenkova, the above-mentioned cooking coloratura, showed in a stylish white Chinese silk concert platform costume with trailing shoulder piece. She revealed a three-octave and a top C. Very definitely up there on a vocal trapeze, she manages her fluty register with exceptional skill for one so young. She, too, is a most wholesome-looking pretty type, likely to impress the natives.

Kapitolina Lazarenko (the one who's a mama) is somewhat older, and with more floorshow type "authority". She sang Russian folk songs in a black sequin gown. All were pleasant, the humorous song called "3-4" causing the bullfiddler (V. Zayonchkovsky) to cut a rug around his instrument while the accordionist (E. Vistavkin) and the electric-guitarist (G. Razuvaev) hotted it up.

The Russians make it plain that the entertainers dote on receiving fan mail. They will.

Realty, Show Biz Perk; Polyracial Hawaii as Nifty Fifty in Union

By WALT CHRISTIE

Honolulu, July 7.

Even if Admission Day is still to be proclaimed, the 50th State already is feeling the impact of Statehood. There's a land boom, investment money is pouring in, and tourist biz is breaking records, with Hawaii's entertainment "industry" moving into potential big time status.

Statehood won't affect Hawaii's tax structure to any significant extent. (Taxes already are higher than in most mainland states.) And it won't affect the labor scene. Harry Bridges' ILWU will continue to dominate the mid-Pacific labor picture, with sugar, pineapple, longshore and warehousing as its mainstays.

But the 50th State is a cinch to send some "cosmopolitan" faces to the halls of Congress; i.e., Congressmen of either pure Oriental ancestry or mixed racial back-backgrounds. As such, it'll be the most significant development in U. S. democracy (small "d" in this case) since the first Negro Congressman was elected. Look magazine has called Hawaii's statehood a knockout to Dixiecrats.

Now that the primary is past, it's a sure bet that at least one of the three seats (two Senators and one in the House) will be filled by a man of Oriental ancestry. Conceivably all three seats could fall

Darvas' Wall St. Prowess Likened To Terp Tempos

CHURCHY SLANTS PROFITABLE

Floyd-Ingo Film Potential: 500G

Two-reel subject of the recent Floyd Patterson-Ingemar Johansson championship fight looms as the most successful theatrical fight film ever handled by United Artists. Picture should hit a gross of at least $500,000 and may go as high as $600,000, according to William J. Heineman, UA's v.p. in charge of distribution.

Previous tops for a fight reeler was $330,000. That was the Walcott-Moore bout. Heineman said UA had 850 prints of the Patterson-Johansson set-to in circulation and more may be ordered. Short is generally being sold on flat terms.

Offers Reaching Par In Wake of Balaban's 'Diversify We Must' Idea

Since the disclosure by president Barney Balaban that Paramount is considering new diversification moves the company's top execs have been approached with offers of numerous get-together corporate possibilities. Balaban and his fellow officers so far have spotted only a couple which may have some potential but there's been nothing to reach the serious talk stage.

Interest in diversification was expressed by Balaban at the corporation's last meeting of stockholders. Some trade thought has it that the chief exec had in mind the acquisition of the Ansco division of General Aniline and Film Corp.

It's no secret that Par for some time has had its eyes on Ansco. A deal, if it were to materialize, likely would involve a purchase price of nearly $25,000,000.

BOYER-COLBERT REPEAT OF LEGIT PERFORMANCE

Hollywood, July 7.

"Marriage - Go - Round," Leslie Stevens play which took a summer hiatus June 15 after 33 weeks at Plymouth Theatre, N.Y., will be the first of a program of pictures which Stevens and Stanley Colbert's Daystar Productions will release through 20th-Fox, under deal just closed with production chief Buddy Adler. Deal covers a three-year period.

Negotiations are on with Charles Boyer and Claudette Colbert, who costarred on Broadway in property, to take over same roles in film version, which will launch 20th deal.

Daystar additionally has a deal with Martin Manulis Productions and 20th-Fox Television specifically calling for two pilot films out of an unspecified number. Pair include "Formula for Adventure," science-fact format series; and "Arsenal Stone," western.

Set Dandridge-Jurgens 'Tamango' With Roach

U.S. and Canadian rights to the French film, "Tamango," costarring Dorothy Dandridge and Curt Jurgens, have been acquired by Hal Roach Distribution Corp.

Picture was filmed in CinemeScope and color and was shot on the French Riviera. It has a racial theme.

IRVING BRISKIN'S POST

Rejoins Columbia—Heads Screen Gems on Coast

Following the recent buyout of Briskin Productions by Columbia, Irving Briskin has rejoined Col as a full-time empolyee in charge of Coast activities of Screen Gems, Col's telepix subsidiary.

In addition, Briskin was elected a vice president of the parent company by the board of directors last week.

Stop 'Thinking Yankee' In So. America; Roadshows An Absurdity In Brazil

In tailoring their selling methods abroad to conditions prevailing in the United States, the American film companies are doing neither themselves nor the local exhibitors a favor. So declared Luiz Ribeiro, leading Brazilian circuit operator, visiting N. Y. last week.

Ribeiro noted particularly the tendency to roadshow pictures. "What sense does that make in Brazil?" he asked. "We are a big market and a good one. What has happened in the United States hasn't happened to us. Not yet, anyway. We have no problems with attendance. If you schedule five shows a night, and your only real problem is how to accommodate all the people who come to the theatre, then why roadshow an attraction? All you accomplish with this is to diminish the returns."

Ribeiro opined that the U.S. companies should allow a greater independence of thought and action to their local sales heads, "the men who are familiar with local conditions. Methods that may be called for by economic conditions in the industry in America aren't necessarily the right ones for a flourishing market But New York insists on roadshows, and the local man doesn't want to take a chance of putting himself in a position where he might be wrong."

Rio de Janeiro, said Ribeiro, is comparable to Los Angeles. Roadshowing a picture in Brazil is a little like showing it only in Beverly Hills and nowhere else. "There's no point to it other than to deliberately cut down on attendance," he opined. Ribeiro reported that, though there is a vast difference in the public response to films, i.e., more people than ever go to the theatres, Brazilian and U.S. tastes are approximately the same.

Pictures that flop in the U.S. tend to flop also in the flourishing Brazilian mart, though there are some exceptions. A lot of theatre modernization is going on in the wake of the new law lifting prize controls for "de luxe" houses. Ribeiro, who's also in distribution and production, said the few native Brazilian films which he makes are very successful. Brazilian theatres are require to show six national films per year. Ribeiro himself produces four to five local pix in any one year.

The Brazilian exhib deplored the great running length of many of the American films. "They seem to think that will attract people," he said. "But it's the same story again. Our problem isn't how to attract patrons. They are still coming to the theatres in large numbers. Our problem is to please them, and to make sure we have turnover. Long pictures just cut down the number of patrons we can play to in any one night."

Kiss Tax Relief Bye-Bye for Now

Washington, July 7.

Prospects for tax relief on admission tickets or any other phase of show biz are gone for this session of Congress.

Leaders of both houses of Congress told VARIETY in interviews that when the Senate fought out several proposals to adjust excise taxes while considering the bill to extend corporation taxes (and a compromise agreement between the House and Senate was finally reached later on terms of a corporation tax bill), that ended taxes for this session of Congress.

Not even an effort was made in the Senate to trim the cabaret tax (a long sought reform by many members of Congress) or to cut admission taxes to entertainment events.

The leadership agreed that there is no chance Congress will have another significant tax bill before adjournment, although Rep. Wilbur Mills (D.-Ark.), chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, which, under the Constitution must originate any tax bill, said there might be legislation to come out yet affecting technical changes in the wording of some tax laws.

But the word from the men who run the two houses is that everyone can forget further tax relief from Congress until next year.

'Hur' Scoring Sessions; No Sneaks Before Track Completely Integrated

Hollywood, July 7.

Metro is using a 100-piece symphony orch, under direction of Miklos Rozsa, to score its $15,000,000 epic, "Ben-Hur," one of the largest orchs ever to sit in on a film's scoring. Rozsa will score in three sessions of four days each, with two weeks interspersing each sesh.

Unlike the majority of films, which are sneaked with canned music for temporary backgrounds, pic will not be shown for preview until musical score is completed. Studio is now aiming at a September preview date. Pic is now set for over three hours.

Olympic Film Set?

Rome, July 7.

It's too early for confirmations, but an unrevealed Italian company is already believed set for filming the 1960 Olympic Games in Rome.

Pic would be produced in 10 lingual versions, shot in Eastmancolor and CinemaScope, and would cost "at least" $750,000.

Direction would be in the hands of Alessandro Blasetti and a group of assistants.

George Weltner's Blow

While in the midst of important product conferences at the studio last week, George Weltner, global distribution v.p. for Paramount, received the staggering news that his daughter died suddenly in New York.

Marjorie Weltner, 29, was found dead in her Gotham apartment. The Par exec winged from the Coast immediately. Services were held Thursday (2).

EXPAND 20TH-RIBEIRO PACT TO SAO PAULO

Partnership between 20th-Fox and Brazilian circuit operator Luiz Ribeiro has been extended to another theatre, the Marroco in Sao Paulo, Brazil. House seats 1,400 and will serve as a showcase for 20th's product.

Ribeiro and 20th already have the same arrangement for the Palacio Theatre in Rio de Janeiro, which seats 1,440. The Marroco is the best and most modern house in Sao Paulo.

Domestic Week, $3,853,000, UA

United Artists' gross domestic billings for the week ending July 4 hit $3,853,000, setting a record mark for the company's 40-year history, William J. Heineman, UA v.p. in charge of distribution, reported Monday (6).

The previous high for a single week was $2,437,000 and it was set during the corresponding week in '58. Pictures contributing to last week's gross included "Some Like It Hot," "The Horse Soldiers," "Around the World in 80 Days," "A Hole in the Head," "Pork Chop Hill" and "Shake Hands with the Devil."

Constance Hope, publicist operating in longhair areas, added to Columbia Pic's promotion on retainer. Will work on Bill Goetz's upcoming "A Magic Flame." (Franz Liszt biog with Dirk Bogarde).

National Boxoffice Survey

July 4 Hypoes Biz; 'Story' New Champion, 'Horse' 2d, 'Hercules' 3d, 'Earth' 4th, 'Pennies' 5th

Continuous flow of new, strong fare into key cities plus an unusually big July 4 holiday weekend is making the current session a strong one at the boxoffice. Favorable theatre weather is providing an added hypo to the upswing.

New boxoffice champion is "Nun's Story" (WB), which was second a week ago. "Horse Soldiers" (UA), first last session, is holding in a strong second position. "Hercules" (WB), out for first time this week to any extent, is capturing third place with every indication of being heard from additionally since so big in many locations.

"This Earth Is Mine" (U) is winding up a stout fourth after being in third place last stanza. "Five Pennies" (Par) is capturing fifth spot, being the first time out extensively in many keys.

"Don't Give Up Ship," also from Paramount, is finishing sixth, same as a week ago. "South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama) will take seventh money. "Ask Any Girl" (M-G), high on list for some time, is capturing eighth place.

"Room At Top" (Cont) is landing in ninth position, with some new smash showings this week. "Gigi" (M-G) rounds out the Top 10 this frame.

"Diary of Anne Frank" (20th), "Love Is My Profession" (Kings) and "South Pacific" (Magna) are the runner-up films.

Big batch of new pictures dots the first-run map covered by VARIETY this round. "Hole in Head" (UA) looks more and more like a blockbuster. It is torrid in Boston, socko in Chi, smooth in L.A. and wow in Washington. "Anatomy of a Murder" (Col) also looms as potentially great, based on three opening engagements. It is wham in two N.Y. locations and boff in L.A.

"Big Circus" (AA), mighty in Denver, is rated excellent in Washington. "Darby O'Gill" (BV), great in Chi, looms big in N.Y. and mild in L.A. "Hound of Baskervilles" (UA), also new, is good in Toronto, but mild in N.Y. and Philly.

"North by Northwest" (M-G) shapes sockeroo in Chi. "Beat Generation," also from Metro, looms good in Frisco.

"Mysterians" (M-G), which has been around for some time now, is big in Toronto. "Compulsion" (20th), light in Toronto, looks good in Washington.

"Shaggy Dog" (BV) is hep in K.C. "Windjammer" (NT), okay in Cleveland, shapes sturdy in Portland.

"Porgy and Bess" (Col), the Samuel Goldwyn production, is absolute capacity in N.Y. at the Warner Theatre. "Some Like It Hot" (UA) continues its amazing run at the N.Y. State, now being in its 15th stanza. "Imitation of Life" (U) is rated okay in Louisville on a very long run.

PASTORS, NUNS & BIBLE APPEAL

Religion and the bible are again capturing Hollywood's attention.

The attractions of the romance are mutual. Producers know that religion and religious themes are—for the most part—boxoffice, particularly if they can be dressed up via the color cameras and the wide screen. The various denominations like to see spiritual values portrayed on the screen.

The preponderance of religious subjects, with the exception of pre-Peter Biblical themes, is still within Roman Catholicism. "The Nun's Story" is doing very well, and so is "Say One For Me," which has Bing Crosby in his by-now familiar role of a jaunty priest.

Curiously enough, film people don't feel that such pictures are successful because of any particular loyalty on the part of Roman Catholics in the U.S. "Say One For Me," with the added attraction of Debbie Reynolds, is doing business in Protestant areas of the South where the presence of a priest as a major figure wouldn't necessarily help the boxoffice.

20th's Re-Issues

Sensing that religious stories with Protestant principals would also make their mark, 20th-Fox has re-released two such pictures—"I'd Climb the Highest Mountain" and "A Man Called Peter"—as a combination. It's been doing very satisfactory business.

For the first time, several films dealing with Jewish people are coming up. "Diary of Anne Frank," of course, was such a story. Otto Preminger will film Leon Uris' "Exodus" and Stanley Kramer has "My Glorious Brothers" on his sked. Both will be shot in Israel.

Tendency in films has been to play down the Jewish angle. This was done in two recent releases, "Hole in the Head" and "Middle of the Night." Theory in the film trade is that markedly Jewish backgrounds don't sell. "Anne Frank" as a roadshow didn't draw well despite a big campaign. However, it's reversed itself in the regular engagements. Picture is still considered a problem.

By contrast, films about priests and nuns as a rule have done well. Pace was set with "Boy's Town," "Going My Way" and "The Bells of St. Mary's."

A number of big productions, using Biblical themes, are in the offing. Among them are "The Greatest Story Ever Told," "The Story of St. Paul," "Solomon and Sheba," "The Son of Man" (The Story of Christ), "Ben Hur" "The Miracle," "The Story of Ruth" and "The Story of Mary Magdalene." Current is Walt Disney's "The Big Fisherman." Film called "The Evangelist," which has a contemporary setting, also is planned.

Push Ozoner Release To 31-Day Texas Slot, Previously Up to 6 Mos.

Dallas, July 7.

Claude Ezell, prez of Ezell Theatres, has a new film booking policy for his drive-in theatres in and near Dallas. Films will reach the ozoners earlier than in the past, as soon as they become available to any theatre for subsequent engagements following first-runs.

Most features will be shown in 31 days slot. In the past, ozoners had to wait as long as six months.

Ezell said that under this policy, the circuit's ozoners have "Rio Bravo" (WB) at the Buckner Boulevard, "Woman Obsessed" (20th) at the Northwest Highway, Denton Road and Jefferson and "The Hangman" (Par) at the Hampton Road and Lone Star.

Movie Tele-News Inc. has been authorized to conduct a news service in New York, with capital stock of 200 shares, no par value. Bernard Werner, Kipnis & Karchmer, New York, is a director and filing attorney.

Fading, Fading—One-Man Rule; Yates' Republic Exit Latest Instance

The era of one-man boss rule at various of the Hollywood studios did a further fade this past week as Herbert J. Yates, who founded Republic 46 years ago and since held it in tight control, relinquished this control to Victor M. Carter, California banker and real estate operator.

The Yates bowout didn't come as a surprise. That he and Carter were maneuvering a stock deal had been known in the trade for some time; VARIETY a couple of months ago reported the transaction would be consummated at a board meeting July 1 with Yates taking on the board chairmanship in substantially a consultative capacity and with Carter taking the reins as president.

That's exactly when and where it happened.

In earlier film days the lots identified largely with one individual—Carl Laemmle with Universal; Louis B. Mayer with Metro; the Jack and Harry Warner combo at Warners; Howard Hughes at RKO and Darryl F. Zanuck at 20th-Fox, etc.

Such identity increasingly diminished as personnel in top command changed and/or as "New York" stepped up its concern about studio matters with more than a little prodding from stockholders. Yates had the kind of absolute rule that is no more.

Carter and a group of associates bought 400,000 shares of the Rep common stock in addition to preferred and debenture securities from Yates and members of his family at a price unofficially quoted by said source to be "slightly under $6,000,000."

Carter returned to his Coast headquarters following the Wednesday board session without dropping any clues about his plans for the company, A key question left unanswered, for example, is his ideas about Rep taking up again in the business of making and distributing theatrical films.

One apparently-inside observer said that the new chief exec, following meetings with "his people," likely will disclose in some detail the company's future operandi and this disclosure ought to come shortly, perhaps this week.

Roy Disney: 'Our Stock Too High'

The president of a film corporation listed on the N.Y. Stock Exchange. in a surprising switch from what might be expected, said his company's common shares had been bringing too high a price from investors and recommended some leveling off.

Roy O. Disney, prez of Walt Disney Productions, told a reporter in New York this past week he thought the quotation of $59.50 per share for the stock, which was its high level for the current year, was way out of line. And he communicated this message to his brokers and other associates.

Disney said he felt a more realistic price would be in the mid-40's, to which point it has since fallen, on the basis of company assets and earnings.

As noted in VARIETY several months ago, when many film stocks were still soaring, certain picture execs were not too happy with the situation. They believed that investments were being made on the anticipation of upped stockholder benefits and if these were not forthcoming there would be stockholder beefs.

Disney's dividend policy of 40c per share in cash annually plus a 3% stock melon in continuing.

Disney Into MPEA

Walt Disney organization has joined the Motion Picture Export Assn. effective July 1, 1959. Disney outfit earlier had become a member of the Motion Picture Assn. of America.

Disney will not participate in any international film deals negotiated and signed by MPEA prior to the July 1 date.

Gronich-Flaud Talking; New Film Accord Pends; France's Economy Better

Paris, July 7.

Talks are being continued here between Fred Gronich, Continental manager of the Motion Picture Assn., and Jacques Flaud, chief of the Centre Du Cinema, looking to a new film accord to replace the one which expires this week. MPEA prez Eric Johnston and v.p. Griffith Johnson arrived last week to take part in winding up the accord.

The Yank outfits feel that liberalization of the American quota (110 films per year) and of remittances is in order. They point to the improved economic situation in France, to the harder currency and the upbeat status of the French industry as valid reasons why the American demands should be met.

(In New York, the belief is that the current Franco-American film deal will simply be extended for a year until the current mixed-up situation under the new French film aid law has simmered down. Latest report was that Flaud, whose status in the Centre is quite uncertain, had gone on a vacation.)

The Americans have not specified an exact total of licenses above the current 110 which they hope to get in any new deal. They do point out, however, that the French mart now has reached the point where exhibitors are in need of more product. There are various other factors, including shrinking French production, which support the argument for greater U.S. importation.

Yank outfits maintain they have no intention of dumping and that they know that the French market can take only a limited number of additional U.S. starters. Figure of 150 pictures has been mentioned. Also, the current $3,000,000 limit on official remittances is considered small in the light of the fact that a film like "God Created Woman" can earn $4,000,000 in the States.

There appears little doubt that the French have abandoned their idea of allocating licenses on a "merit" basis to the U.S. companies. They did that last year, but great confusion resulted, with MPEA determined to maintain a division under its own global license formula. Eventually, the Centre gave in and provided additional permits. These, plus some leftover permits from RKO, straightened out the situation.

U's Chi Sales Rally

Universal will begin a three-day sales meeting in Chicago today (Wed.) to map releasing plans for the upcoming months.

Headman Milton R. Rackmil will open the meeting and participate in some of the sessions, which will be presided over by general sales manager Henry H. Martin.

Distribution plans to be set include those on "Pillow Talk," "Operation Petticoat," "Spartucus," "The Snow Queen," the full-length Soviet cartoon, and "Sapphire," a J. Arthur Rank Productions.

Attending from New York with Martin will be F. J. A. McCarthy, assistant general sales manager; James J. Jordan, circuit sales manager, and Jeff Livingston, eastern ad manager.

Regional sales managers participating will be Joseph B. Rosen, New York; Barney Rose, San Francisco; P. F. Rosian, Cleveland, and R. N. Wilkinson, Dallas.

Foreman Seeks OK On Some Smallies

As part of what he terms a diversification program, producer-writer Carl Foreman, who headquarters in London, is in New York to work out an arrangement with Columbia, his bankroller, whereby he can augment his blockbuster schedule with at least two small budget entries annually.

Contending that the big picture is not the only answer to the industry's problems, Foreman declared yesterday (Tues.) that his reason for wanting to undertake the small budget entries is twofold—(1) it offers an opportunity to present "a picture of ideas" as distinct from the strictly commercial pictures, (2) it presents a chance to develop new creative talent.

B. H. K. Theatres Inc. has been authorized to conduct an entertainment business in Saugerties, Ulster County, N. Y. Capital stock is 200 shares, no par value. Directors are: Roy A. Olsen and Helen B. Olsen, and William Smith Jr. Schirmer & Carnright, also Saugerties, were filing attorneys at Albany.

Berlin Fest Grows Skeptical Of Freeloading, Do-Nothing Press

By HAROLD MYERS

Berlin, July 7.

Berlin film festival, which winds tonight (Tues.), has come into its own this year as an active and successful trade fair, attracting film buyers and sellers from all over the world. Its artistic success has been limited, due largely to a surfeit of product, but it has become firmly established as a market place, an event of commercial significance.

While the emphasis has been on trading, there has been more substantial star support than in recent years, and the round of social engagements more than equals the combined diary entries for Cannes and Venice. Berlin, particularly, needs that extra whirl to compensate for the lack of diversion as per the beaches of the Riviera and the Lido.

There has not been adequate discretion in the selection of film entries. Too many of the features screened had no place in a festival by any reasonable standard. Quite a few from some of the smaller, remote producing nations have proved an embarrassment to visiting industryites and pressmen. Something of a compromise between the rigid one-a-day policy of Venice, and anything-goes of three-to-four-a-day of Berlin is obviously still needed.

This year's event encountered minimum friction. Overshadowing political crisis concerning the future of this divided city brought a sense of proportion to the proceedings. Inter-delegation squabbles, which have frequently marred previous annual events here, were virtually non-existent. Harmony has reigned during the 12 days. Only the "restricted" guest lists

Berlin Film Fest Chatter

By HANS HOEHN

Berlin, July 7.

David Niven says he's made 63 features but seen only nine of them. He hasn't even seen "Ask Any Girl," the official U.S. entry in which he stars . . . Burl Ives enamored of redoing one of the old Emil Jannings pix in Germany . . . Harry Belafonte ditto would like to make a film in Germany. But it's the old story: He must like the script . . . and the salary, of course.

Rita Hayworth, easily the Number One foreign star here, was hardly seen during her six-day stay. She turned down party invitations and practically all interviews and often went to bed very early.

Willy Brandt, Berlin's mayor, was asked who's his favorite actress. Answered he: "I haven't much time to go to the movies any longer. When I still had time, it was Ingrid Bergman."

Practically incognito in town: Elia Kazan . . . Elsa Maxwell sent a cable: Arrive in Berlin provided I get a seat on the plane.

Niven was asked how he manages to keep his figure. "Well, I just eat and drink, that's all," he said. Asked whether he's coming to the wine-tasting spree on Saturday, he said: "That's why I came to Berlin."

At a big-scale variety show at Deutschlandhalle, Van Heflin came along with a great speech. Unfortunately, only some of the 12,000 could understand what he meant. Some shouted: "Dolmetscher!" (Interpreter). Heflin, apparently not so sure of his school German anymore, thought they meant he should speak louder. So he did. It was probably the loudest speech ever heard at this place. But this didn't help the situation, of course, It's a pity since his (partly political) speech should have been understood by all.

Guests who don't know German are offered the possibility of a receiver which enables them to hear the German subtitles or dialogs and comments of the festival pix presented in the Zoo Palast in English, French and Spanish. Those high-frequency receivers have been manufactured by Siemens and are a novelty at this festival.

Poor John Kitzmiller. He just can't convince people that he was not the colored fellow in Rosselini's "Paisa." What shall I do? he asked. "In France I saw even a 'Paisa' poster with my name on. Again: I was the Negro in 'To Live In Peace' but NOT in 'Paisa.' Kitzmiller, who hails from Detroit, lives now in Rome and hasn't seen the States since 1953, has made meanwhile 30 Italian, four French, one Yugoslavian and one Anglo-American pic so far.

Flown in from Munich: A sex-loaded looker by the name of Barbara Valentin. She's to play the leading role in "Operation Glamour" which John Harris and Bernard of Hollywood (the photographer) will produce in Germany.

An American producer made an approach and found out this: Curt Jurgens is now valued at $275,000 per film . . . The happiest people here last week: The Swedes. These usually reserved fellows really lived it up when they heard that their "Ingo" (Ingemar Johansson) had won the world heavyweight title. The cognac flew like wine . . . the Finns are on the go this year. Local papers team with ads pertaining to their film "Sven Dufva." Never before at a local film festival they spent so much energy and money on publicity. At the opening, the looked happy if only for a few minutes. Emcee Hans Soehnker, local actor, had introduced—tactfully in alphabetical order—the various nations. Came Denmark and came France and between them Finland should have been. But somehow Soehnker overlooked the name Finland on his manuscript. A note was smuggled up to the stage and Finland came after the United States at the end of this foreign nations' introduction. The publicity the happy Finns now got was even bigger than expected . . . Esther Williams kept late hours here. Nothing unusual to see her around 4 or 5 a.m. on the roof garden of the Hilton.

Notes From the Berlin Film Festival: Irvin Shapiro has acquired U.S. rights to two of the Berlin fest entries — "Der Rest ist Schweigen" (The Rest is Silence), a modern German version of "Hamlet," and "Les Cousins" (The Cousins) one of the two French contenders. He's also bought "Rosemarie," one of the top German grossers of the year, which was first presented at the Venice fest last year . . . After staying almost a week at the festival, David Niven had to check out two days before the screening of his film, "Ask Any Girl." . . . For Rita Hayworth and James Hill, Berlin was a first time festival experience . . . Major problem at all the receptions is to cope with the gate crashers. In an attempt to beat the freeloaders at the MPEA midnight barbecue at the Hilton, Leo Hochstetter enlisted the aid of the German police . . . Associated British Picture Corp. had a 20-strong delegation in for the screening of "The Siege of Pinchgut," headed by Eric Fletcher (deputy chairman) C. J. Latta (managing director) Sir Michael Balcon (producer of the film) and Macgregor Scott (head of the distribution division) . . . The East Berlin film studios also entered the act by holding a press conference for visiting newsmen and tossing a late night supper party in Eastern sector . . . Eric Steinberg, ex-RKO and now the Metro topper in Germany, hosted a press cocktailery for Niven . . . Harold Muller. the Columbia boss, dittoed for Hayworth and Van Heflin . . . Robert Aldrich, this year's jury president, is the third American in a row to have had the honor. The others were Jay Carmody and Frank Capra.

France Tops Berlin With 'Les Cousins'

Japan's Kurosawa as 'Best Director'—Gabin, MacLaine Top Troupers

Berlin, July 7.

The Berlin film festival wound up tonight (Tues.) with a surprise winner — France's "Les Cousins," directed by Claude Chabrol, the "wunderkind" of the French industry. It was France's second international triumph this year since "Orpheu Negro" won the prize at Cannes.

The Berlin jury acclaimed Japan's Akira Kurosawa as the best director for his film, "Kakushitoride no Sanakunin." Jean Gabin got the nod as top male actor for "Archimede Le Clochard" (France) and Shirley MacLaine was judged best femme actress for her work in "Ask Any Girl" (Metro), the official U.S. entry. Haylay Mills, British moppet, rated prize for "Tiger Boy."

Walt Disney got his eighth Berlin prize in nine years, capturing the best documentary award for his "White Wilderness."

Film Shares, as Group, Decrease

For the first time in over a year film company shares on the New York Stock Exchange, as a group, decreased in value in the month-to-month comparisons. Contributing to the slip were Disney, Paramount, Loew's Inc., Warners and 20th-Fox.

Film outfits collectively fell 2.6% during the month of June. In April they had gone up 6.6% and in May up 2.7%.

For a switch, radio Broadcasting stock went up 5.9% in June after a loss of that same amount in May.

Stanley Buy-Out Of Contract From Cinerama Prod.

Stanley Warner is negotiating to buy out the contract of Cinerama Productions Corp. It's understood that terms of a deal have been agreed upon but that the official signing of the papers awaits the outcome of a tax ruling.

The theatre chain already owns 80% of the outstanding shares of Cinerama Productions. This block of stock was obtained via a share-for-share exchange of Cinerama Inc. stock which Stanley was required to dispose of under an agreement with the antitrust division of the Dept. of Justice. Excluding the shares held by Stanley Warner, there are 213,000 shares of Cinerama Productions stock in the hands of the public.

Stanley Warner has long sought to eliminate Cinerama Productions as a factor in the Cinerama setup. Under terms of the original agreement, which saw Cinerama Productions turn over its production and exhibition rights to SW, Cinerama

Germans Pin a Medal
[On Johnston]

Berlin, July 7.

Eric Johnston, president of Motion Picture Association, has been awarded the German Service Cross in appreciation of his services to promote free trade in Europe.

The investiture took place last Saturday (4) in the Berlin Town Hall. The presentation was made by Mayor Willy Brandt on behalf of the German government.

20th's Pre-Broadway Buy Of New Axelrod Comedy

Hollywood, July 7.

Buddy Adler has purchased new George Axelrod play, "Goodbye Charlie," for 20th-Fox filming at price which on escalator potentially involves $500,000.

Play will hit Broadway Dec. 15 as a Leland Hayward production, starring Lauren Bacall and Sidney Chaplin. Film version isn't likely to roll until 1961.

Barnett Glassman, prez of Pathe News, leaves for Europe July 10 to huddle on coproductions and to work out details of his projected, "The Lucky Luciano Story."

PRODUCER RISKS RATE TOP TERMS

By GENE ARNEEL

It's the public who pays for film entertainment—and not the exhibitor. This is the reply from Roy O. Disney, president of Walt Disney Productions, to theatremen's complaints about this film company's sales policies.

Disney organization, via its Buena Vista distribution wing, demanded top scales for its expensive cartoon feature, "Sleeping Beauty," along with its inexpensive live-action comedy, "Shaggy Dog." The terms for "Beauty" included roadshow tariff and per-capita tickets for children at the drive-ins, latter being a situation that resulted in one antitrust suit on the allegation of price-fixing.

In New York from the Coast last week, Roy Disney asserted he doesn't understand the exhib attitude.

And he backs his argument with this heretofore-unspoken (out loud) sentiment: In all cases where there has been an inequity so far as the licensing terms are concerned there has been and there will continue to be an adjustment in the exhibitor's favor.

Spelling it out specifically, the theatreman, having agreed to a particular deal on rentals, may ask for and will be given the adjustment following an engagement that rendered the rental inequitable for the exhib, according to Disney.

Cost Not Factor

On that other point, the exec insists it shouldn't matter just how much the cost of a production is so far as determination of rental is concerned. One is not related to the other, for the simple reason that the public provides the payoff. And if this same public is agreeable to paying the same for "Shaggy Dog" as it is willing to pay the same for "Sleeping Beauty," why should the exhibitor want the lion's share of the profit when it was the producer who, at the outset, took all the risks on both the modest and the blue-chip production investments?

"Sleeping Beauty" represented blue-chip investment in the area of $6,000,000. Disney claims that "the picture will make it, but not by much," and this can be taken as his answer to some trade conjecture that "Beauty" is shaping as an economic lemon. To many, it looked wobbly at the start, what with the roadshow prices for a 75-minute cartoon, but then, as one Disney spokesman observed on the side, the public pays for quality and not for quantity.

As for "Shaggy Dog," which cost less than $1,000,000, the domestic (United States and Canada) ought to be around $8,000,000. Disney says it will be the biggest picture in the company's history both in terms of proft and gross, which is a lot to say about a production whimsically dealing with a boy who magically turns into a dog every off and on.

Speaking about the film business generally, Roy Disney calls it a "fighting business." It's a fight to win the public's favor and in this respect he places the emphasis on the foreign market. Recently abroad, Disney found a situation that parallels the domestic economy of some years ago—that is, in many overseas territories the local citizens are now free to buy (on installment) the hard goods that weren't available to them before. As the economy in various locations solidifies, the localities can come upon automobiles. "And if it's a nice day they want to go for a ride, not attend pictures," notes Disney. Also they now are in process of paying for the television sets, refrigerators, and so on. This is tough competition, and it means a fight.

VARIETY's regular weekly boxoffice reports are summarized each month, retrospectively. Based on an average of 24 key situations, the source data constitute an adequate sampling of current releases but are not, of course, fully "definitive." An index of relative grossing strength in the U. S. - Canada market, this monthly reprise does not pretend to express total rentals.

Strong product during the final two weeks in June made the month. Though getting no help from holidays and having to contend with the usual graduation distractions, many first-runs coasted with holdover fare until the middle of the month when a whole batch of b.o. hits helped to give the entire cinema setup a brighter glow. Milder than usual weather plus plenty of rain was a plus factor.

Heading the pace-setters for June is "Young Philadelphians" (WB) which came near hitting the $1,000,000 gross class for the month. Not far behind is "Some Like It Hot" (UA), champ in April and May. An easy second-place winner, this Marilyn Monroe starrer continues to amaze even the most optimistic exhibitor. It's record run, of course, is at the revamped N.Y. State where currently in the 14th week, and due to stay until the middle of July.

"Pork Chop Hill," another from United Artists, is capturing third position although not displaying sustained strength in all keys. "Ask Any Girl" (M-G) is winding up fourth by dint of two high weekly ratings and plenty of individually big playdates. Of the four leaders in June, three are newcomers. "South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama) is taking fifth spot. It was sixth in May.

"Room At Top" (Cont) is copping sixth position as against seventh place in May. "It Happened To Jane" (Col) is landing seventh money. "Woman Obsessed" (20th), a new entrant like "Jane," is capturing eighth place.

"Diary of Anne Frank," also from 20th-Fox, is taking ninth posi-

Presidents Still Inaccessible As Exhibs Gripe

Further conference between the American Congress of Exhibitors and the film companies awaits the presidents of the latter getting together to discuss the issues presented by the exhibitors at the initial and precedental meeting more than a month ago. Apparently no date has been set among the presidents.

Scheduling depends on the availability of Eric Johnston, president of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, who took part in the ice-breaking session and reported to presidents as their spokesmen that the conference had been a harmonious one and that further meetings ought to take place.

Even the most enthusiastic supporters of the Congress of Exhibitors are beginning to become annoyed by the constant delays and the inability of C. of E. to achieve its aims. Dissenters charge nothing has been done to alleviate the plight of exhibition.

That the "firebrands" who were talked into support of C. of E. are becoming restless seems clear. Many theatremen cannot comprehend why it should be so difficult to arrange a meeting with production-distribution, particularly since representatives of the latter have shown an apparently sincere inclination to sit down around a conference table.

Explanation being offered is that Paramount's Barney Balaban, Warners, Jack L. Warner, Universal's Milton R. Rackmil and possibly Columbia's Abe Schneider are not convinced of the value of discussing trade practices with the representatives of exhibition.

Wall Street Scene

Rumors afloat again about Joan Cohn selling out her stock in Columbia. Names dropped as prospective buyers are Lou Chesler and Milton Gordon. But, importantly, a key Columbia officer says there's nothing to it; Mrs. Cohn is not interested.

Glen Alden common shares hit a new high of $23.37 this week and at the same time was near the top in terms of volume with 279,000 shares exchanging hands. Interest stirred by reports that Alden, whose principal holding is RKO Theatres, is angling to buy out grocery chain, Butler Bros.

Edgar A. Manning Jr. elected a v.p. of Bankers Trust. He heads the amusement industries division and as such is a key member of the film-loan fraternity.

General Precision is issuing 105,928 shares of $2.98 cumulative preferred stock.

Wall Streeters In Psycho-Probe Of Film Trade

Wall Street more and more has the film and theatre companies on a psycho couch. Whereas in past such outfits as Standard and Poor's, Bache & Co., and Merrill Lynch kept a fairly close watch on the amusement industry, numerother brokers and their analysts now also are probing.

Shields & Co. last week got up a special report on Stanley Warner. Eastman Dillon investigated Warners. Others are getting out private reports.

The Johnny-come-lately sleuths, it must be noted, however, are not particularly interested in the picture or theatre business. They're probing for clues anent continuing diversification moves on the part of the film corporations. The reference is to diversification that would tend to send upward the film company's securities.

Glen Alden (RKO Theatres, et al.) was the second most active of all stocks on the big board last week, with 199,700 shares traded. It closed at a new high of $20.25 per share. Reason: the analysts found out about a new diversification which Alden is up to, this being for acquisition of Butler Bros. control.

The Big Circus
(CINEMASCOPE-TECHNICOLOR)

Top production of Big Top story. Allied Artists has something to sell in the Irwin Allen pic, and b.o. should be strong.

Hollywood, June 30.

Allied Artists release of a Saratoga-Vic Mature Production. Stars Victor Mature, Red Buttons, Rhonda Fleming, Kathryn Grant, Vincent Price, Peter Lorre, David Nelson. Produced by Irwin Allen. Directed by Joseph M. Newman. Screenplay by Irwin Allen, Charles Bennett and Irving Wallace; camera, Winton Hoch; editor, Adrienne Fazan; music, Paul Sawtell and Bert Shefter. Previewed at Academy Theatre, June 22, '59. Running time, 108 MIN.

Hank Whirling	Victor Mature
Randy Sherman	Red Buttons
Helen Harrison	Rhonda Fleming
Jeannie Whirling	Kathryn Grant
Hans Hagenfeld	Vincent Price
Skeeter	Peter Lorre
Tommy Gordon	David Nelson
Zach Colino	Gilbert Roland

Irwin Allen's "The Big Circus" is a rousingly lavish film, stocked with tinted elephants, snarling lions and three rings of handsome production. While at times it looks too much like Hollywood's view of the big top, rather than reality, it is shrewdly calculated to satisfy the peanut-and-sawdust yen of the millions to whom circus-going is a less frequently available diversion than in past generations. Allied Artists is giving "The Big Circus" the big push, and its chance at the boxoffice stands at a similarly grand level.

Victor Mature, Red Buttons and Rhonda Fleming top a good cast that is a substantial asset. Each member — also including Kathryn Grant, Vincent Price, Peter Lorre, David Nelson and Gilbert Roland — delivers a performance that is as complete as can reasonably be expected within the framework of spectacle. The adventure, drama and humor of "Circus" are put into precise, sometimes expert, perspective by director Joseph Newman who capitalizes on the big top atmosphere to create a film with extensive mass appeal. Producer Allen conceived the screen story, which has a tendency to become rather pedestrian through the use of such cliches as a circus fire, an escaped lion, a nasty saboteur and a misunderstood hero. Yet the screenplay, by Allen, Charles Bennett and Irving Wallace, is skillfully constructed to give the most dramatic moments free reign.

"The Big Circus" shows how "the biggest show on earth" stays out of the grave, surviving one setback after another. Mature is owner of the enterprise, and, to gain a needed bank loan, must make room for Red Buttons, a bank employee who watches dollars and cents as intently as a tow-headed youngster watches the man on the flying trapeze.

When unremitting rains practically ruin the show's chance for survival, the big toppers dream up a stunt that will put the star wire walker, Gilbert Roland, on a line spanning Niagara Falls. After many dramatic asides, Roland successfully walks above the rapids, insuring the circus' immortality and his own. (This stunt has been performed by Blondin and others — but long ago.)

The role of circus impresario Henry Jasper Whirling is the kind Victor Mature does best. He's strong, exhibiting an underlying softness, and he's sincere in achieving what he alone can achieve, in this case setting the wheels in motion to save his circus. Buttons is excellent, mild as the cold banker, strikingly human as a substitute clown and minute-man aerialist. Rhonda Fleming's beauty is an asset to "Circus," her portrayal of a femme flack an honest, highly skilled one.

Roland adeptly combines confidence and fear as the star attraction, creating a sharp characterization. Kathryn Grant is thoroughly appealing as Mature's sister, coming across sweet, yet strong and indicating her future abilities.

Vincent Price is perfect as the ringmaster, his voice bellowing through the big tent with precision and authority. Peter Lorre is tops as a clown, and in more than one scene he is more the circus performer than any of his cohorts. David Nelson, in an offbeat role, is very good, keeping his early character a mystery so his later actions won't be tipped off. Also good are Adele Mara, as a female aerialist, and Howard McNear and Charles Watts as bankmen.

Allen has billed his real-life specialty performers as "the world's greatest circus acts." The Flying Alexanders double well for the stars in the more difficult aerial maneuvers, and the other acts—Hugo Zacchini, the human cannonball; Dick Walker's lions; Gene Mendez, walking the wire for Roland; the Ronnie Lewis Trio; Jungleland elephants; Tex Carr's chimps; and Dick Berg's seals — are well integrated into the story and production.

If most of the creative forces of "The Big Circus" are bent toward the mass audience, the technical credits should excite the most artistic film devotee. Photographically, the picture is, or comes close to being, the finest CinemaScope film yet made. Its Technicolor hues are vivid, the color being a strong part of the production's feeling. And the technical quality of the shots themselves, photographed with warmth and excitement by Winton Hoch, are excellent, the Panavision lenses producing a clarity which should be noticeable even to the average viewer.

The music by Paul Sawtell and Bert Shefter is a potent asset, and the title tune, by Sammy Fain and Paul Francis Webster, is a lilting waltz that is a plus for the film. Albert D'Agosino's art direction is marvelous recreation and beauty unto itself, with Robert Priestley's set decoration an accomplished job.

Film editor Adrienne Fazan caught the excitement and put it into swift, flowing form. Sound by Conrad Kahn is excellent, increasing one's participation in the circus, as do the sound effects by Finn Ulback and Bert Schoenfeld. Costume designer Paul Zastupnevich created authentic big top apparel, and choreographer Barbette put the performers through proper paces. Despite one or two artificial looking angles in Roland's Niagara Falls crossing, the major portion of his feat is vividly created through optical effects.

In all, the elements are here for Allied Artists to exploit, and when "The Big Circus" comes rolling into town, the b.o. receipts should roll right along with it. Ron.

The Rabbit Trap

Simple story about Mr. Average rebelling against system that keeps him so. Ernest Borgnine stars. Average possibilities.

United Artists release of Canon Productions presentation. Stars Ernest Borgnine, David Brian; co-stars Bethel Leslie, Kevin Corcoran, June Blair; features Jeanette Nolan, Russell-Collins, Christopher Dark, Don Rickles. Produced by Harry Kleiner. Directed by Philip Leacock; script, J. P. Miller; camera, Irving Glassberg; music, Jack Marshall; editor, Ted Kent. previewed in N.Y. June 26, '59. Running time, 72 MINS.

Eddie Colt	Ernest Borgnine
Everett Spellman	David Brian
Abby Colt	Bethel Leslie
Duncan Colt	Kevin Corcoran
Judy	June Blair

and Jeanette Nolan, Russell Collins, Christopher Dark, Don Rickles.

The symbolism in "The Rabbit Trap" may be somewhat strained, but there's little doubt that the public will get the point. This is one of these pictures that puts an average man into an average though potentially dramatic situation and then works it out so that the individual can triumph and the presumably identifying audience with him.

Since, at no point in the proceedings, is there any attempt to coat the issues with subtlety or the acting with finesse, the film states what it has to say very simply. Its basic theme is that there is a lack of communication between people when it comes to sensitivity concerning needs and feelings, and that the economic pressures on the little man today are such that fear and insecurity keep him in his — limited—place.

It's as if J. P. Miller, who wrote the script from his original television play, had decided to make these points and then to cover the moral skeleton with the barest dramatic clothes to provide the required entertainment values. The rabbit trap is a neat device, though an obvious one. It triggers the action, and at the same time provides the symbolism, for the man —like the rabbit in the trap—is caught in a situation which he must endure for the sake of his own and his family's security.

Thrown into this, for good measure and without much justification, is a bit about a girl who has an affair with her boss, who's a married man. It is made plain that such affairs tend to mix up girls and make them unhappy.

The trouble with "The Rabbit Trap" is that it deals in stereotypes rather than characters. There's Ernest Borgnine, a capable draftsman who can't get ahead in the construction outfit where he works and which is headed by the aggressive, insensitive David Brian. Borgnine is a devoted family man with a lovely wife (Bethel Leslie) and a cute youngster (Kevin Corcoran). They go off on their first vacation in several years, but Brian calls Borgnine back for a special job.

When Borgnine's boy realizes that they've forgotten the rabbit trap in the country, he insists they must go back to release any rabbit that might be caught. But Brian won't give Borgnine the day off and this sets in motion a chain of events that, finally, sees Borgnine walking out of the job, the "little man" who asserts his independence. Thrown in are lengthy scenes between Borgnine and Brian, the employee who struggles to retain his dignity and the bull-headed boss who can't understand why the life of a rabbit should be important.

Borgnine's performance has a kind of plodding quality, but it's not really convincing and it radiates very little warmth. Miss Leslie as his wife is very good and very aptly cast. In fact, her performance rates as one of the best things in the picture. Brian is okay and Corcoran portrays a rather sulky youngster. June Blair is pretty as the secretary.

Philip Leacock's direction does achieve a natural quality, and the scenes when the little boy runs away from home to free his rabbit are very well done. Irving Glassberg's photography is cued to the simplicity of the yarn. Jack Marshall's music and Ted Kent's editing are standard.

"Rabbit Trap" tackles a lot of important things—almost too many —but in its eagerness to make a point it overlooks the fact that there's nothing as deadly in a picture as the "obvious" pitch and the forced conclusion. Hift.

The Siege of Pinchgut
(BRITISH)

Suspenseful yarn of escaped prisoner holding out on an island. Brisk b.o. possibilities.

Berlin, July 7.

Associated British-Pathe release of a Michael Balcon-Ealing (L. C. Rudkin) production. Stars Aldo Ray and Heather Sears. Directed by Harry Watt. Screenplay, Inman Hunter, Lee Robinson, Watt and John Cleary; camera, Gordon Dines; music, Kennth V. Jones. At Zoo Palast, Berlin. Running time, 105 MINS.

Matt Kirk	Aldo Ray
Johnny Kirk	Neil McCallum
Luke	Carlo Justini
Bert	Victor Maddern
Fulton	Gerry Duggan
Ann Fulton	Heather Sears
Her mother	Barbara Mullen

Ever since he filmed "The Overlanders" in Australia some years back, Harry Watt has returned at periodic intervals to search for stories to fit the background. This time the formula has been changed; he had the story in advance and instead of having the wide open spaces of the country as his canvas, the action is largely confined to a small fortress island inside the Sydney (Australia) harbor.

Within the first couple of minutes, even before the credit titles, an atmosphere of considerable tension is created, but suspense at that pace and standard is hard to maintain. Nevertheless, "Siege of Pinchgut" is a lively action pic with prospects of brisk b.o. returns. In the U.S., the star billing of Aldo Ray should help some.

Ray plays an escaped prisoner whose previous criminal record didn't help when he protested his innocence to judge and jury. Now all he wants is to clear his name and is prepared to surrender in return for a public assurance from the Attorney General of a new trial. Helped by his brother and two friends, he first makes his getaway in an ambulance, and later sets sail in a ketch. The boat breaks down and drifts towards the island of Pinchgut, in the harbor.

In a desperate bid to get his retrial, the escaped convict threatens to turn a four-inch naval gun on to a ship filled with explosives, which would blow up half the city. While the ship is being offloaded, the city is being evacuated. Meantime the police are taking pot shots at the fugitives and only Ray and his brother are left before frogmen actually invade the island.

The siege of the island has its complement of suspense, but not to compare with original getaway scenes. The ambulance in which they're making the dash for freedom is stopped by the police after an accident, and to make sure it gets to the hospital without delay, the cop provides his own motorcycle escort. All that, however, before the titles.

Ray's virile and vigorous portrayal is right for the role. Victor Maddern turns in another fine part as one of his friends. Heather Sears, as the caretaker's daughter, gives a completely negative performance. The kid brother role is ably filled by Neil McCallum. Carlo Justini makes an acceptable showing as the fourth fugitive. Gerry Duggan and Barbara Mullen hit the right note of restrained fear as the girl's parents.

Berlin Festival Reviews

Und Das Am Montagmorgen
(And That on Monday Morning)
(GERMAN)

Neue Film (Munich) release of H.R. Sokal-P. Goldbaum production for CCC-Arthur Brauner (Berlin). Stars O. W. Fischer, Ulla Jacobsson. Directed by Luigi Commencini. Screenplay, Peter Goldbaum and Franz Hoellering; camera, Karl Lob; editor, Walter Wischniewsky; music, Hans-Martin Majewski. At Congress Hall, Berlin. Running time, 88 MINS.

Adapted from J. B. Priestley's "Mr. Kettle and Mrs. Moon," this Neue Film production should do well enough in its domestic market because of the b.o. strength of O. W. Fischer. But it's a slim prospect for the U.S. market. Production fails to capture the light touch which the frivolous plot demands, editing is erratic and the direction more painstaking than frothy.

Fischer plays a bank manager who, on a Monday morning, rebels against the monotony of his life, plays truant from work, and amuses himself by playing with toys and accompanying a radio concert with wind instruments. His costar, Ulla Jacobsson, is a woman analyst whom he has always admired from a distance. She's sent to help him out, and he seizes the opportunity to come to grips with her. Fischer gives an animated performance while Miss Jacobsson relies on spectacles to convince that she's a medico. Vera Tschechowa adds a provocative note with some revealing shots in a bathtub. Myro.

Der Rest Ist Schweigen
(The Rest Is Silence)
(GERMAN)

Berlin, July 7.

Europa release of a Real Film (Hamburg) production. Stars Hardy Kruger. Directed and scripted by Helmut Kautner; Camera, Igor Oberberg; editor, Claus Dudenhofer; music, Bernhard Eichhorn. At Zoo Palast, Berlin. Running time, 104 MINS

A modern version of "Hamlet," this German production looks a potentially big grosser in the domestic market here, for which it has stout marquee values. In the attempt to parallel the original, however, the story is blatantly contrived. This might well make the going hard in overseas markets. It is an interesting example of film making by one of Germany's leading directors which doesn't quite make the grade.

The Prince of the story is a Harvard educated German youth who returns home to his mother and accuses his stepfather of murdering his father. The play sequence is done in the form of a modern ballet, there's a girl in the house to parallel Ophelia, and a burial scene featuring the gravediggers. Hardy Kruger gives a sincere and earnest performance in the lead while Peter Van Eyck, Ingrid Andree and Adelheid Seeck fill major parts adequately.

As a footnate, it's worth recording that this latter-day Hamlet features a plug for VARIETY. Myro.

La Caida
(Strange Guests)
(ARGENTINIAN)

Berlin, July 7.

Argentine Sono Film production of a Leopoldo Torre Nilsson production. Stars Elsa Daniel. Directed by Leopoldo Torre Nillson. Camera, Alberto Echebehere; sets by Juan Jose Saavedra and Emilio Rodriguez Mentasti; music, Juan Carlo Paz. At Zoo Palast, Berlin. Running time, 85 MINS.

Two contrasting styles are merged somewhat uneasily here, but there are many interesting aspects to this Argentinian festival entry. Leopoldo Torre Nillson is a stylish director. At his best in handling scenes featuring four children (brought up without any parental control), he's not entirely at home dealing with romantic angles. But even so, the pic may well have a limited art house success.

Elsa Daniel plays a university student who takes lodgings at the home of a bedridden woman, whose children run almost wild, but who occasionally display surprising moments of tenderness. Her romance with a lawyer goes cold when she refuses to leave what he describes as "that lunatic asylum." Miss Daniel is completely overshadowed by the four moppets who score a walkaway victory in the acting stakes. For the record their names are Carlos Lopez Monet, Hebe Marbec, Oscar Orlegui and Nora Singerman. Myro.

Lupi Nell'Abisso
(Wolves in the Depth)
(ITALIAN)

Berlin, July 7.

A Sagittario Film (Rome) and Radius (Paris) release of an Italo Zingarelli production. Stars Massimo Girotti, Jean Marc-Bory, Horst Frank. Directed by Silvio Amadio. Screenplay, Gino de Santis, Carlo Romano, Silvio Amadio; camera, Luciano Trasatti; music, Bruno Canfora. At Zoo Palast, Berlin. Running time, 101 MINS.

Reminiscent of the comparatively recent British pic, "Morning Departure," this Franco-Italian co-production (which is an invited Italian entry at the Berlin festival) is a holding yarn of a submarine crew in wartime, trapped at the bottom of the ocean. The escape hatch is damaged, and only one man will be able to get away.

The screenplay dramatically illustrates how the men react to this tense situation. As the moment of reckoning arrives, there are no heroes, but a bunch of nervous, anxious and frightened men. Technically, the subject puts a strain on the resources of the director as the entire action takes place inside the wrecked submarine. Its main failing is that it does not wholly establish a grim claustrophobic atmosphere. Acting is fine all round, but tighter editing would help considerably, particularly for overseas markets. Myro.

Kakushitoride No Sanakunin
(Three Rascals in Hidden Fortress)
(JAPANESE)

Berlin, July 7.

Toho (Tokyo) production and release. Stars Toshiro Mifune, Misa Uehara, Minori Chiaki, Kamatari Fujiwara. Directed by Akira Kurosawa. Screenplay, Ryuzo Kikushima, Hideo Kokuni, Shinobu Hashimoto, Akira Kurosawa; camera, Kazuo Yamazaki; music, Masaru Sato. At Zoo Palast, Berlin. Running time, 123 MINS.

One of the best recent examples of Japanese film-making, this festival entry is distinguished by high grade direction. It also abounds in action, and is handsomely acted and produced. Pic is, however, somewhat overlong. Perhaps with a little discreet scissoring, it could make an offbeat proposition for arty houses.

Set in the middle ages, the yarn describes the misadventures of two soldiers on the run from invading armies. When they're down on their luck, they find a bar of gold stashed away in the branch of a tree, part of the loot concealed by the runaway princess. From then on, the mood changes with subtle skill from outright brutality to downright good humor. The two vagrant soldiers are magnificently played by Minoru Chiaki and Kamatari Fujiwara. Remainder of the cast maintains the high acting standard. Technical credits are excellent. Myro.

Paradies und Feuerofen
(Paradise and Fire Oven)
(GERMAN-COLOR)

Berlin, July 7.

Europa release of an IFAG production. Direction and commentary by Herbert Victor. Camera, Heinz Holscher; editor, Ludolf Grisebach; music, Bernhard Eichhorn. At Zoo Palast, Berlin. Running time, 84 MINS.

A decade or two back, this would have been an impossible subject for a German producer, but this feature-length documentary of Israel has been handled with commendable sincerity and objectivity. Up to a point it is first-class, but it misses out by not focusing adequate attention on the explosive situation of a nation surrounded by hostile states. The title is partially misleading: the paradisical virtues are shown in some detail, but there is only the glimpse of a nation nearing boiling point.

The film has been handsomely photographed in Agfacolor, and the commentary, written and spoken by the director, is literate and honest. Pictorially, the feature breaks some new ground, particularly in showing a combined air and land operation in catching a gang of camel-borne Arab dope smugglers. Subject and source of origin could provide unusual expoitation angles in many markets. Myro.

BUSCH RE NOVELS 'MADE FOR FILMS'

By JIM POWERS

Hollywood, July 7.

The writer who doesn't angle his books for film sales is an idiot, says Niven Busch, who frankly angles his books for film sales. He figures he has averaged $62,000 apiece in financial return on six of his nine novels as the result of thinking in screen terms. He says it pays off not only in film sales but in readership as well.

"You can't write for the literary experts in the leather chairs at the Algonquin," he cracks. "The most trenchant compliment a reviewer can give one of my books is to sneer that it was written with motion pictures in mind."

Busch, whose latest novel, "California Street," has just been bought for filming by Artys Productions (Plato, Charles and Spyros Skouras Jr.) believes that motion picture audiences are more discriminating than they used to be and keeping this in mind helps when it comes to writing a book.

Busch, who has been a magazine editor (Time, The New Yorker), a book reviewer, a screenplay writer, and for the past 18 years a novelist, got into the hard-cover field in a reverse of the usual pattern.

Where it is fairly common for a novelist to come to Hollywood, take up screenplaying and abandon writing books, Busch did it the other way. His first novel was not published until he had written about 40 films.

Father a Showman

Despite his Madison Avenue background, Ivy League education and generally non-Hollywood attitude, Busch is a second-generation film man. His father, the late Briton Niven Busch, was treasurer of the old Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises. It seems to have had a lasting imprint.

"You can learn more about story construction, the practical elements of story-telling, characterization and everything else that

Twist: Columnist Sues; Hyams Says Cary Grant Denial Hurt Reputation

Los Angeles, July 7.

Joe Hyams, columnist for the New York Herald-Tribune, has filed a half-million-dollar slander suit against actor Cary Grant alleging that Grant's denial of statements attributed to him by the scribe injured Hyams' professional reputation.

The complaint, filed in Los Angeles Superior Court, asserts that the Los Angeles Times published the following statement attributed to Grant:

"The articles about me by Joe Hyams are false. Joe Hyams wrote that I gave him an interview and that I said that had had a psychiatric experience. I have never had an interview with Hyams on any subject. I haven't even seen Joe in two years. The articles are completely erroneous. I have never undergone psychiatric treatment, nor have I ever had any experience with psychiatry and I never told Joe any such thing."

The complaint alleges that Hyams interviewed Grant in Florida in February and asserts that the statements about psychiatric treatment were made to Hyams by the actor.

Hyams asked for $250,000 for general damages, $250,000 for punitive damages, court costs and such other relief as the court deems just and proper.

Mori Krushen to L.A.

Mori Krushen, exploitation chief for United Artists, left the N. Y. home office yesterday (Tues.) for his usual summer trip to the west coast on company affairs and upcoming releases.

Will be back in N. Y. in about a fortnight.

More Features From Paramount Due, Though No Formal 'Announcement'

Paramount is embarking on the biggest production program in its history. This was made known in New York this week following last week's meeting at the studio of the Gotham top command along with studio boss Jack Karp and his exec aides.

There were no announcements. But the word from within had it that Karp was given the green light to compete with any and all other studios in the quest for story properties and production and personality talent.

News comes in the wake of much trade suspicion that Par was content to make about 20 features a year for the theatrical market. The new theory on the film company's part is that the market can absorb substantially more and Par is willing to make them as the opportunities arise.

Significant on the trade end is that Karp has been given the same kind of go-ahead that had been offered to his predecessor, Y. Frank Freeman; and it long since became noticeable that Freeman did not get above that 20-a-year level.

It's revealed that new production deals of various kinds are now pending with numerous individuals, and only the details must be worked out by Karp.

Gotham brass returned from the meetings include president Barney Balaban, George Weltner, global distribution v.p.; Russell Holman, eastern production head, and ad-pub v.p. Jerry Pickman.

Ricca Behind Bars

Chicago, July 7.

Paul "The Waiter" Ricca, a top figure in the Chicago crime syndicate, who served a stretch in the '40's for his part in the million-dollar shakedown of the picture industry, is back behind bars.

He surrendered last week to Federal officers here on charges of evading $99,000 in income taxes, and is now serving a three-year rap at Terre Haute, Ind.

'Orderly Flow' Of Soviet Features To Yank Screens

Arrangements for an "orderly" release of Soviet pictures in the U. S. by the major American film companies will be discussed in N. Y. today (Wed.) by a committee of foreign and domestic sales executives.

The meeting was called by the Motion Picture Export Assn. It involves aspects of the handling of seven Russian films which have been allocated to the American companies under the Soviet-American film deal. It was executed under the umbrella of the overall cultural exchange pact. The Soviets have purchased 10 Hollywood films in return.

Feeling is that the companies, which are each taking one Soviet feature, should work out a plan to prevent the pictures being thrown on the market at the same time. The dtstributors have pooled both expenses and income from the seven Soviet films.

Meeting today also may be asked to decide whether it's proper for any of the majors to assign their Soviet release to either another company or to an independent.

Members of the committee on the domestic side are Alex Harrison, 20th-Fox, James R. Velde, United Artists and Jack Byrne, Metro. Foreign reps include James W. Perkins of Paramount and Bernie Zeeman of Columbia.

No Competition in Art Films; Cal. State Fair Drops 'Em as a So-What Sacramento, July 7.

Art film competition, held during the past five years, will be eliminated this year in the California State Fair and Exposition Sept. 2-13, due to lack of producer interest.

Past record of entries, which last year numbered only four, did not warrant a continuation of event, according to Fair manager Dudley T. Fortin, who said until interest in this medium increased to point where a "worthwhile show" could be presented fair-going public the competition will be eliminated.

In previous years, entries included only three for 1957; two in 1956; three each in 1955 and 1954. Last year, only a first prize of $500 was awarded, no second or third prizes.

Kahane's New Col Pact

B. B. Kahane, a vice president and studio executive of Columbia since 1936, was awarded a new contract by the company last week.

Under terms of the deal, Kahane will continue active service with the company until the end of 1960, at which time he will begin long term as a consultant.

'Nun's Story' Unspooling First at San Sebastian; UA's 40th Anni Bally

Madrid, July 7.

An American feature has again been designated to open the International Film Festival at San Sebastian and this year a Warner Bros. entry, "The Nun's Story," will curtain-raise the 10-day celluloid tourney on July 11 as the official U.S. candidate for major award Golden Seashell. Alfred Hitchcock's "North by Northwest" (Metro) was invited by fest authorities as Yank companion entry.

Eric Johnston or veepee Griffith Johnson with head a Motion Picture Export Assn. delegation at "Nun's Story" gala and post-projection MPEA banquet for government authorities and leading film industry figures.

Along with Warners and Metro, United Artists is also expected to unleash a splash program in support of "Shake Hands with the Devil," vying at San Sebastian as a British release. United Artists meanwhile intends to use the film gathering as a springboard for 40th anniversary hoopla in Europe.

Activities this year have been concentrated in three principal points—all within sight-and-sound range of each other. Teatro Victoria Eugenia is slated for official unspooling of product from over 20 countries; the huge Kursaal (pre-war casino) will house press facilities, stands, commercial section and various inter-related exhibitions, while the Hotel Maria Cristina will continue to play the role the Carlton and Excelsior enjoy at Cannes and Venice.

SMALL'S 'GIANT KILLER' FOR CHRISTMAS, 1960

Edward Small plans to film "Jack the Giant Killer" in color and 70m this fall. It'll be shot on the Coast, following two years of preparation. United Artists will release. Plan is to make the picture the company's Christmas release for 1960.

New photographic and audio effects will be used by Small, according to UA, and a very large cast will be involved in the top budgeter. Small's current release through UA is "Solomon and Sheba."

Chicago, July 7.

Vacationing moppets and blockbuster product are giving the Loop its healthiest take in many weeks. But totals may be tempered some by the big trade fair's distraction.

New arrivals include "North by Northwest," getting a smash $29,000 at the United Artists, and "The Nun's Story," trim $32.000 at the Chicago. "John Paul Jones" initialer at the Roosevelt is good $17,000.

Garrick's "Darby O'Gill and Little People" should entice great $16.000.

"Horse Soldiers'" second stanza at the State-Lake is rated socko, while "Five Pennies" looms great $19.500 in ditto Esquire frame. Oriental's "Hole in the Head" is fancy in third.

"Ask Any Girl" shapes trim okay in Woods fourth, but may be yanked early if the court favors "Anatomy of a Murder" over the censors. Fifth week of Surf's "He Who Must Die" also looks nice. "Al Capone" is brisk in ninth Cinestage session. "Gigi" continues to sparkle in 19th term at the Loop.

Estimates for This Week

Cincy Climbing; 'Story' Lofty $16,000, 'Pennies' Bright 11G, 'Ship' 10G

Cincinnati, July 7.

Three new bills are perking film biz here currently. "Nun's Story," shaping loftily at the flagship Albee, is downtown first-run topper for some time. "Five Pennies" is plenty bright at suburban Valley in switch from hard-ticket policy. "Don't Give Up Ship" looms solid at Palace. "Say One For Me" at Keith's and "Tarzan's Greatest Adventure" at the small Grand are strong holdovers. Longrun "South Seas Adventure" retains hefty summer stride at Capitol. Fourth of July celebration Saturday, like Decoration Day, was a lost holiday for downtown traffic.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3.100; 90-$1.50)—"Nun's Story" (WB). Tall $16,000. First-run topper here for some time. Holds. Last week, "Angry Hills" (M-G), at 90-$1.25 scale, $8.000.

Capitol (SW-Cinerama) (1,376; $1.20-$2.65)—"South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama) (36th wk). Hefty $18,000. Last week, $19,000, bolstered by two extra shows and sellout Wednesday (1) when Cincy-Milwaukee night game was rained out.

Grand (RKO) (1,400; 90-$1.10)—"Tarzan's Greatest Adventure" (Par) and "Man Who Cheated Death" (Par) (2d wk). Okay $6,500 after $9,000 bow.

Keith's (Shor) (1,500; 90-$1.25)—"Say One For Me" (20th) (2d wk).

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

4th Boosts B'way; 'Murder' Wham 83G, 2 Spots, 'Porgy' Capacity 37G, 'Story' Great 174G, 3d, 'Horse' Swift 40G, 2d

Although the Fourth of July fell on Saturday this year, closing of many places of business last Friday (3) aided in typical holiday style the current session at Broadway deluxers. Upped scale and not too hot weather also contributed to the upbeat. Three newcomers also proved helpful.

"Anatomy of A Murder" is standout new, regular film with a mighty $57,000 likely opening stanza at the Criterion, and record $26,000 at the arty Plaza where day-dating. "Hound of Baskervilles" is heading for mild $15,000 opening week at the Victoria.

"Porgy and Bess" hit absolute capacity $37,000 in initial full week at the Warner, after the same pace in the prior four days. "This Earth Is Mine" with stageshow looks like good $55,000 in second round at the Roxy.

"Nun's Story" with stageshow is holding with great $174,000 in third week at the Music Hall. "Five Pennies" looks like big $41,000, in third at the Capitol. "Say One For Me" is likely to wind its third session at the Paramount with a great $37,000.

"Horse Soldiers" still is smash at $40,000 in second frame at the Astor. "Middle of Night" likely will wind its third session at the Forum with a smash $16,000 and a great $14,000 in same week at the T-L 52d Street. "John Paul Jones" is down to slow $9,000 in third stanza at the Rivoli.

"Some Like It Hot" continues its sensational gait at the State, landing $32,600 for the 14th week, close to the 13th round's figure. "Diary of Anne Frank" was fine $19,500 in 16th frame at the Palace, a big improvement over recent weeks, accomplished via this first week on grind, popscale.

Both "Gigi," in its 35th stanza at the Sutton, and "Room At Top," in 14th session at the Fine Arts, both arty houses, still are going great guns despite length of runs. "Grand Illusion" is holding in remargable style in second round at the arty Baronet, with about $9,500.

"Mysterians," which missed a Broadway first-run because of no place to spot it, hit an amazing figure in the first few days playing 27 theatres of Loew's N.Y. metropolitan chain. Same pic did as much opening day in Newark and Jersey City as many films do in half a week.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,094; 75-$2)—"Horse Soldiers" (UA) (2d wk). First holdover round ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to hit an amazing $40,000. Initial week was $50,000.

Capitol (Loew) (4,820; $1-$2.50)—"Five Pennies" (Par) (3d wk). This stanza winding today (Wed.) is heading for big $41,000. Second was $50,000. Stays.

Criterion (Moss) (1,671; 90-$2.40)—"Anatomy of A Murder" (Col). First week ending today (Wed.) looks like wham $57,000. Holding, natch! In ahead, "Young Philadelphians" (WB) (6th wk), $13,000. The length of "Murder," two hours and 40 minutes, is holding down the gross total here.

Palace (RKO) (1,642; 90-$2) — "Diary of Anne Frank" (20th) (17th wk). The 16th round ended last night (Tues.) jumped to fine $19,500, this being initial week on continuous run and at lower scale. Last week, $9,800 on reserved-seat and $3 top.

Forum (Moss) (813; 90-$1.80)—"Middle of Night" (Col) (4th wk). Third session ended last night (Tues.) was great $16,000. Second, $19,000.

Mayfair (Indie) (1,386; $1.50-$3.50)—"Great Is My Country" (Indie) (2d wk). First week ended Monday (6) for this Kinopanorama production hit big $32,000 or close, mighty good for house capacity and scale as well as travelog-documentary subject matter.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,665; $1-$2)—"Say One For Me" (20th) (3d wk). Current week finishing tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for big tion. It was a weak 12th-place winner in May, but lower-admission policy and other changes have helped it materially. "Al Capone" (AA), third in May, is winding up 10th.

'Gigi' Again Strong

"Gigi" (M-G), long high on the monthly lists and eighth in the preceding month, will finish 11th. "Mysterians," a newcomer, also from Metro, rounds out the Top 12 list.

"Shaggy Dog" (BV), fourth in May; "World, Flesh and Devil" (M-G), around before; and "Shake Hands With Devil" (UA), a newcomer, are the runner-up films.

Besides "Ask Any Girl," which likely will be heard from additionally, there was a whole batch of new entrants that show promise. "Hole in Head" (UA) shapes as a real blockbuster. It was mighty on opening week in Chicago, wow in Washington and great in L. A.

"Say One For Me" (20th) is in much the same category, showing such marked strength the first week out it placed first in VARIETY's weekly survey, with nearly $175,000 gross from the first nine playdates. "Five Pennies" (Par) preemed big in N.Y.

"Nun's Story" (WB) hit a great opening week figure at the vast N.Y. Music Hall. "Don't Give Up Ship" (Par), another newcomer, was rated nice in Chi, stout in Washington, smash in Denver and okay in Pittsburgh. "H-Man" (WB) was lively opening session in Detroit. "Wild and Innocent" (U), another newie, was sock in Detroit and fair in Toronto.

"Imitation of Life," also from Universal, which was second in April and May, managed to finish 11th one week during June. "Compulsion" (20th), ninth in May, was a runner-up film three different weeks during the month. "Sleeping Beauty" (BV) finished 11th one week.

"South Pacific" (Magna), high on the list for months, was a runner-up pic one week. "Gold Rush" (Lopert) (reissue) was a runner-up film another week. "Shane" (Par), one of the strongest of the oldies brought back in June, was in the same category another round.

in this category—and in future elections possibly will.

In the first Senate race, Frank Fasi, a "haole" (Caucasian) defeated a Chinese-Hawaiian for the Democratic nomination He's favored to beat Republican Hiram L. Fong (Chinese ancestry) in the general election. In second Senate race, Democrat Oren E. Long, Caucasian, looms over Republican Wilfred Tsukiyama (Japanese).

In the face of what looms as a Democrat landslide, Democrat Daniel K. Inouye (Japanese) emerges as a probable sure winner over Republican Charles H. Silva for the U. S. House.

Both Governor candidates are Caucasians. Lieutenant Governor race pits a Japanese Democrat against a Republican Hawaiian. (Latter, incidentally, speaks Japanese as well as Hawaiian and English.)

Melting Pot

"Melting pot" primary, as is typical of Hawaii in postwar years, drew candidates of Filipino, Korean and European backgrounds as well as Chinese, Japanese and "haoles."

It found such an unlikely person as a Buddist abbott from Singapore pleading that "it is of the utmost importance to Hawaii to send to the Senate at least one man of Asian derivation." And, he added in a letter published in a newspaper, "if the entire delegation is of Asian background, so much the better."

Editorial in same edition branded this "a good idea carried to extremes." It noted that Hawaii is polyracial. Its ancient base is Polynesian. "To send an all-Asian delegation to Congress would not be to send a delegation either racially or politically characteristic of the new State," the editorial contended.

One top candidate who didn't survive the primary pitched for votes on the grounds that he is part-Chinese and part Hawaiian. "I know of no better salesman for our way of life to the members of Congress than I," he claimed. The voters didn't agree.

Meanwhile, author James A. Michener told a Statehood victory audience that Russia "won't be happy" because Hawaii will send representatives of varied racial backgrounds to Congress. He cautioned Hawaii's elected Congressmen to "lecture nobody" on racial problems but to "keep a quiet tongue n their heads" and behave by example—an example that undoubtedly will be watched with interest by every Pacific nation.

With "Americans of Japanese ancestry" now making up the biggest bloc of Hawaii's growing population, the matter of "racial voting" becomes moot. You can get heated arguments either way. Whether or not out-and-out "racial voting" will dominate "party" voting, only time and subsequent elections will tell.

Actual sanction of Statehood achieved an overwhelming 17 to 1 "yes, yes, yes" vote. (Three separate questions pertaining to Statehood had to be voted individually.) Of one thing you can be sure: Hawaii's happy to join its sister States and do what it can to spread the gospel of democracy-in-action —right to Asia's shores.

CENSORS DUCK KAYO PUNCH

A Memoir Of Fay Lanphier

(Pre-Cultural Era 'Miss America')

By GLENDON ALLVINE

The passing of Fay Lanphier, fifth in the sequence of Miss Americas and the first of these national beauties to be claimed by death since the beginning of this folkfest in 1921, brings back memories of happy days on the boardwalk when my management of the Oakland stenographer made her the first of the winners to earn big money.

In those days of silent film Jesse Lasky and Walter Wanger had dreamed up an exploitation picture called "The American Venus" and I was dispatched to Atlantic City to sign up the top six beauties before the judging. By conscientious attention to my onerous duties I managed to bag the winner for Paramount, along with five assistant beauties, all of whom were immediately plunged into acting careers at the Long Island studios, where "The American Venus" was already before the cameras in September, 1925. If these lookers couldn't act, they at least had six months in show business and their moments of glamor which made them celebrities back home.

A look at their photographs, in demure bathing dresses and long silk stockings shows how our beach mores have skinned up. If Miss America's stockings were occasionally wrinkled at the knees, that did not detract from her whole-some charm. Surrounded by her mother, and protected from amorous males, she was as demure as any of the contestants. A stenographer in Oakland can be a long way from San Francisco's sophistication, and an all-day ride from Hollywood.

Remember The Graphic?

Miss California (our Fay) knew nobody in show business, and Paramount was interested only in signing up the winner, whoever she might be. Rumors of fraud, assiduously circulated by The Daily Graphic, were ludicrous. For the benefit of those who came in late, The Graphic was an uninhibited tabloid, addicted to scandal and composite photos, which launched the fabulous columning career of Walter Winchell, who was resented by the managing editor, Emile Gauvreau.

Intent on building up circulation for this hysterical tabloid, the managing editor scheduled a two-week expose of the Atlantic City beauty pageant, and devoted a page a day to showing how the judges had been duped into signinf Fay Lanphier because Paramount had to have her for "The American Venus."

When I explained the situation to the managing editor, the facts were not as fascinating as the fiction, and the hoked-up story, lush with bathing beauties, swam on for a fortnight. Meantime Paramount attorneys were conferring with barristers for The Graphic, who, conceding their error, agreed to retract in equal space. For another two weeks, ad nauseam, the exposures carried on in reverse, with the articles being read to me daily prior to publication.

If Fay and her mother were bewildered by all this, so was everybody else who read the late lamented Graphic in that era of wonderful nonsense. It is no reflection on the late Miss America's skill at stenography and filling a bathing suit to observe that she was not a very good actress, which was obvious to the Messrs. Lasky and Wanger at the executive screening of "The American Venus." When I broke the news to her that her six annual options would not be exercised by Paramount, mother and daughter were in tears, and appealed to me to help them. After mother had signed an 11-month contract on behalf of her legal infant, I got busy on the telephone, with Lasky's approval.

In Atlantic City today Miss America is serviced by committees appointed by the 25 directors of a non-profit civic corporation, with the support of 2,500 citizens in 50 states. There's a $10,000 scholarship for Miss America and a quarter of a million dollars in scholarships for the 53 other contestants. Culture is rampant in every swim suit. Things have certainly been organized and stabilized since I soothed the weeping beauty of 1925 and helped salvage her fame and fortune.

Since even with block booking exhibitors were not eager to play "The American Venus," I arranged with Lasky to make the picture available only with personal appearances of Miss America, and sold John Murray Anderson on building a stage revue around the six beauties Paramount had under contract plus some talented singers and dancers.

Her Stage Mama

After a week in New Haven we were ready for two weeks at the Metropolitan, Boston, five shows a day. And every noon, five days a week, the stenographer from Oakland demonstrated her typing skill in the Underwood windows at a $100 an hour, or about what New England typists were paid in a month. Pleased that her daughter was working from noon to midnight, the new stage mother wanted to know if Fay couldn't do some modeling in the mornings.

This I was able to arrange during the three-week Chicago engagement in the big Spiegel store in the loop. It was a fortunate boy meets girl booking, right out of the movies, and the young Sidney Spiegel Jr. gave his personal attention for three weeks to misses' dresses. Merchandising so pleasurable led the department store heir to drop his other duties and travel to Omaha and on to the end of the tour in Texas, when they were married.

Fame, fortune, fun and a rich husband, what more can any young girl ask? Happiness, maybe? That must have been lacking, because by the time there was another Miss America, the fifth American Venus was divorced in Reno. Back home in Oakland she opened a Miss America beauty parlor and married her childhood sweetheart, Winfield Daniels, who survives.

As 54 new ideal American girls, talented in tight suits, converge on the biggest and best Miss America Pageant next September 7 to 12, to be televised to fifty states from the Atlantic City Auditorium, there are these parting words from the beauty claimed by virus pneumonia: "All kids dream about something dramatic for a career, but I think girls are happiest when they're homemakers."

Ohio Senate Expected To End Sun. Blue Law

Columbus, July 7.

Ohio House has passed and sent to the Senate an emergency bill which would exempt normal amusements, operations in state parks, and publicly operated fairs from the archaic Sunday "blue laws." The proposal (House Bill 1031) was expected to be passed by the Senate without delay. An attempt to repeal the entire blue laws by Rep. Robert Taft Jr., of Cincinnati, was defeated, though he warned the solons that the bill they approved does not meet the current problem. He said that the present 160-year-old blue laws still do not permit the publishing and distribution of newspapers on Sunday, nor the operation of television and radio stations.

He also said that passage of House Bill 1031 does not make possible the sale of real estate, nursery items, and many other common needs on Sundays. Gov. Michael V. DiSalle had asked for the bill, in order to permit state parks to operate their concessions on Sundays. Atty. Gen. Mark McElroy had earlier ruled that the present blue laws ban all operations on Sundays.

SUPREME COURT AVOIDS 'BASICS'

Lawyers specializing in the field of motion picture censorship agreed last week that the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in striking down the N.Y. State ban on "Lady Chatterley's Lover" represented (a) "progress" and (b) weakening of the N.Y. statute. They were divided, however, on the advisability of further moves to seek a "basic" High Court ruling on prior release censorship. Some fear court will never really kill all censoring.

Ephraim S. London, leading expert in the field, said the Supreme Court decision had "broad effects" if for no other reason than that it established that no governmental body could judge the content of a work. "There obviously can be no restriction on what is said, but only on how it is said," London he commented. It was London who took the "Lady Chatterley" case to the Supreme Court for Kingsley-International.

Felix Bilgrey, council for Times Film, also called the decision "a step forward" and opined and it tended to put the damper on future censorship legislation in the state level.

(In Washington, a group of Southern Senators proposed a constitutional amendment (see separate story) that would empower states to enact censorship legislation.)

Split on Next Move

The anti-censorship groups are now split on the course of future action. One faction believes the time is ripe to press for the long-sought basic decision. Another faction is equally convinced that nothing more can be accomplished with the present Court, and under present climate, for the next two to three years. That group believes that, in New York at least, it'll now be a case of the Court deciding the fate of each banned picture on its merits.

Reasoning is that, with its powers again narrowed, the N.Y. censor is likely to be ultra-careful and not at all eager to seek court tests via "unreasonable" actions which don't stand a chance of being maintained in any legal action. Opposed to this is the line of thinking which holds that there's no time like the present, and that —in any case—a new tack is in order, This view favors tackling the Supreme Court on the basic questioning of the licensing in advance of showing rather than the broader issue of definitions of morality. Some of the more conservative justices, including Justice Felix Frankfurter, have on occasions made it plain that they harbor doubts when it comes to the legality of the pre-release licensing procedure.

Always Ducks Basics

Question was put to the Court a couple of times, but it never chose to rule on it, preferring instead to decide the cases on the narrow issue of the specific film under question.

While the Court has ruled on several censorship cases, and generally has reversed the censors, it has never gone all the way in outlawing pre-release censorship per se. The N.Y. ruling re "Lady Chatterley" addressed itself to the portion of the N.Y. law which permits the censor to deny a license if a picture approvingly portrays an adulterous relationship, "quite without reference to the manner of its portrayal."

> "What New York has done . . . is to prevent the exhibition of a motion picture because that picture advocates an idea —that adultery under certain circumstances may be proper behaviour. Yet the First Amendment's basic guarantee is of freedom to advocate ideas. The State, quite simply, has struck at the very heart of constitutionally protected liberty."

Court Mocks God?

Albany, July 7.

"The Authority of Almighty God was shockingly mocked this week by the decision of the United States Supreme Court. In reversing a ruling of New York State's Court of Appeals, the highest court of the land virtually denounced the divine positive law, voiced in the Ten Commandments, as an obstruction of man's 'freedom.'"

So asserted The Evangelist, official weekly of the Albany Catholic Diocese, Friday (3) in a lengthy and searing editorial.

PENNSY SOLONS DAZED BY 'OBSCENITY' KILL

Harrisburg, July 7.

A ruling by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court July 2 striking down the 20-year old obscenity law as unconstitutional, brought an instantaneous reaction from the Keystone lawmakers here, who expressed firstly a deep concern over the ruling, and, secondly, indicated the final passage of the motion picture censorship board proposal would come shortly after the legislature reconvenes July 13.

The court, in a 5-2 vote, voided a provision of the penal code which bans exhibitions "of a lascivious, sacrilegious, obscene, indecent or immoral nature." The terms were called too vague.

While most legislators agreed the ruling would require study to determine just how far-reaching are its implications, they also were determined that immediate steps would have to be taken to remedy the situation.

Chairman Douglas H. Elliott, Senate Law and Order Committee, said: "I am shocked and stunned by it (the ruling). I think it is incumbent on us in the Legislature to study this opinion thoroughly and, if necessary, to enact a bill to control obscenity from running rampant over the state." Elliott is one of the strong backers of the creation of the motion picture censorship board.

Sen. Elliott's counter-part in the House, Chairman Charles J. Mills, House Law and Order Committee, said: "I am no prude but after this I just don't know where we're going. I don't agree with their (the court's) way of thinking at all."

Legislators agreed the court decision virtually leaves the state without any statute on the books to protect against allegedly indecent or lewd filmed or personal performances. However, Patrick Kerwin, chairman of the state Liquor Control Board expressed doubt that the ruling would effect his agency's control over such alleged performances in licensed establishments, such as night clubs, coming under his jurisdiction.

"I question that the court's ruling will effect our control of shows in places licensed by the board," Kerwin stated, "but I intend to have our legal staff study the opinion thoroughly."

Kerwin also noted the board's right to suspend licenses of establishments charged with presenting allegedly lewd entertainment has been upheld by the Supreme Court in previous decisions.

Way-Backers Paying Hanna

Cleveland, July 7.

Harvey Epstein and Jean Weinberger of Valley Playhouse Inc., are backing summer festival of silent film classics at the 1,515-seat Hanna, having opened yesterday (6).

Starter is Rudolph Valentino's "Eagle" (1925), followed by Lon Chaney's "Hunchback of Notre Dame" and Mack Sennett's "Tillie's Punctured Romance."

Chicago, July 7.

Bruised and pilloried, the Chicago censors—like a song—keep coming back. It's still the same refrain: immoral and obscene, the offender this time being Otto Preminger's "Anatomy of a Murder" for Columbia.

The producer and his Chi attorney, Hubert Will, personally appealed to Mayor Daley last Thursday (when the pic was slated to bow at the Woods), but His Honor refused to lift the ban. Preminger, equally adamant, promptly filed in Chi Federal District Court for a permanent injunction against the city, and his lawyer went in yesterday (Mon.) for a temporary restraining order.

The censors balked over the frank court language (contraceptive, sexual climax, etc.) in the pic's courtroom scenes. The board suggested some small deletions, but Preminger, denying it's obscene, declined to make the cuts.

Police Comr. O'Connor thought deletion of two scenes (which he wouldn't disclose) would make "Anatomy" playable here. Will pointed out, however, that under the local censorship ordinance, official objection must cover a picture en toto, and not simply a scene or two.

The Woods, meanwhile, held "Ask Any Girl" (M-G) while it awaited yesterday's ruling on the restraining order.

Senators Take Stand Vs. Adultery, 'Chatterley' And Free Speech Amendment

Washington, July 7.

Five Senators have launched an effort to change the U.S. Constitution to nullify the Supreme Court's "Lady Chatterley's Lover" decision. They ignore Court's "freedom to advocate unpopular ideas" thesis.

Principal sponsor, Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.), is chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, to which the proposed Constitutional amendment was referred. Eastland promised fast action by the committee. Whether the Congress, or the States, can amend the Constitution remains to be seen.

Amendment would guarantee states the right to regulate matters of public morals. Exact language says, "The right of which state to decide on the basis of its own public policy questions of decency and morality and to enact legislation with respect thereto, shall not be abridged."

Eastland, in Senate speech, said the court had held, in effect, that "adultery, immorality and perversion could be taught as ideals" and states are left helpless to protect youth from such things. Eastland noted Cardinal Spellman has said the church is guardian of moral law. Eastland told Senate he hopes all churches will join in move to "correct" the "Chatterley" decision.

Sen. Frank Lausche (D-Ohio) commented that he thought morals question involved in "Chatterley" case had been settled by the 10 Commandments.

Chaplin Vintage Shorts Hit 35 Kerasotes Spots

Chicago, July 7.

"A Night With Charlie Chaplin," package of four vintage shorts, will play the entire 35-theatre Illinois chain of George Kerasotes, TOA topper, over the July-August-September period.

Midwest distribution of the package is handled by Chi exhibitor-distributor Charles Teitel under deal with N.Y. importer Joseph Brenner.

High Construction Costs Force Mex Exhibs to Lease, Not Build, Cinemas

Mexico City, June 30.

With soaring construction costs, even the financially well off exhibition chains are thinking twice before they invest money in new film theatre projects. Gabriel Alarcon, head of the Gold Chain, indicated that a new trend has developed in the building of multi-thousand seat cinemas in Mexico. In speaking about the construction progress of the Cine Internacional, he revealed that his exhibition chain is not footing all the bills.

Private real estate investors formed a syndicate with more than 20 million pesos ($1,600,000) to build the Internacional, with the theatre being only part of a commercial edifice. The picture house is located on Avenida Cuauhtemos, not far from the Cine Mexico. Plan is to build up a new commercial zone in the area.

Alarcon revealed that a leasing policy of houses constructed by private firms extends even to hinterlands. A total of eight Gold Chain theatres (in Queretaro, Guadalajara, Salamanca, Morelia, Zitacuaro, Cluiacan and Leon, with two in this latter city) in various stages of construction are going up under this new plan.

It's just a simple matter of too heavy building construction investments which exhibitors cannot underwrite today, Alarcon said. For example, the International here, a 4,000-seater, requires an investment of 5 million pesos plus (over $400,000) in construction costs. Projection, sound and other equipment, paid by Alarcon, will run over 1,500,000 pesos ($120,000).

Even a 3,000-seat cinema requires an outlay of $320,000 plus an additional $80,000 or more for equipment.

There just isn't this kind of money lying around these days, Alarcon said. Further, with the present boxoffice freeze of 32c for first-runs, a 3,000-seater is an in-the-red operation, he explained.

Exhibitors cut corners at every turn today. Alarcon said that in his Cluiacan cinema, he is asking authorities there to allow a 44c admission instead of existing 36¼c so that he can install air-conditioning. If his petition is turned down cinema patrons will swelter because an installation will then be limited to electric fans.

Touching on boxoffice receipts in Mexico, Alarcon said these were generally on a level with last year, except for receipts in this city and in Baja California and Torreon. Here, the January strike which shuttered cinemas was reflected in a $40,000 fall off from the $4,800,000 received in the first four months of last year. In Baja California and Torreon, the rocky cotton situation has caused declines in attendance, too.

Alarcon's opinion is that theatres could hit new b.o. peaks because attendance figures grow from year to year.

Italo Show Biz Stars Taking Active Part In Sixth Cinema Rally

Rome, June 30.

Large number of stars from all branches of the Italian entertainment field are currently participating in the sixth Cinema Rallye, annual auto competition, which offers innumerable interlinked exploitation advantages to local showbizzers.

Six-day event consists of daily road races with stopovers at spas and resorts along the way. Each night, shows are staged with participation of stars, with the whole affair winding in Taormina, Sicily, where final awards are made.

Rallye gets plenty of local play here from the press, newsreels, radio and tele, last-named this year linking in via some live pickups of arrivals each day in addition to usual filmed fare. It's acknowledged to be a top promotion stint from all angles.

Among many stars particiating this year are Anita Eckberg, Rik Battaglia, Maurizio Arena, Helene Remy, Gino Bechi, Luisa Rivelli, Gerard Landry, Leonora Ruffo and Anna d'Amico.

EXHUME CONGREVE SCRIPT

Old Vic Debuts 'Double Dealer' At Edinburgh Fest

Edinburgh, July 7.

A play first staged at Drury Lane Theatre, London, in 1694 will be presented during the upcoming International Edinburgh Festival by the English Old Vic company, celebrating their seventh visit to the Scot culture rally.

Play is "The Double Dealer," by William Congreve, which once earned the offbeat commendation of a laudatory ode by the English poet Dryden.

Ursula Jeans is cast as Lady Touchwood and Donald Houston as Maskwell, the "double dealer" of the title. Other parts are taken by John Justin, Miles Malleson, Maggie Smith, Joss Ackland, Moyra Fraser and Alec McCowen. Michael Benthall is directing, with Desmond Heeley as designer and incidental music by John Lambert.

Mex City Cinema Closures Blow To Film Union

Mexico City, July 7.

The Bucareli and Rivolie managements have formally notified the Union of Film Industry Workers that they will not reopen. Theatres had been shut down by the federal district government because they are "a menace to public safety." Owners claim that repairs will be so costly that the current admission scale will not yield a profit, so they prefer to remain dark. A trio of other houses are also dark for the same reason, with city inspectors declaring the Monumental, Morelos and Balmori houses unfit for public use. Managements of these latter have not decided if they will make required repairs or not.

A city spokesman said that theatre managements had been warned repeatedly in the past. Some houses, slightly damaged by the earthquake of 1957, made very sketchy repairs and reopened. Inspectors are now going over these carefully.

Union officials now face a continuing headache with no relief in sight since nabe houses don't want to pay out coin to make repairs, also older cinemas show an indication to shutter rather than paying much on repairs.

Union is threatening to shut down the Escandon, Bravo and Hidalgo houses through walkouts since these indicate they cannot pay the 21% wage hike recently won by the union. Since contracts were scaled, in the months ahead the union will face the same problem with other exhibitors.

Situation is deteriorating so far in forced shutdowns for repairs that union leader Pedro Elizalde has appealed to city authorities to notify him beforehand of any new closures so that he can have a chance to "talk" with managements.

Japan Will Import 30 French Pix This Year

Tokyo, June 30.

Japan will import close to 30 French films this year, largest batch in postwar years. Reasons are their current popularity in Nippon, particularly in the key cities plus the removal of the dollar and non-dollar designation of import licenses starting this fiscal period. During the Occupation years, a maximum of 24 French imports were permitted annually. This figure was reduced to 15 with the Japanese government restrictions.

In addition to eight each already marked for import by Eihai and Towa Eiga, other importers of French films this year will be Shin Gaiei, Daiei, Shoei Films, Shochiku-International Select, Columbia and United Artists, with others also in the running.

Glasgow Bars Strip Pix

Glasgow, July 7.

City magistrates here nixed a request for showing of the films, "Striptease de Paris" and "Soho Striptease," at the Grand Central cinema.

Decision is taken as a tip-off on possible change in attitude to nude films on part of city authorities. It's felt that the magistrates in future will adopt a stronger and more choosey attitude towards certain kinds of films.

Zurich Improves But London Terp Called Old Hat

Zurich, June 30.

After spotty b.o. response to the Zurich June Festival's initial fortnight at Stadttheatre and Schauspielhaus, despite an artistically high level, the second fortnight fared considerably better. At the opera house, four out of six performances by London's Festival Ballet were SRO; a domestic production of Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor" in Italian, with several guest singers from Italy, also went clean; and Stadttheatre's own cycle production of Wagner's entire "Ring of the Nibelungs" (not produced here in its entirely in many years) racked up hefty grosses despite stiff tariffs ($7 top), with all four performances SRO or near-capacity. Opera season ended June 28 with an all-new presentation of "Goetterdaemmerung," with name singers including Astrid Varnay.

After some impressive guest stints by Irish, French and Italian troupes, Schauspielhaus came up with its own contribution to the festival lineup, a revival of Schiller's "Mary Stuart," staged by Kurt Hirschfeld and with sets designed by Teo Otto. Maria Becker, Rosemarie Gerstenberg, German screen thesp Willy Birgel and Peter Schuette are playing the leads. In accordance with the Zurich public's pronounced favoring of classical plays, this revival filled the house to capacity at every performance.

Although satisfactory grosses were registered for London's Festival Ballet's third Swiss visit, critical reaction was far from flattering. Troupe was severely criticized for its predominantly conventional choreographies, and choice of ballets were deemed unfortunate and monotonous. Admittedly, nine out of eleven ballets presented here were in 19th or early-20th century style, with only two, Harald Lander's "Etudes" and David Lichine's "Concerti" in a more up-to-date vein. The remaining items read like yesteryears' ballet playbill: Lichine's "Vision of Chopin" (despite being a 1959 addition), Michael Fokin's "Petrouchka" and "Polovetsian Dances" and troupe's artistic director Anton Dolin's Grand Pas de Deux from "Swan Lake," "Giselle," 2nd act of "Swan Lake," "Le Pas de Quatre" "Variations for Four" and Grand Pas de Deux from "Don Quixote.'

On the other hand, troupe's soloists won raves even from the bickering scribes and ovations from the audience, notably this year's guest artists Tamara Toumanova and Toni Lander, plus John Gilpin, Natalie Krassovska, Andre Prokovsky, Anita Landa, Marilyn Burr, Jeanette Minty and Keith Beckett. Geoffrey Corbett conducted the Zurich Tonhalle Orch.

The 1959 June Festival ends July 5-6 at Schauspielhaus with "Midsummer Night's Dream," presented by the Oxford Playhouse Co., for which an O.K. advance sale is reported. Fest was considered particularly versatile this year, with troupes from Dublin, Paris, Berlin, Milan, London and Oxford coming to Zurich.

UA Pix in 19 Paris 1st-Runs

Paris, July 7.

The United Artists 40th anni drive has the company hitting 19 first-run spots here, in spite of the usual summer holdback this week.

Among the films showing are "Pork Chop Hill," "Al Capone," "Alias Jesse James," "Le Fric," a French picture, "The Last Mile" and "Man In a Net."

Prokofief's 'Angel' Fine Musically

Book, Staging Murky—Spoleto Meanwhile Drenched In Roman Aristocrats and a Sellout

By TRUDY GOTH

Spoleto, July 7.

As with the opening work, Donizetti's "Duca d'Alba," the second operatic event at Spoleto was to be an opera never heard by its author and which found its way to performance with difficulty (Donizetti opera was performed only in 1882 roughly 40 years after it was written). Prokofieff finished orchestrating the score of "Angel of Fire" in 1927 but the performance that Bruno Walter was to conduct that year never took place (partly because of scenic difficulties, partly because of the too "revolutionary" nature of the music). Only in 1954 was work performed over the Radio in France and finally, in 1955, at the Venice Music Festival, and later, by the Milan La Scala.

Gian Carlo Menotti's idea to repeat this venture was sound inasmuch as it shows the composer as an opera composer not ironic as in "The Love of Three Oranges" but as a passionate, lyrical, dramatic and colorful one. The libretto is unfortunately a hodgepodge of symbolism and Russianism, after a novel by Brjusov. There is everything from astrology to magic, alchemy to kabbala in it and not even the music succeeds at all times in covering it. Stage director Frank Corsaro did little to facilitate the book's acceptance which makes heavy demands on audience tolerance. Some cutting and editing of scenes would have saved much of what was hardly bearable.

"Angel of Fire" though a realistic tale has the devil spoken of and appearing more than once in the form of a luminous spirit, driving a girl to commit sinful actions. The maiden is at the end condemned by the Archbishop of Trier (Germany, early 15th century) and the final scene in the convent with the nun's chorus is one of the most unforgettable beautiful pages of contemporary opera.

Contributing to the lack of clarity of the evening were Paul Sybert's scenic devices, technically interesting, but wrongly surrealistic in style and conception.

Musically speaking the performance came close to perfection with the title role sung by Leyla Gencer who since her successes in San Francisco has made a name for herself in Italy and with this performance has reached the top. Her voice, looks and acting should not totally appropriate for the part. Baritone Rolando Panerai was vocally equally good, though no match dramatically. Small parts were well sung and carefully prepared. Chorus and Orchestra gave their best as for all performances this reviewer has heard in Spoleto. New conductor in his first appearance here, a young Hungarian, Istvan Kertesz, made an excellent impression.

Audience read like an Almanac de Gotha with the Roman aristocracy present in spite of their difficulty to divide their time between Princess Grace's cocktail party on the occasion of her Rome visit with the Pope, General de Gaulle's reception and the forthcoming marriage in Brussels of Princess Paola Ruffo di Calabria. Spoleto is bursting at its seams, all performances are sold out and in spite of many new night clubs and restaurants (one of Cantelli's widow patronized by Toscanini's daughter, countess Wally Castelbarco) there is never a table to be had . . . The Festival is more a success than ever before!

SCOTS SEEK ART CENTER

Glasgow Would Combine Theatre, Art Gallery, Concert Hall

Glasgow, July 7.

An art center catering to music, drama and art has been proposed here. Plan would have it embrace a theatre, concert hall and a gallery housing modern visual art.

Councillor John D. Kelly will urge formation of a special committee to pursue the project.

According to Dr. Tom Honeyman, a leading literary and theatrical figure here, Glasgow desperately needs an art gallery, an up-to-date concert hall and a civic theatre. He said the city is "hopelessly behind" the Continent in this matter, and is also fast slipping behind the remainder of the U.K.

Sock Product Holds Well In Buenos Aires

Buenos Aires, June 30.

Despite saturation systems of exploitation in many cases, the blockbuster films are enjoying longruns here. "Bridge on the River Kwai" (Col) closes at the Broadway soon, having held for 11 weeks. "Ten Commandments" (Par) has run 12 weeks at the Metropolitan, and looks likely to hold longer.

"South Pacific" (Magna) is in its fifth week at the Luxor while "Some Came Running" (M-G) did three weeks at the Metro.

"The Big Country" (UA) is in a third week at the Iguazu, having opened at the Ocean, Gral Palace, Iguazu, Los Angeles and several neighborhood theatres day-date. The French "Rififi" (Internacional) proved an unexpected best-seller at the Astor, having held five weeks to date.

Madrid Critic Is Ashamed of The Native Product

Madrid, July 7.

In a scathing critique of the present Spanish film crop, widely-read motion picture scribe and critic Alfonso Sanchez singled out the rash of "protected" June entries as a parcel of unabashed mediocrity and called for strict application of present classification standards or drastic revisions in film aid laws to alter a situation now discrediting the industry.

"I have always defended Spanish cinema," Sanchez stated in Madrid's only Monday a.m. paper (Hoja de Lunes), "but present screen output is unworthy of defense. On the contrary, I now ask that it be banished."

Sanchez took the occasion to absolve local exhibitors charged by breast-beating producers with showing only the worst Spanish pix and under deliberately deficient conditions, or with failure to give adequate publicity or screen time. After sitting melancholically through a score of seasonal tag-end Spanish preems, he found exhibs were loyally fulfilling protective screen time obligations at a financial loss since the public can perceive recent "vulgarities" and will not buy.

Pointing out the "incredible fact" that 67 of 68 films last year received better than third-place classification and, as a result, eligibility for obligatory first-run screen time, irate scribe asked admittance to producer-dominated rating board of distribs and exhibs "who, after all, are stuck with inanimate product and have to foot the funeral expenses."

Coming on the eve of government's expected film credit and film aid reform (approved in general terms a year back), Sanchez blast is interpreted in industry circles as an in-the-know omen of subsequent government rigidity to pare down incompetency and encourage a select group of major producers in their effort to at least win recognition for Spanish films in the local market.

Yank Blockbusters Spell Big Coin For Arg. Fund, Hypo Pix Production

Buenos Aires, June 30.

Based on increased admission scales (51 pesos for "South Pacific" type pix, 75 pesos for the second Cinerama feature and 17.85 for any humdrum feature) Argentina's Screen Institute cut from the 10% boxoffice tax is calculated to bring in at least 200 million pesos this year. (The peso has been fluctuating between 103 and 85 pesos in the last two weeks).

As a high percentage of this must be distributed among producers in the shape of subsidies disguised as "awards," producers are enthusiastically resuming work. Of the 1958 production of 30 pictures, no less than 15 got Institute prizes, in hard cash, so it is now easier to persuade business-men to finance film production. Right now the Institute has applications for recognition from 5 new prospective production units.

Director Daniel Tinayre has joined forces with author Eduardo Borras, backed by "Internacional" (Production-Distribution) to found PAU (Productores Argentinos Unidos). Their first title will be Borras' story, "La Patota." Mirtha Legrand (Mrs. Tinayre) will be starred.

Francis Lauric, who directed "El Hombre Senalado," and Carlos Garcia Nacson, have founded Producciones Cinematograficas Indoamericanas. Their first feature pic will be Helvio Botana's La Procesion," first prize in the Screen Institute's first story contest.

These contests are to be held bimonthly, with 100.000 pesos to 1st, 40,000 to 2nd and 20,000 to 3rd prize winners. All winning scripts so far have been snapped up by producers because the institute can't fail to give them loans for their production.

Francis Lauric also has bought "Alguien en la Ciudad" (Someone in the City) by critic "Rolando" and Ricardo Casanovas.

Not only are there new producers in the offing, but some of the old outfits, are coming out of their bankruptcy and resuming activity. EFA sold its studios to Cuban tele tycoon Goar Mestre, but retained ownership of cameras and equipment. Now under Alfredo Simoncelli's management, it will make "Culpas Ajenas" (Other People's Fault), scripted by Carlos Roberto Monti, who will direct. EFA has 26 old properties on its shelves, and plans making six feature films for a start.

Orbe Films, the big distribution-production organization, has altered its name to Elga, and starts a first production in August, under Leopoldo Torre Nilsson's direction.

A TROUBLED 'TRISTAN' DOMINATES AMSTERDAM

By HANS SAALTINK

Amsterdam, June 27.

Holland Festival of 1959 opened with a production of Richard Wagner's opera "Tristan And Isolde." Scheduled for only four performances, which made a, by Dutch standards expensive, $6 top necessary, opera proved the prestige production of the fest. At the start it encountered much bad luck as conductor Otto Klemperer, just recovered from an illness, collapsed again during rehearsals, so that Ferdinand Leitner had to take over the baton at the last moment. Producer Wieland Wagner found the lighting equipment of Dutch theatres insufficient for his purpose and had his equipment from the Bayreuth theatre, cradle of Wagnerian opera, shipped to Holland.

Wieland Wagner, grandson of the old Titan, has been trying to rejuvenate Wagner's work, stressing the symbolism in it, using only a minimum of props, indicating more than showing. In this way, Isolde does not die, but fades away, via lights a trick that did not come off at the preem in The Hague, as the public still could see her clearly, and so started wondering why Tristan died and yet didn't.

Concertgebouw Orchestra, not accustomed to accompany opera, proved itself on the whole sufficiently capable.

Known and famous here for his interpretation of "Othello" at a previous Holland Festival, Ramon Vinay failed to impress with his Tristan.

Boulting Bros. Annoyed Because Foreign Office Nixed Comedy for Fest

London, July 7.

A three-way dispute has delevoped between the Boulting Brothers, the British Film Producers Assn. and the Foreign Office over the Boultings' comedy, "Carlton-Browne Of The F.O.," a comedy which has Terry-Thomas as a blundering diplomat. The joint selection committee of the BFPA and the Federation of British Film Makers chose the pic as an entry for the Moscow Film Festival. Then they sought the advice of the Foreign Office as to its suitability.

In turn, the Foreign Office consulted Sir Patrick Kelly, British Ambassador in Moscow. The Foreign Office advised the BFPA that it did not regard the pic as suitable festival material. A Foreign Office spokesman said: "There was no pressure bought to bear and the film producers are at liberty to disregard our opinion."

Nevertheless, the Boulting Brothers are irritated. Roy Boulting opined: "This reflects on the BFPA and the FBFM. They seem to have been guilty of un-British timidity in accepting the Foreign Office's views. After all, we are supposed to cherish a right to laugh at our institutions." The film pokes fun at both Britain and Russia.

French Still Not Keen for Aid Law

Paris, July 7.

The meaning, effects and workings of the new Film Aid Law, when it replaces the old one next January, are still the main points of discussion in film circles here. Some discontented producers and exhibitors maintain that the law has put at least 20 films on the shelf and created unemployment as bankers and investors wait to see exactly how it will work.

Sources here point out that of the $177,500,000 that came into French boxoffices last year, the state took $45,000,000 in taxes and exhibs took $70,000,000, of which $12,500,000 came to them via Film Aid for theatrical refurbishing. Producers got only $16,000,000 of this with some $8,000,000 via Film Aid. Producers put $37,500,000 into over 100 pix in 1958 so they just about managed to pull out with Aid.

However, the three-year amortization period left many on the ropes, with Aid their sole hope for continuing production. So producers believe that if they must take the eventual tapering off of Aid over an eight-year period, they should at least have a substantial cut in taxes. But the government will not give in on this point.

Exhibs, cut out of all Aid next year, stand to lose $12,500,000 annually and producers fear they may try to take this chunk out of the small producer's share. The government points out that the special tax on admission prices will remain the same but the government will take less for Aid coffers over the period in order to give exhibs more take to even out Aid losses. But exhibs feel this is not so because of rising production and operating costs.

So pessimists here feel that French pix could lose their stability and cause even more co-production and less truly French films. Also, that foreign films will be getting more playing time in French cinemas. The French now take about 50% of their own screen time. More moderate thinkers point out that under the Common Mart a leavening off of subventions could lead to more coproduction, especially with Germany, and greater marts and take for French producers. Another fear is that the emphasis on quality handouts will take the accent away from commercial rewards.

EDWARD MANGUM SAILS

Will Stage Frankfurt's 'Bells Are Ringing' In Fall

Edward Mangum, who has been working as a N.Y. consultant to the Asia Foundation (Rockefeller) since terminating as managing director of the Fred Miller Arena at Milwaukee sailed Friday (3) on the Hamburg-America S.S. Tuebingen. He is joining his actress-wife, Gerda Eckardt, in West Berlin. Will be absent from U.S. until December.

More immediately Mangum will collaborate with a German television writer on a projected motion picture but in October he will stage the German stage version of the U.S. musical, "Bells Are Ringing" for the State Theatre in Frankfurt, of which Harry Buckwitz is chief. This is the repertory house for which Magnum staged the German (and whiteface) "Green Pastures" two years ago.

Mangum, separately, is writing the libretto for a proposed original musical comedy for which a Milwaukee attorney, Sam Lawent, has composed the score.

'Outside' Amusements At Edinburgh Organize To Defeat Info Blackout

Edinburgh, July 7.

Value of shouting about one's wares in show biz is at last recognized here by promoters of "fringe" entertainment at the International Edinburgh Festival, who have joined forces for the first time to form a Festival Fringe Society with its own club, information bureau, advance postal arrangements, and centralized boxoffice. It is move in right direction, and will be of immense value to visiting crix.

For past dozen years getting information about drama and revue attractions on the unofficial "fringe" of the annual Festival has been a tough chore for visiting scribes and critics. While official events are publicized from a central Press-room, organized by the Scottish Tourist Board, the unofficial attractions have been scattered all over the city in church and other halls and even basements.

The Festival Fringe Society will have its club, information bureau and boxoffice in the YMCA building in South St. Andrew Street, Edinburgh.

Details of offerings are contained in a brochure published by the Society from 30 Queen Street, Edinburgh. It lists plays, recitals of music, drama, poetry readings, three late-night entertainments, an international festival of student-made films, several exhibitions, and a one-week presentation of an original operetta called "Beastie Beware."

Drama offerings include the world preem of "Why The Chicken," by John McGrath, to be staged by the Oxford Theatre Group. Shakespeare will be presented by the Elizabethan Theatre Group in "Macbeth." Visiting units are the Cardiff University Players in "The Oresteia," Sheffield University Drama Group with Wilde's "Salome," and a presentation by Plantagenet Productions of "The Mistress of Malaponda," Dorothy Rose Gribble's Spanish tragedy in burlesque.

To Start on 'Yovanka' In Rome This Month

Rome, June 30.

Announced here that "Yovanka," Dino DeLaurentiis production for Paramount release (outside Italy), will start shooting Juuly 13 on Rome interiors, under the direction of Martin Ritt. Cast reportedly set so far is made up of Gina Lollobrigida, Alida Valli, Van Heflin, Vera Miles, Claire BVloom, Valentina Cortesa, Richard Basehart, Steve Forrest, Carla Garvina, Annamaria Ferrero, Harry Guardino, Alex Nicol, Romolo Valli and Guido Celano.

Tale of Yugoslav girl partisans is from an Ugo Pirro novel. Lensing in black and white VistaVision is by Guiseppe Rotunno. After long search dictated by the impossibility of shooting pic in Yugoslavia as first planned, "Yovanka" is now slated to location in Austria, near Klagenfurt, where the unit moves about Aug. 15 after completing studio work here.

Mex Show Biz Thinks Large Scale Interchange of Talent Would React To Benefit of Players; Pros and Cons

Mexico City, June 30.

Consensus of opinion in show biz here is that a large scale interchange of talent, often talked about but never put into practice, would react to the benefit of entertainers and the respective governments.

"Mexico is the natural nation as the central axis for realization of a giant artistic, cultural and commercial chain," says Sara Garcia, grand old lady of Mexican pictures who has been working in this and other entertainment media for the last 27 years. "Our artistic growth has surpassed all frontiers and the arms that unite Mexico with the rest of the world are music and actors through the medium of motion pictures, records and filmed television programs."

This expansion of Mexican talent on the international front should be broadened, and Mexico should throw wide open its doors to the talent of the world, Miss Garcia says.

Rogerio Azcarraga, youthful prexy of the comparatively recent Orfeon Records (about two years old), claims that "reciprocal pacts with foreign talent are necessary for improved artistic development in the field of popular music as well as all other entertainment forms."

Currently Mexico has been admitting foreign entertainers, chiefly from Spanish language areas. Big boxoffice songster draws include South American, Cuban and Spanish entertainers including the perennial Libertad Lamarque (films, radio, television, theatre, etc.), Lucho Gatica, Katyna Ranieri, Virginia Lopez, the Silva Brothers, Antonio Prieto and Raul Shaw Moreno.

In pictures, Mexico has utilized services of Jean Servais, Gerard Phillipe, Martine Carol and Paco Rabal as well as a long list of Cuban players. A sprinkling of Hollywood talent also has been used in Mexican-produced pix headed by Jack Palance (in "Flor de Mayo"), Mari Blanchard ("Canasta de Cuentos").

But largely, Mexico has stuck rather close to Spanish-speaking talent. Figures released by the Department of State's migratory service for 1958 show that a total of 482 entertainers initiated steps to acquire the status of immigrants, 48 achieving immigrant status. The department extended stays for 151 artists and granted a total of 1,108 permissions to work in all phases of the entertainment industry (this latter total overall figure and including instances where entertainers make one or two professional appearances on radio or television).

Of this total, over 85% came from Argentina, Bolivia, Colombia, Cuba, Chile, Dominican Republic, Spain, Guatemala, Panama, Peru, Portugal, Uruguay, Venezuela, Brazil and Costa Rica. The small remainder was drawn from such areas as Germany, Canada, France, England and U.S. This year, the "Holiday on Ice" company, which completed an engagement in this city, swells the statistics of Yank talent.

On the average, however, the entertainers, who enter Mexico for a period of three to six months, the total runs approximately 300 per year.

Pro and Con Groups

There are pro and con groups in the current drive to develop a steady flow of talent into the republic. While Fidel A. Vista, assistant artistic manager at Peerless Records, for example, says that "the constant influence of foreign talent would benefit the local artistic medium as well as giving opportunity for the Mexican public to appreciate entertainers coming from all parts of the world," this feeling is not universal.

The greatest fear here is that a mass invasion of foreign talent would ultimately displace local artists. There is basis to this fear because Cuban and Spanish entertainers especially, after completing engagements in Mexico, inevitably turn to the Department of State to

Yank, European Legit Hits Figure Strongly On W. German Stages

Frankfurt, June 30.

Looks as if the West German stages are going to continue strong in the trend of reproducing American and European hit plays, with the latest listing from S. Fischer, one of West Germany's leading book publishers and play-selling outfits.

For its 1959-60 play calendar, Fischer is offering Fay and Michael Kanin's "Rashomon" which preemed on Broadway this February. It's set for its first German-lingo presentation at Vienna's Burg Theatre this fall, at the Munich Kammerspiele and also the Berlin Schillertheatre for the new play season.

Willis Hall's British anti-war drama, "The Long, and Short and Tall," which opened in London last January, will be done by the Berlin Schillertheatre this fall for the first time in this country. Francois Billetdoux' "Tschin-Tschin" will be done at this year's Berlin Fest in the original Paris version with Katharina Renn and the author in the leads.

Eugene O'Neill's "Hughie," one-acter, first performed in Stockholm in 1958, also will be done in Germany this fall. Tennessee Williams' "Sweet Bird of Youth," which opened on Broadway this spring, gets its first German performance during the Berlin Fest at the Schiller Theatre.

Few Entries At Rio Hondo Fest

Buenos Aires, June 30.

The limited number of entries, including unreleased native product, was the outstanding feature of the Rio Hondo Argentine Film Festival, which has just closed in the arid northern province of Santiago del Estero. Apparently as there were no feature awards going begging, the local producers did not think it worth while to enter their latest product. The only releases were Argentino Sono Film's "Gringalet"; Simon Feldman's first try at a feature, "El Negocion" (The Racket); and "La Sangre y la Semilla" (Blood and Seed), (Sudamericana-Bogado). "En la Ardiente Oscuridad" (Sono), which opened the festival and Sandrini-Demare's "El Esqueleto" already have been released in Buenos Aires some time ago.

A 31,000 peso award was made to the best short, won by Ber Ciani, and again most crix felt that the future of Argentine screen production lies in the hands of the young men currently trying out their wings in this field.

There was some controversy over "El Negocion," which the Screen Institute had classified as a "B" picture, and the producers requested crix at the Festival to determine whether this was a fair classification. The general consensus was that the institute has given an "A" certificate to worse pictures.

The press again had to contend with the difficulty of getting out stories by airmail. With weather conditions being most uncertain, news of what was going on at Rio Hondo emerged only intermittently. The press also lacked typing facilities.

Governor Eduardo San Miguel must have been relieved that this time there were no windy battles between members of the press and producing interests, as there was in 1958. He has now suggested that in 1960 the Fest should be an all-Spanish event, inviting other Latin American countries and Spain to participate. Apparently he now realizes that guests from abroad are necessary to brighten the affair.

Bureau of Missing Business

Short-Rations For The Kiddies—Bad Biz?

Oft-repeated clamor for pictures to attract children is again being heard. Film-makers, to be sure, have not completely neglected the kiddie trade, but for the most part, a regular diet of films geared to the moppets' taste is today as rare as flat rental terms for blockbusters.

Generally, the film companies, perhaps with the exception of Walt Disney, who has discovered that the pockets of children are lined with gold, schedule their so-called kiddie films for the holiday seasons. For the rest of the year, the opportunity for the youngsters to see pix fit for a child's taste is rare, indeed. Today's parents remember their own childhood when a visit to a film house on a Saturday or Sunday afternoon was the highlight of the week. Present-day children have few chances to enjoy a similar adventure, it's stressed, and as result, obtain the major part of their entertainment from television.

The experience of one head of the house, a New Yorker connected with show business, may perhaps serve as an illustration. A man who believes in togetherness, he likes to take the whole family "out to a movie" on a weekend afternoon. On a recent weekend, he scrutinized the newspapers in search of a program that would be suitable for his three children, ranging five to 10 years in age. He didn't particularly care that the right fare be available in his immediate neighborhood since he was willing to pack the family in the car. He searched and searched, but all he could come up with in the majority of the theatres was the double bill playing the so-called RKO and Loew's split in New York. Playing the Loew's split were "Separate Tables" and "China Doll." On the RKO bill were "Compulsion" and "Silent Enemy." Both programs could hardly be considered suitable for youngsters in the five-to-10-year age bracket.

The head of the house turned to the midtown listings and his eye picked out Charlie Chaplin's "Modern Times." This would be ideal, he thought, until he arrived at the theatre and noticed the admission price—90c for children, $1.80 for adults. Tallying up the cost for mommy, daddy and the three offsprings, the bill would come to $6.30. This does not, of course, include the cost of parking which in the midtown area could cost as much as $3.

At these rates, the head of the house figured he'd be much better off having his kids stay home and watch television. Being an avid film fan himself, he still wants his kids to learn to enjoy good pix, but he wants to break them in slowly with product geared to their years. He's wondering what happened to the kiddie afternoons he used to attend as a child.

Choice Of Trade Villains

Chicago, July 7.

Claim by some exhibitors, notably Essaness topper Eddie Silverman, that theatreowners are dissipating the value of blockbusters while crying "product shortage" is disputed here in other sectors of the trade. Rebuttal contends that it's not the exhibs but "money hungry" distributors who are really the culpable parties.

Per last week's VARIETY, Silverman complains of the practice, on sub-run, of double billing blockbusters on a single program. He calls it "showmanship at its worst." While equally dismayed by the practice, other tradesters point out that it's mainly a summertime situation brought on by market glutting as distribs seek to make the most of the seasonally swollen attendance.

Much impetus for the summer splurge of top product in key cities are the potent revenues of drive-in theatres. In the case of the Windy City, at least, they comprise a very substantial slice of warm weather biz, and most of them have the added virtue of being in the earliest clearance bracket.

With the film companies clamoring for their share (and more, if possible) of the attendance upcurve, there simply isn't enough playing time here to profitably allow for staggering the blockbusters. This often creates a situation, such as the recent one, where Balaban & Katz put together the combination of "Auntie Mame" and "Some Came Running" for a number of its nabe houses. It's the sort of double billing that makes Silverman seethe.

The glut at its most deplorable, many filmites opine, is Chi's current deluxer array, including "Five Pennies" (Par), "The Nun's Story" (WB), "Anatomy of a Murder" (Col), "John Paul Jones" (WB), "The Horse Soldiers" (UA), "Hole in the Head" (UA) and "Darby O'Gill and the Little People" (BV). Add to these such longruns as "Gigi" (Metro) and "Al Capone" (AA); and at the same time, top nabe houses are playing "Tom Thumb" (Metro), "South Pacific" (Magna) and "Alias Jesse James" (UA), all high percentage pix.

Inevitably, says a distribution exec, this spree must result in more blockbuster tandems outlying. He's unhappy over the release slate for next week, which offers on first nabe break "World, Flesh and Devil" (Metro), "Young Philadelphians" (WB) and "Around World in 80 Days" (UA), latter on its first seven-day slotting locally. And the week of July 17, he notes, first clearance bracket will include "Sleeping Beauty" (BV), "It Happened to Jane" (Col) and "Pork Chop Hill" (UA).

Faced with such glutting, B&K prez Dave Wallerstein, for one, declares his chain is booking "as best we can." Translated, B&K isn't going to pass up top pix for prime playoff just because of a distribution rampage.

Admission Bargain—Magic!

Miami, July 7.

Vacationing for a week at Miami Beach, George Wiederhold, VARIETY's Louisville stringer was stirred from his comfortable seat overlooking the beach, when he overheard a couple femmes discoursing on how they spent their time at the South Florida resort. He perked his ears, when one of the women enthused on the fact that a film theatre, the Cinema, on Washington Street at 13th was playing to packed houses, with admish scaled at 25c for matinees and 50c at night. "Of course," she enthused, "they are not first-run pictures, but are top quality films." "Anastasia" and "Houdini" were playing at the time. "And," said the lady, "the house used to have about 12 customers at the matinees, when the scale was 90c for matinees and $1.25 at night.

Whereupon the Wiederhold hot-footed it over to the Cinema and talked with the manager. He confirmed what the lady had said—that they only had about 12 customers in the house at the afternoon show. "Come in and look at the house." Wied accompanied the manager through the large foyer, and took a gander at the house—filled to capacity. The house seats about 900 on the lower floor, with 250 additional seats in the balcony and loges. Even the doorman enthused about the filled house, which is now a regular thing, and confirmed everything that the lady, and the house manager had said. The new lease on life at the Cinema was the talk of the lower beach sector, and regular residents and vacationers have been passing the word around that rather than spend their time in monotonous sitting, and occasional tv look-sees, they can enjoy two top grade pictures at the Cinema for an unbelievably low price, and in a plush, comfortable theatre. Cinema is one of three houses on the beach under the same ownership, but the other two houses still retain their original scales.

Make Change In Pennies

St. Paul, July 7.

Something brand new and different in the way of a boxoffice stimulant is claimed for Charles Rubenstein's neighborhood Faust Theatre which recently went from an early subsequent-run and 85c admission policy to late runs of twin bills for 49c.

In order to impress upon patrons strikingly the 49c admission the theatre's cashier makes all small change in new pennies. On Saturday nights these pennies will buy merchandise worth more than the single 1c which they cost.

These Saturday night 1c bargains include, for example, a 20c box of popcorn, small household appliances that retail for as much as 25c and 10 to 20c packages of icecream and candy.

'Dime Movie Time'

Denver, July 7.

"Dime Movie Time" for school children during summer vacation has been inaugurated by the nine Denver Fox theatres in conjunction with the Denver Post.

Under the cooperative arrangement with the newspaper a special children's program will be presented each Friday at 10 a.m. at the theatres and children under 14 will be admitted for 10c if they have a coupon clipped out of the Post. Adults not accompanied by children will not be admitted and anyone over 14 pays 50c.

The Fox theatres participating are the Aladdin, Aurora, Bluebird, Centre, Denver, Esquire, Mayan Ogden and Woodlawn.

San Francisco, July 7.

Paramount Theatre manager Earl Long recalled town named Hercules in Frisco area, did a little research and discovered he was right.

Hercules, Cal., site of a powder-manufacturing plant, is exactly 27 miles northeast of Frisco.

Result: Hercules Mayor Clyde E. Prechter, his four-man town council and all 347 townspeople have been invited to the Western opening of "Hercules" at Paramount, or at Oakland's Fox.

Embassy's film opened at 12 Northern California situations Friday (3).

'Hercules,' Hi-Fi & Ducats

Chicago, July 7.

Joseph Levine is continuing the Herculean promotional splash for "Hercules" which Warner Bros. is releasing. As a result of a tieup with a Chicago appliance dealer, via Levine's publicity chief, Bill Doll, "Hercules" is expected to receive $52,700 worth of free advertising for the 80-house Chi saturation booking on July 29.

The appliance dealer, Sol Polk, is the same one who bought $107,000 worth of tickets to Todd's "Around the World in 80 Days" and passed them out to customers at the rate of 100 per day. The new arrangement, also involving RCA, calls for the giveaway of $36,000 worth of RCA hi-fi sets in each of the theatres playing "Hercules." Cost of the hi-fi sets, which list at $450, are being shared by the exhibs, RCA, Polk and Levine's Embassy Pictures.

The sets will be displayed in theatre lobbies two weeks before the picture opens. Along with the "Hercules" trailer, the theatres have agreed to add special footage which contains a plug for RCA and Polk explains how the hi-fi sets can be obtained.

Coupons can either be picked up at the theatres or clipped from Polk ads in the Chi newspapers. Contestants need only deposit the coupons in theatre lobbies and need not be present when the drawing is made at the last performance of "Hercules."

Polk has agreed to take out four full page ads in the Chi papers calling attention to the picture and the contest. The appliance dealer will also employ 50 24-sheets, using the standard "Hercules" sheet and imposing the contest plugs in the playdate area. Polk's $20,000 worth of weekly radio time, involving some 355 spots, will also be at the disposal of the picture and the contest. Ditto the company's tv time on the midnight movie following the Jack Paar show. "Hercules" tv trailers will be used. The company has also agreed to employ its disk jockey shows on Saturday and Sunday afternoons. In addition, there will be 400 one-sheets, window cards and banners displayed at all six Polk stores in the Chi area. In addition to paying part of the cost of the hi-fi sets, Embassy's only other contribution is the provision of the coupons for the contest.

The use of the word "Hercules" is the key to many promotions in other sections of the country. A tieup with the 114 Thrifty Drug Stores of Southern California involves an in-store promotion centering around a "Herculean Soda and Sundae." Similar tieups have been made with Hamburger dispensers. In Cleveland, permission has been obtained to put up a test of strength machine familiar at carnivals. The machine will be directed in the plaza of the Cleveland Press and for every contestant who rings the bell, Embassy will contribute $5 to the arthritis fund. Doll is trying to work out a similar arrangement for the Times Square area in New York.

Funeral Train From Antiquity

Atlanta, July 7.

An eight-foot long sarcophagus, weighing 450 pounds, complete with a McCoy mummy, a beautiful cinema actress and expert Egyptologist-archaeologist left here for a swing through Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee to thump the tubs for "The Mummy," a Hammer production released by Universal.

Above-mentioned three items are under guidance of Dick Richman, U exploiteer, who had them here plugging pic, which was premiered, with proper fanfare, at Paramount Theatre Thursday (2). Macabre relic of Egypt, displayed last week in Paramount lobby, created considerable interest.

Femme traveling in party is Norma Marla, a pretty one who has a role in pic. Egyptologist Andrew Low served as technical director of film. Sarcophagus, which travels by truck, just goes along for ride.

Richman has been in Atlanta vicinity for a couple of weeks. Before "The Mummy" entourage showed up he was busy squiring around Casey Robinson, producer of "This Earth Is Mine," a Vintage Production released by U, who was accompanied by his pretty Australian-born wife.

Customary rounds of television, radio and press were made by these Hollywood folk.

Pay To Act Together

Minneapolis, July 7.

Having found that in unity there are boxoffice strengthening and gains, the Central States Business Building group held another of its regional meetings here last week to plan a heavy assault on any existing summer theatregoing inertia.

The boxoffice gains have resulted from pressure on film companies to saturate important pictures and from putting many heads together to devise more effective showmanship and selling of attractions to the public, it's pointed out by Harry Greene, Ruben circuit advertising-exploitation head, a leading member of the group.

Greene estimates that through the group's business building endeavors the central states' takes on the various pictures on which it has concentrated have been upped a minimum of 25% over what they otherwise would have been sans the combined efforts in the films' behalves.

Myron Blank of Central States Theatres, Des Moines, Ia., is group chairman and in addition to him and Greene those in attendance at the meeting here were Harry H. Weiss, KRO Theatres; Charles Winchell and Ev. Seibel, Minnesota Amusement Co. (United Paramount); Don Knight, Des Moines; Fred Southar and Darrell Presnell, Fox Midwest, Kansas City, Mo.; M. B. Smith & L. W. Morris, Commonwealth Theatres, Kansas City, Mo.; C. F. Motley, Video Independent Theatres, Oklahoma, and Harold Field and Eddie Ruben, local circuit owners.

Among the forthcoming saturated pictures discussed were "Our Wonderful Country" and "Yellowstone Kelly."

"The idea is to lick boxoffice blues throughout the Great Plains, extending a helping hand to all the area's exhibitors, big and small," says Greene.

A Dress-Designers Stunt

Denver July 7.

Something new under the sun was accomplished in contests when the RKO Orpheum and The Rocky Mountain News staged a Dress Designers Contest to promote "Ask Any Girl."

Contrary to opinions of the wiseacres that such a contest wouldn't draw enough entries to win the 26 prizes offered—it was a smash success and Bill Hastings, manager of the theatre, was swamped with replies—so many in fact that it took a crew of three judges and several assistants all of one afternoon to wade through the stacks of mail.

Prizes consisted of a $50 first and 25 pairs of tickets to see "Ask Any Girl."

In Crewcut And Tailored Loincloth

By SAM LUCCHESE

Atlanta, July 7.

Leonard Allen, Paramount's Southeastern exploiteer, is convinced he has the motion picture industry's answer to that ol' debbil television. He is Gordon Scott, 11th in a line of film Tarzans.

Allen has been steering Scott around for three weeks on a tour of theatres in both the Carolinas, Tennessee, Alabama, Arkansas and Georgia.

Scott, a nifty male specimen, has been drawing crowds everywhere he's been, making personal appearances, autographing, visiting Boys' Clubs, orphanages, children's hospitals and the like.

In Birmingham, Tarzan and Mayor James Morgan were co-hosts to a crowd of 5,000 underprivileged moppets at the City Zoo.

In spots where he made personal appearances on the same day as his new picture, "Tarzan's Greatest Adventure," opened now boxoffice records were set. In Macon, Ga., a Monday opening at Bibb Theatre grossed $1,200; Savannah, on a Tuesday, took in $2,300 at Weis Theatre followed by $1,100 the second day; at the Miller Theatre in Augusta for a Wednesday (24) opening the gross was $2,400; in Atlanta's Paramount Theatre, where Scott made three personals Thursday (25) the take was $4,000 despite showery weather.

This is Scott's fourth Tarzan release and the first to be filmed in Africa. Most of pic was shot in Technicolor near Nairobi, Kenya, British East Africa.

Scott wears a tailored loin cloth for his personal appearances and tells about his experiences in shooting the film in Africa and some lore about the Tarzan created by Edgar Rice Burroughs. Gone is the long hair affected by previous Tarzans. What he wears now is more like a crewcut. Furthermore, Tarzan no longer grunts, but speaks complete sentences. There is no Jane, but the romantic interest is present in the form of Sara Shane and an Italiano bundle named Scilla Gabel.

In addition to his theatre dates Scott has been before tv cameras in every city where there is a station and he has given so many radio and press interviews that he and Allen have lost count. Allen displayed a sheaf of clippings and tear sheets from newspapers indicating that proper promotion will still get you space.

"My experience with Scott," said Allen, "is reminiscent of the swath cut by Elvis Presley and Fess Parker when they went on the road to push their films. Mothers and fathers have telephoned me to thank me for bringing Gordon to town, stating that he was the first personality able to lure their moppets away from the tv screen.

"The response we have met certainly is good for the motion picture industry and indicates if we fight a little harder and put more into our promotion work we can lure back the customers who are staying away from the movies."

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Important source at Paramount said this week that the company is in no hurry to hire an executive producer at the studio, meaning an individual who would function as top man on the artistic end of production and would work with administration boss Jack Karp. Spokesman, known in the trade as a savvy citizen, went so far as to hint that an exec producer may not even be hired at all.

He said: "You know, the right kind of man for the job is not so easy to come by. And we're not so sure that we need a man for this kind of work in the first place. We have talked to many people who are not now with Paramount about production situations. But these have been only conversations—nothing more—and have been about outside independent deals and not necessarily about the job of executive producer."

The era of diversification has produced a situation whereby there's simply no telling where a picture or theatre company is going. Theatrical enterprises are so obscured by other acquired companies that an accurate barometer on theatrical business is totally missing in many cases.

Time was, of course, when the profits statements from, say, Warners, indicated rather clearly whether the show business company was doing well or otherwise. Show business was a hit, or it wasn't.

Story this year details how Stanley Warner is divided, distinguishing the profits of 22% from theatres and 78% from International Latex. This, of course, presents what might be considered a serious problem in terms of the investor.

The Man in the Brooks Bros. suit has written a novel, "Try For Elegance," which Scribners has published at $3.95. The novel suggests that Brooks Bros. clerks have a pretty exhausting night and sex life. Actually the literary clerk in question, David Loovis, writes quite well though afflicted with the modern fashion of refusing to explicitly state his thesis. The nice unanswered question is whether the clerk-hero was selfishly afraid of marriage or suspected all along that the girl who exhausted him nights was a potential tramp with her eye on the French Riviera. It's a promising work, though the screen story values seem meagre. Very likely it may, however, attract some word-of-mouth. Certainly it will give everybody a new slant on Brooks Bros. Don't let those unpadded shoulders fool you. Land.

While watching "What's My Line" last week, Si Seadler, Metro's ad manager, heard that panelist Bennett Cerf, who's a Loew's director, would be in Washington the following day to address the National Library Assn. convention. Tracking down Cerf the bally chief suggested he include in his speech to the library group a mention of Metro's "Ben-Hur" library promotion and how the company was prepared to present libraries with art materials, photograph, suitable copy and directions how to make up local displays. As a result of Cerf's remarks to the 5,000 librarians, Metro was swamped with requests for the material from cities throughout the country.

Recent death of R. A. Erickson, owner and manager of the Tower Twin Drive-In Theatre at Abilene, Texas, the first twin screen ozoner in West Texas, brought to mind the successful court battle against city and county officials after the Taylor County sheriff blocked an attempt to show "And God Created Women" in May 1958. As a result of Erickson suit against the officials, it was discovered that the Abilene Censor Board had no power to call upon the sheriff to carry out its mandates. A new set of entertainment regulations for the city was established, the suit was withdrawn and the film shown at several local theatres.

Ruth Roman and Akin Tamiroff have no cast names in "Desert Desperadoes," now making its way to market via franchise operators out of RKO. Miss Roman is simply called "The Woman" and Tamiroff "The Merchant."

Leon Uris' "Exodus," which Otto Preminger will film for United Artists release, was actually commissioned as a film original by Dore Schary when the latter still headed the Metro studios. After he left, the M-G powers-that-be nixed the yarn and Uris went ahead and did his novel which has since been near tops of Best-Seller list.

'Nuts to Broadway Nostalgia'

funny like Zelma O'Neal, Gus Shy, George LeMaire, Jack Haley, Gallagher & Shean. I could go on but I don't want to sound too much like the AK that maybe I am.

"The only laugh in a musical I've had so far, and we've been here three weeks seeing all the shows, was based on a dirty crack.

"The Broadway musical was designed for the TBM, as they used to wisecrack about the tired business men. Now they're concerned more with the love story, the plot motivation, or whether it's tailored for a Merman or Martin or Gwen Verdon, or whether somebody has the LP album rights to a Rodgers & Hammerstein score—apparently everything but the fact that the best 50% of the title of 'musical comedy' is almost nonexistent."

Apart from his downbeat opinion of the current legit crop in general and musicals in particular, Marx admits he's stagestruck, and hipped on his own play, "Time for Elizabeth" which lasted five days on Broadway with Otto Kruger in the role he now essays on the citronella circuit. "George Kaufman the other day called my and (Norman) Krasna's play 'the longest running flop in the history of show business.' And he's right—I go out with it every summer because I'm a ham."

"But also," he continues, "it makes a lot of loot. I do a 30-minute curtain speech that gets laughs and some say it's better than the play, which isn't too hard considering that it opened and closed within the same week on Broadway."

Prime reason for the hayloft touring, Marx explains, is that "it solves my vacation problem. When we went abroad or to a resort we were bothered by autographs, etc.—here, at least, I'm getting a good chunk of the gross. Seriously, Eden (Mrs. Marx) and Melinda (his 10-year-old daughter by a previous marriage) and I have had something to do; we see the country; and above all it gives the little girl a chance to grow up all summer in a truly bucolic atmosphere."

Comedian admits that the standards in the dancing and other departments are different—"a good line hoofer today can dance rings around Marilyn Miller in her heyday"—and admittedly the "books" of latterday musicals have more substance. But he is adamant on the low state of comedy, "which has been always the top commodity when it comes to Broadway musical comedy, and should so continue to be."

$255-Millions In Non-Theatre Films; Business, Government Biggest Users

Expenditures in the non-theatrical film field hit $225,000,000 in 1958, according to a suvey published in the June issue of the Society of Motion Picture and Television Engineers journal. Total investment in films since the end of the war runs to $2,500,000,000, the article said.

Broken down, the six major users of nontheatrical pix and equipment last year were: business and industry ($150,000,000); Government (federal, stage and local) ($48,000,000); educational groups ($27,000,000); religious groups ($15,000,000); civic, social welfare and recreational groups ($8,000,000) medical and health groups ($7,000,000).

Figures include cost of picture and filmstrip production, prints, distribution costs, equipment, etc.

According to the survey, 7,300 nontheatrical films were produced in 1958. Figure doesn't include lowcost silent and magnetic-tracked pictures produced for internal use by industry. Some 6,800 production units produced the bulk of the output. Projector sales in '58 were up 3½% to 45,000 machines.

own 20% each; Mulvey has 5%; and Goldwyn owns the remaining 55%. Part of the Goldwyn Studio likewise now belongs to the Goldwyn Foundation, along with a flock of films ("many of the Danny Kaye pictures," says he).

Certain pictures, of course, are being retained for their future theatrical reissue values, not to mention those films which Goldwyn, one day, may sell as a package to television. Incidentally, there are 35 negatives and all their rights which the producer presented to his wife some time ago as "her personal nest egg to do with as she will."

Goldwyn's personal charities, on the Hollywood level, are well known where the local Community Chest and the Permanent Charities of the Motion Picture Industry, both of which he has chairmaned often, have seen him as the No. 1 contributor.

However, the Goldwyn Foundation is keyed essentially to university fellowships, awards to drama classes and the like. Mrs. Goldwyn, Joseph Loeb (Loeb, Walker & Loeb, Hollywood attorneys) and a former president of the Bank of America are the trustees.

As regards "Porgy," the Goldwyns are in Chicago this week drumbeating with press and via broadcasts in advance of the July 22 preem. Meantime "Porgy" opens (hard-ticket) July 15 in Los Angeles and July 22 in San Francisco. The Goldwyns return to New York in September in advance of Cincinnati, Washington, Philadelphia and other bookings.

opened ahead of schedule and have drawn large crowds.

Many of the better drive-ins now compete with the hardtoppers on equal terms, demanding to bid for first-run product and often getting it. Also, some of the top product accumulated during the late fall and winter is getting a replay in the outdoor situations and is doing very well.

Ozoners today constitute an important source of income for the distributors. 20th-Fox, for instance, last year collected around $8,000,000 in film rentals from the drive-ins. This year, the take is likely to hit $10,000,000 provided the current b.o. pace can be maintained.

Phoney 'Alerts' Hurt B.O.

Dallas, July 7.

Board of directors of the Texas Drive-In Theatre Owners Assn., has started a study of what can be done to correct certain irresponsible practices of state radio and television stations in broadcasting "tornado" alerts. The specific practices found objectionable by the board are the announcing of such alerts without specifying the area of the alert and failure in many cases to give the all-clear after it has been issued by the weather bureau.

Board feels that alerts should be accurate to not overalarm public, particularly when the alert does not apply to a radius of 50 to 100 miles of the station issuing the warning.

Show Biz Thinks

change their migratory status from emporary to permanent.

Gabriel Martinez, radio and television producer, spokesman for the anti-foreign talent group, states that engagements of these should be limited. He stressed that this limitation exists throughout Central and South America and only Mexico is lenient in permitting entertainers to remain as long as they wish. Result of all this is that a lot of eligible new Mexican talent is bypassed. Martinez is of the opinion that "preference should be given to Mexicans in all entertainment sectors so that we can cultivate newcomers who can become the stars of the future."

Artists representative Jack Eriksson, meanwhile, in a recent trip here, said "there's a great interest on the part of European, Latin American and American entertainers to work in Mexico, and especially U.S. radio, television and record personalities."

Federation Would Cut Red Tape

In the talent controversy, the Theatrical Federation has advocated the cutting of red tape to permit artists of world renown to appear on the legitimate stage as well as in vaudeville, pictures, radio and tele. This "artistic interchange," in the federation's opinion, would be reflected in healthy hikes in boxoffice grosses in all mediums.

Roberto Ayala, artistic director of Radio Station XEW has no objection to foreign talent. His only qualification is that "mediocre talent" should not be admitted.

"I believe that Mexico can well become the artistic capital of this continent," Ayala says. "Our public has been noted for the warm welcome it accords foreign entertainers. And I have no doubt that our artists, too, would receive the same treatment abroad. They could also correct many of the misconceptions about Mexico."

Dept. of State's 'Hands Off'

What does the Department of State feel about all this? It is neither pro or con. A spokesman said it is for talent unions and organizations to work out just what they want to do. But there is one matter in which the department is firm. From now on all foreign entertainers who come to work in Mexico will have to appear before immigration authorities personally to legalize their stay within the republic. Heretofore, the National Assn. of Actors had undertaken this tedious chore.

Further, immigration authorities have served notice that they plan periodic revisions of passports and working permits of all foreign talent appearing in Mexico. In the past some entertainers have not bothered with the formality of asking for a legal extension of their migratory papers. The new ruling also affects American actors appearing in Mexican-U.S. film coproductions, or Hollywood units coming down to Mexico to make pictures.

Film Biz Snubs TV Commercials Though Now a $100-Mil Industry

By PATRICK D. HAZARD

Aspen, Colo., July 7.

For a week some very high-level thinking has been going on in the Rockies 200 miles west of Denver. Over 400 industrial designers, filmmakers, businessmen and educators have been examining the state of American communications at the Ninth International Design Conference. Leading the discussions have been such entertainment business figures as Saul Bass—the designer of credits for Otto Preminger's films; William Golden — director of advertising and sales promotion for CBS-TV; Norman McLaren — the experimental Canadian filmmaker, and Jerry Schnitzer — director and writer of commercials for Robert Lawrence Productions, New York.

Schnitzer brought some moments of practical idealism to what threatened to turn into a verbal brawl between the designers and their new enemy "motivation research." In sharp contrast to many designers who sounded like they wished they were painters who didn't have to "compromise" their talents, Schnitzer confessed to finding tv commercials a great and satisfying challenge and, at their best, a not insignificant art form. He chided the film industry for snobbishly turning over tv commercials to intrepid advertising men, still photographers and radio men "who did their best and did surprisingly well with this strange genre—but without motion picture know-how and without the aid of the overproud film industry." As a result Schnitzer complained the 90-foot or 60-second monster was orphaned. "Who can blame it, then, for mewling and puking and shouting its way through infancy? An abandoned delinquent, it succeeded in thoroughly antagonizing the American public. Like its parents, its captive audience wished it would go away."

The real damage from Hollywood's spurning of the film commercial was that it couldn't possibly mature as a unique art form exploiting its own special qualities.

To the proposition that the TV commercial can be an art form, most would object that it is too short. Schnitzer argues that a print story may be 100,000 words, 25,000 words, 5,000 words or 1,000 words long. "Whether it is called a novel, a novelette, a short story, or a short short, it is still a story and it can be literature. The same holds true for the motion picture. None of its fundamental requisities depends for its fulfillment on given duration of screen time." As long as a film commercial tells a story, with dynamic movement, and with visual emphasis, it qualifies as a motion picture.

Even if Hollywood and the movie makers are skeptical about the importance Schnitzer sees in the art of the filmed commercial, they may still respond to its business side. Making them has become a $100,000,000 business. Commercials now consume 14% of all television screen time; and about 20,000 people, mostly in New York, are engaged in producing them. Since over 80% of all commercials are on film, the business has a large growth potential.

And, according to Schnitzer, the artful films are the most successful.

Russians Have

scoring heavily. The Soviet version of Cinerama, called Kinopanorama is current at the Mayfair theatre, where it is getting a $2.50 top, a fairly unproletarian price. Gross is a strong $32,000.

A fourth attraction is free and is luring heavy crowds. The largest passenger plane in the world, the Soviet TU-114 is at Idlewild International Airport where a constant stream of visitors have been going through this liner.

There are other Russian attractions in the country. They've been making the front pages with their Zoo Sputnik, and with the tour of Frol R. Kozlov, the Soviet First Deputy Premier, has been drawing a heavy press.

Another Russian event of top magnitude will be the importation of a fullscale track & field team for a meeting at Franklin Field, Philadelphia, in the fall.

Export Union to Seek Govt. Support In Boosting German Films in U.S.

Berlin, July 7.

The German government is to be asked to give financial aid to help the promotion of selected German pix and personalities in the American and other English-speaking markets. Dr. Gunther Schwarz, president of the Export Union, is to make an appeal to the appropriate ministers in Bonn within the next week or two.

The decision to enlist governmental aid was taken during the film festival last week when Schwarz invited American distributors visiting Berlin to a round table to discuss how the German industry could hope to make a somewhat larger dent in the foreign field, especially in the U. S. market.

In the postwar years only a few German pix have made any impression in America, notably "The Captain of Koepenik" and "The Devil's General." The bulk of the output, however, could not get to first base though it was recognized that many of the local productions were made primarily for domestic consumption and were unsuitable for wide international presentation.

The Export Union was warned not to be led astray by reports of a product shortage. That, insisted one of the distribs, was a myth. The market was wide open, but only for worthwhile pix. It was suggested that the industry or the government should give some special help to films which were acquired for the U. S. and assist the distrib in obtaining strong openings.

For example, it was suggested that the Export-Union should meet the cost of dubbing, and thus give the film a chance of getting a larger number of playdates than would be available for a sub-titled version. The Germans too should help in the pioneering work in building personalities by sending over leading stars and directors for personals during the launching period.

One proposal was that the amount of government industry aid should be a fixed percentage of the dollar purchase price. But, it was argued, the more desirable pic did did not always attract the highest bid. Sex and exploitation pix frequently had bigger b.o. potentials and thus commanded a higher rate. Such films might return more dollars to Germany, but didn't necessarily help the prestige of the German industry. On that score, particularly, it was felt that formula might prove unacceptable to Bonn.

There was general agreement on both sides that the German industry had to make a special effort, and there was unanimity on the form that effort should take. The one outstanding question to be resolved is whether there'll be help from the state, or whether the industry alone will have to foot the bill.

Projection Demo For TOA in Chi

As part of its campaign for the improvement of theatre projection, Theatre Owners of America will set aside a special booth for the Council for the Improvement Theatres and Motion Picture Projection at its annual convention in Chicago from Nov. 8 to 12.

Booth will be manned throughout the trade show by TOA staff members who will assist theatreowners in filling out the Council's questionaire to secure technical inspection service. Wherever possible, arrangements for actual service will be made right at the show with equipment, supply and maintenance firms which will be exhibiting at the show.

Eastern Motion Pictures Ltd. has been formed to conduct business in New York, with capital stock of 200 shares, no par value. Chanarau & Sereysky were filing attorneys.

Hollywood, July 7.

Contract covering practices between agents and writers has been approved by membership of the Writers Guild of America, East and West. For first time, basic pact covers tv and radio scripters, film writers having been covered since 1948.

Agreement is between the WGA and the Artists Managers Guild and Society of Authors Representatives.

Want IATSE Okay To Tour Boothers With Cinerama

Because of the necessity of having experienced projectionists for the operation of Cinerama installations, Stanley Warner Cinerama Corp. is seeking an arrangement with the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees that will permit a full crew to travel with the portable Cinerama setups.

Lester B. Isaac, director of exhibition for Stanley, pointed out to the IA that the long-run Cinerama showings in the big cities had been completed and that future shows would be traveling setups. The IA, although opposed to a full travelling crew, has agreed to attempt to work out an arrangement whereby part of the crew would travel and the remainder would be hired in each city.

Fewer Red Films, But U.S. Participation Up At 12th Locarno Fest

By GEORGE MEZOEFI

Locarno, July 7.

Total of 13 countries will participate at this year's 12th Locarno Film Festival, July 9-19. American will be represented by four entries (three last year): "Al Capone" (AA), Stanley Kubrick's "Killer's Kiss," "The Rabbit Trap" (UA) and "Warlock" (20th). Participations from iron curtain countries have shrunk to three, as against seven last year. They include: Poland's "Farewells," Czechoslovakia's "Of Supernatural Things" and Soviet Russia's "Captain's Daughter." Acceptance of the latter entry might have caused the withdrawal by Paramount's Swiss distrib of "Tempest," based on the same literary work by Alexander Pushkin and originally chosen by the Italian government for Locarno.

Other countries' contributions include the following: France: "Les Dragueurs," "The Four of Moana," "Me, A Negro," plus a Franco-Australian co-production, "The Ambitious One," billed here as an Australian entry; Italy: "I Soliti Ignoti" and Luigi Comencini's "Dangerous Women"; Britain: Henry Cornelius' "Next To No Time"; Western Germany: "Restless Night"; Yougoslavia: "The Black Pearls"; Spain: "Un Vaso de Whisky"; Venezuela: "Araya"; and Sweden: "Linje Sex."

In addition, seven countries, including Canada, India and Japan, will show shorts. Patronized by the UNESCO, a congress on youth pictures will take place July 16-18. Furthermore, a photo exhibition devoted to Swedish films is skedded, plus retrospective showings of Sweden's Ingmar Bergman's pictures, July 10-18. Ten awards will be attributed by the international jury, called here Golden and Silver Sails.

Censors Groggy

Chatterley" attractively portrays a relationship that is contrary to moral standards or religious and moral codes "misconceives what it is that the Constitution protects. Its guarantee is not confined to the expression of ideas that are conventional or shared by a majority. It protects advocacy of the opinion that adultery may sometimes be proper, no less than advocacy of socialism or the single tax," the Supreme Court's decision read.

The Court's decision presumably leaves intact New York's right to censor films on the grounds that they are "obscene," "indecent" or "inhuman." Three judges—Frankfurter, John M. Harlan and Charles Evans Whittaker—felt the Court should not have held the parts of the statute involved unconstitutional on their face, but should rather have denied their applications to the specific instance of "Lady Chatterley."

Since the "Miracle" case in 1953, when the Court for the first time ennunciated its views that films are protected under the first and 14th amendments of the Constitution, censorship lawyers have tried to get the statute knocked down. The Court steadfastly has refused to do this.

Those who are intimately familiar with the lines of thought among the justices, say no such attempt will succeed.

(1.) while the court has its present membership.

(2.) unless the general atmosphere changes.

There are only two justices who openly favor elimination of prerelease censorship. They are Hugo Black and William O. Douglas. In separate opinions in the "Chatterley" case, both reiterated their view that censorship is unconstitutional because it is a form of "previous restraint."

Justices Tom C. Clark, Earl Warren and Potter Stewart are known to be inclined against censorship, but it's questionable whether they would go as far as Black and Douglas. Justices Frankfurter and John Marshall Harlan definitely would oppose any attempt to dissolve censorship on legal grounds. Yet, in his opinion on "Chatterley," Frankfurter started out by saying he was "more than surprised" that the film had been banned. "To assume that this motion picture would have offended Victorian moral sensibilities is to rely only on the stuffiest of Victorian conventions," he wrote.

Albany Pondering Sequel

Albany, July 7.

Changes, if any, in the State film licensing law—as a result of last week's U.S. Supreme Court decision reversing the Regents' ban on "Lady Chatterley's Lover"—will not be discussed by the Board before a meeting in late September.

Conferences between the Joint Legislative Committee on Offensive and Obscene Material and the State Education Dept., and Attorney-General's office, on the question of amendments, probably will not be held before the fall.

Chairman Joseph R. Younglove, of the Joint Committee, which sponsored two bills, at the 1958 session, tightening censorship both approved by the Legislature, but vetoed on legal grounds by Governor Averell Harriman; states that conferences would be held with both departments. However, he emphasized there was no rush, since amending measures could not be introduced before next January.

Younglove issued a statement expressing strong disapproval of the decision in "Lady Chatterley's Lover."

Legal division of the Education under the direction of Charles A. Brind has received a copy of Court's findings and is studying the six opinions.

Incidentally, New York State censorship itself did not decline to issue a license for "Lady Chatterley's Lover" because of its theme or idea. The Division specified that three sequences (carefully described) must be eliminated before a seal could be granted.

It was the Regents which broadened the basis for rejection on appeal by Kingsley.

British Technical Skill (Dynamation) Prompts Schneer's Move to London

Although "Gulliver's Travels," which Charles Schneer is producing, will be financed and released worldwide by Columbia, Universal has a stake in the project. U had developed a screenplay and registered the title with the Motion Picture Assn. of America and Schneer had acquired U's rights for $100,000 plus a percentage of the profits from the completed film.

Schneer, who has an eight-picture deal over the next three years with Col, is shifting his headquarters to London for the next three or four years. His prime motive for shifting to London, Schneer said prior to his departure last week, is the superiority of British technicians in the use of the so-called dynamation process which Schneer unveiled with the successful "Seventh Voyage of Sinbad," a film made for $660,000 and which grossed $6,000,000, according to Schneer. The process, Schneer said, has been further perfected and will be known now as super dynamation and will be employed in "Gulliver" and subsequently in a version of Jules Verne's "Mysterious Island." The process involves the combination of animated models with live action and the combination of separate scenes in the printing rather than employing process photography.

'Gulliver' Schedule

"Gulliver," according to Schneer, will take two years to make and will cost $1,200,000. He noted that while there were only about 15 trick shots in "Sinbad," the new project will have more than 100. Schneer contends that he plans the project as an "adult film" and that all the political overtones and satire that author Jonathan Swift intended will be retained. At the same time, he maintains that the film will have a distinct appeal for children.

There have been two previous versions of "Gulliver." One was a full-length Max Fleischer cartoon, which Paramount released in 1939. The other was a Russian black and white film, made some 30 years ago, which combined live action with puppets.

Schneer is not concentrating all his efforts on films in dynamation. On his schedule is "I Aim at the Stars," the biopic of Werner Von Braun, the American rocket expert who formerly worked for Nazi Germany. "I've been under considerable pressure not to make this picture," Schneer said, "but I've been studying his past, present and his relationship with the Government and I think it's important that the story be told. The public doesn't know the whole story. The picture will be an effort to characterize and dramatize the conflicts faced by one man in his lifetime in a world in which people constantly change relationships." The Von Braun pic is set to roll in Munich in October with Curt Jurgens in the starring role. "Gulliver" will be launched in England in July.

For his European production program, Schneer has formed a Swiss corporation, Morningside Worldwide Pictures, S.A. so that he will have freedom to operate throughout Europe. He stressed that none of his films would be British quota films.

Actors: Tony Curtis, Jack Lemmon, Red Skelton, Gilbert Roland, Louis Jourdan.

Winner will be announced at local's annual "Adam and Eve Ball" Sept. 26, held at Beverly Hilton Hotel.

B'way Glamour Openings Sans Money Payoff

Card Walker, vice president in charge of sales and advertising for Walt Disney Productions, offers in a nutshell why certain pictures of meaningful production status are skipping the Broadway firstruns in New York: It's too tough to make a buck with them in the big showcases because of the costly campaigns which are required and house expense.

In recent years only two Disney pictures to play Broadway came out with a profit. These were "Peter Pan" and "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." The nationally successful "Lady and the Tramp," which had an apparently good run at the Roxy, resulted in absolutely no rentals at all for Disney, commented Walker.

What about the trade prestige angles—specifically, aren't exhibitors around the country impressed by a picture's opening at a major Gotham house? Walker replied that theatremen have a way of knowing whether a feature does well or does not; they get the tipoff on a poor engagement and aren't impressed with it no matter how giant-size the theatre.

Edward Spector Fails To Enjoin 'Anatomy' Film As Hurting Legit Plan

N. Y. Supreme Court Justice Charles A. Loreto last week refused to halt exhibition of the film version of the novel, "Anatomy of a Murder." His ruling was in connection with a suit brought by Broadway producer-investor Edward Specter to establish his right to proceed with a stage adaptation of the book.

Specter claims he will suffer "irreparable damage" if the picture is shown prior to his anticipated fall production of the play. Defendants in the action are Michigan Supreme Court Justice John D. Voelker, the novel's author; Otto Preminger, who produced and directed the film; Preminger's company, Carlyls Productions, and Columbia Pictures, the distributor.

Suit is based upon an alleged agreement between Voelker and Specter which grants the latter to produce a Broadway play from a script written by the late John van Druten. In denying Specter's motion for a temporary injunction, the court pointed out that papers submitted "raise serious doubt as to the existence of a valid and binding written contract."

Justice Loreto also noted that Columbia has expended $2,275,000 in production of the film, exclusive of a claimed additional $500,000 for prints and advertising. "Production of the picture has been completed," the court observed, "and Columbia has entered into contracts for release of the film to more than 200 exhibitors throughout the country, beginning July 2."

On the other hand, the jurist noted in a lengthy opinion, "plaintiff has not paid any money under the contract nor expended any money in the production of a play under the contract."

10% Up-Scale For IA Circuit-Feeds

Members of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees handling closed-circuit telecasts have received a 10% wage hike under terms of new contracts negotiated with the closed-circuit firms.

The new scales are $27.50 for a four-hour minimum call to handle portable equipment and $33 for a similar call to handle heavy equipment. In addition, $13.20 is paid for four hours to assist in setting up the heavy equipment.

A special provision in the contract with TelePrompter applies exclusively to boxing events. For these there is a single rate of $52, including preparation time, show time and take-down time.

Clayton Re 'Room at the Top'

British Director Touts 'Adult Realism'—But Picture Sees Theme Close to Stendhal and Dreiser

By JIM POWERS

Hollywood, July 7.

It's been a long climb from the very bottom for British director, Jack Clayton, but he was ready, it would seem, when he got to the top. Director of the surprise British film hit, "Room At The Top," Clayton is currently here discussing various offers to direct an American picture.

He says he was sold on "Room At The Top" when he took on the directorial assignment for Romulus, but he dislikes being cast as a seer as the result of its success.

"Room At The Top" was the first feature film Clayton ever directed, although he previous helmed the prize-winning short, "The Bespoke Overcoat." He feels "Room's" realism was probably as much as anything responsible for its success.

Clayton started in films in 1935, when he was 15, as a third assistant director. He always wanted to be a director, and worked around various studios as cutter and other jobs, taking time out for service during World War II. He had been associate producer on several films when he took the director's jump on "Overcoat." He now has a non-exclusive pact with Romulus to direct one film every 18 months.

Among other offers he is mulling here is one to direct Ray Stark's "The World of Suzie Wong."

Clayton, a mild-appearing man personally, is strong for adult realism. He thinks today's films have to be that because today's audiences are adult (of whatever age) and realistic.

"You can't pander to audiences," he says, "giving them a grown-up theme and then come in with a contrived happy ending, with lovers walking off hand-in-hand. That was once considered necessary, but not today."

Clayton is inclined to deprecate the novelty of "Room At The Top," one of the first works by one of Britain's Angry Young Men, John Braine, to reach the screen.

"The theme, after all," he says, "is not so different from ones treated by Stendhal and Dreiser, among others."

He does think, though, that the film hit at what he calls "the right public moment." He thinks you can put everything possible into a motion picture but it can flop if it proves to be off in its timing on the public mood.

Clayton believes part of the current audience acceptance of realism and honesty is due to television.

"We ought to get down on our knees," he says, "and thank television for freeing us from the junk we used to do. Feature films are truly better than they ever were and the reason is that tv is doing the junk we used to do in routine programming. To succeed today, films must not only be better than tv entertainment, they must be terribly good in their own right."

Clayton does not tv indiscriminately. He believes the medium has done and will do many fine things. What he's talking about, of course, is the numerous series, etc., that follow generally the pattern of the feature films formerly made for programming.

Clayton, here for a week or 10 days to talk deals, heads back to London via New York—"the greatest city in the world," he says. He is only taking on deals for one pic at a time, because, he says, "my first picture took a year out of my life, and at that rate, I don't want to rush assignments."

Schwarz's Japanese

San Francisco, July 7.

Maury Schwarz, who runs string of Northern California art houses, found Japanese pictures were doing particularly well at one of his Frisco arties, the Rio and that 40% of his customers were Nisei.

So he's had the 400-seater entirely redecorated in Japanese motifs, hired an all-Japanese, kimono-clad staff and is booking only Japanese films.

Lines waiting to see films are served rice cookies and tea and Schwarz inaugurated new policy first night by serving chicken sukiyaki to all customer.

He point out Los Angeles has five Japanese theatres, is figuring on Frisco's fondness for things Japanese (architecture, food, Zen philosophy) to beef up business. He adds:

"Hollywood has Grauman's Chinese, so why not, in San Francisco, Schwarz' Japanese!"

Quick-Buck Showmanship Crimps Statesmanship in Film Industry

While mostly all other industries maintain a trade organization if only for routine institutional matters, the motion picture business wants something happening all the time or else the support will wane. A film exec long identified as a partisan of the Council of Motion Picture Organizations said this week that exhibitors and their co-sponsors of COMPO, the distributors, want to see dramatic action on the COMPO front on a continuing basis.

He said they specifically want to see activity that will mean dollars at the boxoffice—or, at least, hold out a promise of that result on a short-term basis. If this is not the case they are lacking in enthusiasm about contributing to the support of the motion picture industry's only "all industry" organization.

COMPO's operating budget on an annual basis is around $160,000. This is viewed substantially as an embarrassingly small amount for "fabulous" Hollywood, but the fact remains that it is the extent of COMPO's revenue collection.

The key spokesman noted that theatremen and the distribs alike contributed willingly when a Federal admissions tax was at stake. The donors figured to collect a rich payoff. But only a small portion of exhibs can see the value of institutional action along the lines of production and exhibition promotion and lobbying against adverse legislation.

Screen Gems Integrated Into Col's Overall Setup

Hollywood, July 7.

Columbia has integrated the Coast operations of Screen Gems, its wholly-owned telepix subsidiary into the overall studio organization. The gradual merger will bring Screen Gems activities under the same roof with the parent company.

Four major departments of Screen Gems — production, story, casting and publicity—will first be integrated within the framework of the existing Columbia studio setup.

SG's production department will operate under Jack Fier, Col's studio production manager, William Fadiman, studio executive story chief, and Jack Fleischman, story editor, will supervise the SG story department. Maxwell Arnow, talent exec, and Victor Sutker, casting director, will be in charge of telepix casting. Publicity will be supervised by John C. Flinn and Bob Goodfried, studio pub-ad director and publicity manager, respectively.

Prime purpose of integration move, it's said, is to bring about greater operational efficiency in the overall Col and Screen Gems organizations.

Fox Intermountain Unloads Houses

Small Town Situations Acquired by Local Exhibs In Colorado Territory

By T. BIDWELL McCORMICK

Denver, July 7.

"Just chopping out the deadwood" said Robert W. Selig, president of Fox Intermountain Theatres Inc., when asked about dropping a number of theatres from the chain in Colorado.

The action in disposing of theatres in Trinidad, Longmount, Walsenburg and Leadville, Colorado, is in keeping with the company's recently established policy of revitalization and expansion on a national basis, according to Selig.

Big plans are in the offing for a comprehensive program of expansion and modernization to keep pace with the growing needs of the area and in accordance with the parent company's national plans, Selig said.

None of the theatres disposed of by Fox Intermountain have been closed, but instead were either said or leased to local persons, one a former manager of the theatre.

West theatre in Trinidad has been taken over by George Sawaya, who also operates the Strand and a drive-in in that city Longmont theatre at Longmont is now in the hands of J. R. (Bob) Smith, who formerly operated a theatre in Steamboat Springs, Colo.

Fox in Walsenburg is now being run by Sam Piazza, who was projectionist at the Trinidad house and the Leadville theatre was taken over by Robert C. Nelson, former manager of the house.

Non-Idiot Writers

goes into writing a novel better by writing for pictures than anywhere else in the world.

"A bootblack in any studio in Hollywood knows more about what makes a good story than an English major at an Ivy League college," says this former student of Princeton.

While he believes he has learned a lot writing for films, Busch cheerfully admits his system of angling for motion picture sales doesn't always pan out. One such dud, although otherwise well-received, was a book of his called "The Actor."

Busch says he conscientiously tailored the leading character so it could be played by any one of Hollywood's top male stars, most of whom are well into their maturity. "The Actor" was a story of an actor past his prime and the problems advancing years presented.

"I practically took it in my hand from door-to-door," Busch recalls, "trying to point out how well it fitted the top male stars. But sometimes you get some weird surprises. Nobody bought it. I guess they figured they weren't that old."

The Literary Life

Book-writing has other compensations, Busch figures, although he still does a screenplay occasionally. He did his first book in 1940 and has since done eight others, the total list being "21 Americans," "The Carrington Incident," "Duel In The Sun," "They Dream of Home," "The Day of the Conqueror," "The Furies," "The Hate Merchant," "The Actor" and "California Street."

His later books have had a recurrent theme, the treatment of various phases of American life from a business point of view, public relations, motion pictures, newspaper publishing.

Busch now lives on a self-supporting ranch in northern California, writing his books and coming into Hollywood only sporadically, as "when I get broke," he says. He likes writing books, "although the publishing business hasn't changed since Gutenberg."

"At least you don't have to run interference through a lot of second-guessers," he notes. "You don't have to worry about what the producer's going to think or getting a part into the script for the director's second cousin."

Only Wanted

wanted the film made as a British quota picture. In an interview, he had told the Cypriote press that if "Guns" were filmed in Cyprus, his production company, which is being financed by Columbia, would spend £1,000,000 ($2,800,000) locally. Foreman's remarks resulted in charges by some newspapers that he had been sent to Cyprus by the British government to set up a trial balloon and to employ the production coin as bait to convince the population to remain in the Sterling bloc and to become part of the British Commonwealth.

Despite these comments, Foreman declared that he was "95% certain" that his main location headquarters would be Cyprus, the final decision resting on the Sterling question. At present, Cyprus is being ruled by a transitional government. A new regime is scheduled to be selected in February, just about the time Foreman plans to commence shooting.

Leaders of all three factions involved in the Cyprus situation assured Foreman of the utmost cooperation. Moreover, the American producer received a guarantee that his cast and crew need not fear any actions of violence during their stay in Cyprus. According to Foreman, he and his associates were received as if they were a delegation from a sovereign state. Foreman conferred with Archbishop Makarios, leader of the Greek minority; Dr. Kutchuck, head of the Turkish population, and Sir Hugh Foot, the British governor. All three expressed themselves as being in favor of the project, Foreman said, on the ground that the film would serve as excellent public relations for Cyprus in that it would show the world that things are peaceful and quiet in the country. In addition, the project would serve as a boost for tourism and the money spent locally would boost the economy. Since Foreman also plans to shoot part of the film in other sections of the Aegean area, he received similar guarantees of cooperation, particularly from the Greek government.

Foreman's plans are to start production in January with two units, one headed by director Alexander McKendrick and the other by himself. These units will be mainly concerned with shooting background and mass scenes. They will merge in March. In April, the principal performers, headed by Gregory Peck and Anthony Quinn, will arrive in Cyprus for the beginning of the main filming. Because of his plans to make the picture a British quota entry, which requires that 80% of the labor cost is British, Foreman will have to cast the remainder of the film with British performers. He plans to spend six months on location, winding up with a month in London for special effects. The picture, which will be filmed in 70m Technirama, is being geared for hardticket release next October.

Cinerama

Productions received a percentage of the profits accruing from the exhibition of the three-strip medium. It served merely as a watchdog and collection agency. At present, it receives 50% of whatever SW earns from Cinerama.

Although Stanley Warner no longer holds exclusive right to Cinerama and is prevented under Government edict from producing any more pictures in the medium, the theatre chain can legally continue to exhibit the five completed pix in the U.S. and can make sub-licensing deals for the showing of the films. There are no restrictions as to activities relating to Cinerama in foreign countries.

Cinerama Inc., the patent holding and equipment company which recently obtained a $12,000,000 loan to launch its own production and exhibition program has made efforts to remove Stanley Warner from the Cinerama scene, but both parties have failed to reach a mutually satisfactory agreement and negotiations have broken off. As a result, it appears that SW is determined to earn as much as possible from its remaining interests in the medium and is aggressively pursuing foreign deals and sub-licensing arrangements in the U.S. The elimination of Cinerama Productions, via a straight buyout of the contract, would serve to put Stanley Warner in a stronger position and would halt the necessity of having to give away 50% of the profits.

The severance of the tie between SW and Cinerama Productions could conceivably leave the door open for a merger between the latter and Cinerama Inc. Talks to this effect have already been held. Moreover, with SW no longer having exclusive rights, the way is open for Cinerama Productions to produce and exhibit films in the medium if it so desires. At the same time, Cinerama Productions is exploring diversification possibilities, figuring it can employ the coin it will get from SW for this purpose. Cinerama Productions execs have already held discussions with a number of companies with the diversification thought in mind.

Columbia's Sales Drive

Columbia will stage a six-month sales drive in honor of prexy Abe Schneider. Dubbed "Salute to the President," the drive, which runs from June 26 to Dec. 24, will award $50,000 in prize money to branch managers, salesmen, bookers and office managers.

Details of the drive were revealed by sales v.p. Rube Jackter at the closing session of a three-day sales meeting in N.Y. last week. Pictures set for release during the drive stanza include "Anatomy of a Murder," "Middle of the Night," "They Came to Cordura," "The Last Angry Man," and "It Happened to Jane."

Theatre A Masonic Lodge

Cleburne, Tex., July 7.

Yale Theatre, which opened its doors here in 1915, has been shottered for good. The closing leaves one theatre in this town which is located in the downtown area. Yale opened with a Western pic and closed with ditto.

Theatre is to be remodeled into Masonic Lodge.

Big Films And Magazine Deadlines

With "big" pictures to sell, and fewer "hand-to-mouth" type of release schedules, the companies are again stepping up their magazine advertising. It'll be a long time, however, before it gets back to where it was in the more lush days, if indeed it ever snaps back to that level.

In 1958, film ads in national magazines and the Sunday supplements hit their lowest ebb.

"The reasons are economic," explained Roger Lewis, United Artists ad-pub and exploitation director. "Until quite recently, we didn't get delivery on important productions until only a few months prior to release. There was no way of telling how good or bad a picture was. Yet, the magazines have to be committed far ahead. It's a big gamble!"

National magazine advertising only pays if there is supplementary point-of-sale advertising, Lewis held. "When the bottom fell out, we all pulled back. And, after all, we have what most other industries do not have—national publicity. We may not advertise in a magazine, but we still get plugs through stories on the show-business personalities whom we have in our pictures."

He said UA advertised films in the Pictorial Review "because there we can stagger the ads and we can arrange for ads to break locally."

With the era of the blockbuster still very much in evidence, and a harder sales pitch again called for, the mags will be used more extensively in the future.

'Porgy and Bess'—As 1935 Legiter

The VARIETY legit review of "Porgy and Bess" of Oct. 16, 1935 took cognizance that the folk opera was the third production of the Theatre Guild's 18th subscription season. Gershwin adaptation of the DuBose Heyward work had opened Oct. 10, 1935 at the Alvin Theatre on W. 52 St. Rouben Mamoulian staged. It was he with whom Samuel Goldwyn had film production disagreements resulting in calling in Otto Preminger to take over. Alexander Smallens, a "longhair" maestro, was in the pit of the Alvin for the ambitious Gershwin work (Alexander Stenert, assistant conductor); settings by Sergei Soudeikine; J. Rosamond Johnson, vocal coach. Show's premiere top was $7.70 (high in those depression years), regular scale $4.40 top.

Original production was in three acts and nine scenes and the principals included Todd Duncan (Porgy), Anne Brown (Bess), John W. Bubbles (Sportin' Life), his longtime partner Ford L. Buck (& Bubbles) as Mingo, Abbie Mitchell (Clara), Warren Coleman (Crown), Ruby Elzy (Serena), Helen Dowdy (Strawberry Woman), Ray Yeates (Crab Man). Eva Jessye's choral group numbered 41; the Charleston Orphans Band numbered 14.

VARIETY's review excerpted herewith:

"It exhibits a Gershwin far removed from the Remick songplugger's upright of his novitiate; far beyond his first 'Dixie' song hit; considerably elevated above the rhythmic nuances of his 'I Got Rhythm' and that type of jazz, and achieves what Gershwin has been studiously applying himself to ever since his 'Rhapsody in Blue' commanded serious musical attention,

"Gershwin, with the highly creditable and skillful collaboration of an expert cast and stage artificers, has captured what he set out to do—the spirit and color of a humble cross-section of Americana, the polyglot Catfish Row of Charleston, S. C. . . .

"Almost every important daily accorded this a two-ply review—from the regular dramatic critic plus the musical critic. . . .

"The elementary story of the two-timing trollop, Bess; the righteous, crippled, sex-starved Porgy; the wicked, 'sweet man' Crown, proud of his brawn and physical prowess, in courtyard or bedroom brawls, the dope-sniffin' Sportin' Life character from Harlem — all these are skillfully blended against an arresting choral and orchestral background that's 100% Gershwin. His songs, his orchestral and vocal arrangements motivate the dramatico-musical proceedings.

"An extraordinary pit orchestra of 42, batoned by Smallens, plus 60 choral voices on stage, besides the 15 principals, give full evidence of the composer's investment of time, labor and diligent application. So does the entire production which started casting 16 months ago. Gershwin worked two years on the score. The cast dutifully, almost reverently, bided its time, sometimes filling in with other part-time engagements, but ever with 'Porgy & Bess' as the ultimate.

"Gershwin worked 9 months on the orchestrations, starting in Palm Beach last winter. He did every note himself. He also scored the vocal arrangements, the first time he has ever essayed that.

"He tutored with Josef Shillinger on counterpoint and the mathematics of music. He learned to contrive figures and fugues so that 9 different voices on separate harmonics were made to blend into one, such as in the crapshooters' finale at the end of scene 1, act 1. Or, as in 'Gone, Gone, Gone'! in the ensuing scene, with the voices in the background for the harmonic scheme. Or as in those odd orchestral passages with the xylophones which, taken from the Balinese movements, are intended to most faithfully translate the barbaric spirit of the Africans.

"For example, Gershwin heard the Howard College (Washington, D. C.) tutor of music, Todd Duncan, over a year ago and pegged him for Porgy. Meantime, Paul Robeson, a sturdier name, became interested and wanted the score shipped to London where he had engagements, but Duncan remains Porgy.

"Anne Brown as Bess was introduced by Ruby Elzy, who is Serena. Both are Juilliard School of Music alumnae. Miss Elzy was already known to librettist Heyward through working in the screen version of 'Emperor Jones.' She brought in Miss Brown, who became Bess at the first audition. A good looking gal who can sing and act, she's a natural for the assignment.

"Gershwin will probably surprise himself by having a half-dozen unsuspected dance hits, strange as that may seem. The basic rhythmic appeal is undeniable, whether it's of musical comedy or American folk opera vintage. 'Sometime Thing', 'I've Got Plenty of Nuttin',' 'Bess, You Is My Woman Now' (a peach of a duet), Sportin' Life's novelty, 'It Ain't Necessarily So,' 'I Loves You Porgy' and 'There's a Boat That's Leaving Soon for New York' are standouts.

"Mamoulian's staging is inspired. It's exceedingly fine in its group motivations. Its rhythmic movements; its synchronization of masses against backgrounds of simple things, such as those two synchronized rockers; or the early morning wakin'-up scenes, which so beautifully weds the physical movements with the musical background, only further accentuate what Mamoulian first identified himself with in his initial staging of 'Porgy'. It's carried out to much greater lengths, however — something along the French Rene Clair's screen technique in 'Sous les Toits de Paris'.

"Then there's enough of the low-down to vividly portray the baser aspects. There's enough of the cooch and quiver, such as in the palmetto jungle, where Crown recaptures Bess in a primitive terp routine.

"The divorce scene; the crapgame fugue; the street cries of the strawberry woman and the crabman; the 'saucer burial' (another, more tragic, version of the rent party) as the neighbors chip in nickels and dimes to afford a decent burial, else the medical students will claim the corpse on the morrow; the spirituals; the occupational humoresque — these are among the highlights.

"It's a difficult show for all concerned. There's an alternate cast complete, just in case voices crack. This cast may be given its regular opportunities on the matinees to give the major voices respite.

"It's a Met opera type of show. It could go into the Met right now—and may yet, after its initial Alvin sojourn, for the Met wanted it originally.

"Production while weighty, is not unwieldy for future touring. It's scaled for curtailment, an obvious economic necessity, and yet not to jeopardize its musical merits.

"As it stands, 'Porgy and Bess' is a multiple credit to all artificers concerned. And, of course, the Theatre Guild. It'll outlast the subscriptions by far. Not because of the art or culture or ballyhooey, but because of its intrinsic merits, plus entertainment values."

Moscow Film Fest

tion in a festival which was not recommended by the IFPA.

It's been pointed but that if there is time to select a film for showing out-of-competition, there unquestionably is time to pick one to go into it. Also, the American industry on numerous occasions has competed in festivals which carried only an "approved" rating. The very fine line may be drawn whether such participation is "official" or only via individual companies.

The State Dept., currently in the early stages of negotiating a new cultural exchange pact with the Soviets, feels that the timing of the Moscow film fest was anything but coincidental. A film man in N.Y. quoted a Washington official as saying that the festival was "an underhanded trick" played on the Americans. The purpose of the festival, as the State Dept. views it, is to give the Russians a chance to sound the propaganda fanfares and to grab space and attention away from the American Exhibition, which is to be opened by Vice President Richard Nixon.

What is not clear to film executives at this point is why, under these circumstances, the State Dept. finds it necessary to decree participation at the Moscow fest in the first place.

Frisco Fox—A Gaudy Exclamation Point!

[RECALL 'LAST' OF MOVIE PALACES]

San Francisco, July 7.

The Sunday supplements have been enjoying an exercise in nostalgia the past fortnight on the 30th anniversary of what one has proclaimed "The Last of the Movie Palaces."

There is more truth than poetry in this appellation, for the anniversary happens to be that of what is still the biggest film theatre west of Chicago.

Furthermore, the 4,651-seat Fox furnished a sort of a gaudy exclamation point to an era which today seems as remote as the Byzantine Empire.

Indeed, an historian might draw certain comparisons between the huge Fox and some of the late-Byzantine mosques which still dominate Istanbul's skyline.

The facts:

On June 28, 1929, at 6 p.m., 50,000 people crowded against half-inch steel cables and hundreds of policemen to see the formal opening of William Fox's new, $5,000,000 10-story theatre.

Traffic was slowed to a creep as San Franciscans strained — and finally snapped—the cables in their efforts to gawk at an entire trainload of Hollywood figures who had been brought north especially for the opening.

Women fainted and only the quick action of a cordon of mounted police prevented a full-scale riot.

As the film figures, including Will Rogers, Renee Adoree, Norma Shearer, Charles Farrell, Bessie Love and Nils Asther, entered the theatre, they were joined by Frisco's fun-loving mayor, James Rolph, who later went on to become Governor of California.

Entering the house's mammoth lobby, they saw a sight which one reporter at the time described as "another monument dedicated to a greater San Francisco . . . no King, nor Emperor, nor Croesus could command more."

Inside the theatre were:

The largest single rug ever woven, rose and gold and 79 by 39 feet; a muraled dome reaching 110 feet above the orchestra, eight elevators; three organs; backstage, 31 dressingrooms; 8,000 light bulbs, malachite vases which once belonged to the Czar of Russia, gold-plated combs and hand mirrors in the women's lounges, dozens of rococco and renaissance paintings, heavy red plush drapes everywhere; gilt by the pound, and marble by the ton.

Herman Kersken, the manager (and now Fox West Coast boss in Oakland), recalls he had 300 employees.

After two hours of crush, Kersken finally gave the cue to the 50-man orchestra as it moved out of the pit on a rising stage. Fanchon & Marco's "California Revue," loaded with ballet dancers, singers and comedians, opened the house's entertainment.

The film which followed was "Behind That Curtain," with Warner Baxter and Lois Moran. It was specially selected for the opening because it contained a Frisco Chinatown sequence—and, just as marvelous, it was projected from a projection room 10 stories up and 220 feet from the screen. Will Rogers even delivered an epilog.

Fox and his wife had spent more than a year gathering the Fox's furnishings abroad. Nothing was spared, for Fox wanted this to be the crown jewel in his theatrical empire.

It was for four months. Then the stock market started its dizzying plummet downward. The Fox empire began collapsing. The theatre began passing from hand to hand, closed, reopened, closed, became known as a white elephant and (not until recent years) has started to justify its location at the far western end of Frisco's main stem, Market Street.

The furnishings look a little shabby now. Many of the oil paintings are in storage—and some have been identified as the work of skilled copyists, surely not worth the prices that Fox and his wife paid. Manager Robert Apple today operates with a staff of 30, and the complicated pit machinery and the organs haven't been used in years.

No theatre, in fact, has ever been built on such a gaudy scale since. Theatre designer Gale Santocono, who worked with his father's firm when the Fox was built, explains: "We never did another job like that one. Tastes changed and things became simple. The public doesn't seem to want such things any more."

But for a few months, at least, the Fox was the last word in the exhibition of films.

Getting on With Museum Of Picture (& TV) Trades For Los Angeles County

Los Angeles, July 7.

L.A. county Board of Supervisors has appointed a 10-man commission, repping all facets of both motion pictures and television, to supervise the upcoming L.A. County Hollywood Picture and Television Museum.

Sol Lesser, film pioneer who got project under way, is expected to be named chairman when commission convenes for first time July 17 or shortly thereafter. Commission members, an official county body, will serve staggered three-year terms.

Appointed in addition to Lesser were Mervyn LeRoy, repping Screen Directors' Guild; Samuel G. Engel, Screen Producers Guild; Curtis Kenyon, Writers Guild of America; Jack Dales, Screen Actors Guild; E. L. DePatie, v.p.-general manager of Warner Bros.

Others included tv execs Jack Wrather and Harry Ackerman; screen writer Valentine Davies; George Flaherty, repping Hollywood labor unions; A. E. England, Hollywood Chamber of Commerce. Ernest E. Debs, county supervisor of Third District (Hollywood), will be an ex-officio members and act as temporary chairman to convene commission.

An advisory council of leading industry figures will be named at July meet.

NEWARK CHAIN BUYS CLEVELAND'S HIPP

Cleveland, July 7.

Eastern Theatres of Newark, N.J., has invaded the midwest for first time by buying the 3,700-seat Hippodrome from Telemanagement.

A newly formed Eastern Hippodrome Theatre Corp., to operate consists of Sheldon Smerling, exec vice-prez of parent company, and Sylvan Goldfinger of Chicago, who also continues with Telemanagement as vice-prez. Jack Silverthorne to continue as managing director of downtown house, one of largest for capacity in Ohio.

Hippodrome will be given a face-lifting by including new marquee, carpets, renovating of seats and decor by owners. No radical film policy is planned by company which controls nine drive-ins and one other hard-top theatre in New Jersey.

Seattle's TOA Meeting

Seattle, July 7.

Theatre Owners of Washington, Northern Idaho and Alaska, a Theatre Owners of America affiliate, will hold its annual convention at the New Washington Hotel here on July 22.

Seattle Tent of Variety Clubs has scheduled a dinner meeting for the same day, and will hold its annual golf tournament and dinner-dance the following day. The TOA unit's meeting was scheduled so that exhibitors belonging to Variety could take part in both sessions while in Seattle.

'Windjammer' at Stamford

Los Angeles, July 7.

National Theatres has booked its Cinemiracle "Windjammer" into Harry Brandt's Ridgeway Theatre at Stamford, Conn., opening July 22, and also set wide-process film for four major Stanley Warner houses later in the summer, three in U. S. and fourth in Canada.

Situations include the Capitol, Cincinnati; Music Hall, Detroit; Orpheum, Frisco; and Imperial, Montreal.

Pic opened July 1 at the St. James, a Walter Reade house in Asbury Park, N. J.

Deny Venue Shift; Chattanooga Case On N.Y. Rails

A request by the major companies for a change of venue from New York to Atlanta in an $3,100,000 antitrust suit filed by Independent Theatres Inc., operator of theatres in Chatanooga, Tenn., was denied Monday (29) by Judge Thomas F. Murphy in N.Y. Federal Court.

The majors, including Warner Bros., Loew's, 20th-Fox, Paramount, Universal and American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, had argued that the case be heard in the Atlanta Federal Court on the grounds that the records of the companies were in that area. William Gold, attorney for the plaintiff, charged a national conspiracy on the part of the defendants and pointed out that all the companies had their main offices in N.Y.

Judge Murphy also granted the plaintiff the right to examine the defendants.

Berlin 'Loaders'

at some of the more elegant functions has irritated those who were snubbed.

The 500-strong contingent of journalism have had a better break this year with the visiting talent. The columnists and photogs have had some worthwhile personalities to work on, notably from the United States. Starting with Van Heflin, who doubles as the official Washington delegate, the Hollywood contingent has included David Niven, Esther Williams, Rita Hayworth and Sophia Loren. Curt Jurgens was also around.

France, Italy, the Argentine and Spain backed the event with substantial support, but at the last moment the British contingent dwindled to three of the performers in "The Siege of Pinchgut." John Mills, and his daughter Hayley, both of whom star in the other British entry, "Tiger Bay," cancelled out.

While Berlin has always been reasonably generous in its hospitality, there are indications of a tightening up in invites to pressmen, quite a few of whom, it is thought, accept cuffos and do little in return. Invitations for next year, therefore, will be dependent on the performance this year. Newsmen and photogs have been requested to submit clippings of their coverage, so that a reasonable estimate can be made of the desirability and advisability of extending a further invite for 1960.

Unless circumstances beyond control are accepted, such a ruling may hurt some of the British scribes whose magazines are at moment suspended by the print dispute, but who hope they may be able to save up sufficient general copy for use if there's an early resumption.

As a wind-up comment, it's worth recording that the Germans will probably participate on an individual basis at the upcoming fest, although the Russians have snubbed Berlin for two years running. A firm decision is expected within the next week or so.

Continued War Against Town as Exhib

Barred by State Court, and Mgr. Operates Under Own Name—Wright Cries 'Subterfuge'

Red Wing, Minn., July 7.

An unusual film industry fight will decide if this town's municipal auditorium can be operated legally as a film theatre in competition with a privately-owned showhouse.

When the Minnesota Supreme Court decided that the town itself couldn't continue such an operation, steps were taken to try to circumvent the adverse ruling. The town leased the auditorium for picture theatre purposes to the man who had been managing it and he continued the film operation.

Renville, Minn., district court now has under advisement the application of John Wright, owner of the local Chief theatre, for a writ prohibiting what he alleges to be a "subterfuge." He seeks to have the town stopped from leasing the building for exhibition purposes.

It was Wright who brought the action to put the town itself out of the picture theatre business and successfully appealed to the state supreme from an adverse lower court decision.

The current action was argued in the Renville court after an affidavit of prejudice was filed against Judge W. A. Schultz of adjacent Hastings who had decided in Red Wing's favor in the first instance. The local judge had removed himself from the case because he felt he could not be impartial.

The second suit went back to the Renville district court after the Supreme Court by a 4-3 majority decided that the matter of whether the building could be leased to a private operator for a film theatre hadn't been before the court when it ruled against the town's operation.

A Supreme Court dissenting minority opinion was that "the operation of a motion picture theatre, whether by the town itself or a lessee, is a well-recognized competitive business."

"Nothing in the case justifies the commercial operation of a motion picture business in the auditorium," the minority opinion concluded.

Regardless of the Renville district court's findings in the leasing case it's indicated there'll be another appeal to the Supreme Court. Wright contends, among other things, that the leasing violates the state constitution.

For many years Wright's Chief Theatre competed with the auditorium, but when exhibition started slipping generally and the Chief had to bid competitively with the auditorium for product Wright felt there's room in the town (population 12,000) for only the one theatre.

Bugs Gone, Biz Booms

Houston, July 7.

A successful mosquito and bug control spraying program has been instituted at the ozoners operated here by the Interstate Theatre Circuit. The spraying is done with a relatively odor-free product during the showing of the regular program and patrons are able to relax and watch the screen fare in comfort.

The bug-free viewing has increased biz to such an extent that at the South Main Drive-In, Interstate has had to hire police officers to direct traffic.

Chicago's 'Cry of Jazz' Film Having a Private Success, Not Theatrical

Chicago, July 7.

Although its chances for theatrical exhibition appear slim, a shoe-string socio-jazz documentary called "Cry of Jazz" has been kicking up brisk word-of-mouth via the private rental circuit and, just recently, with a partial telescreening in Boston.

Produced by Chicago's KHTB Productions, the controversial picture conveys a parallel between the structures of jazz and Negro life in America. It is slated for showing at the Playboy mag jazz festival here next month, and will be submitted at Irving Levin's San Francisco International Film Festival in the fall. There's possibility it may also enter the Irish film fete at Cork this year, provided the latter opens a 16m category.

Since its release last April, "Cry" has been snatched up by scores of audio-visual groups and film societies, but its major splash to date was an abbreviated gander on WHDH-TV, Boston. The ABC affil used about 15 minutes of the 34-minute film on its "Dateline Boston" public affairs stanza June 23, reportedly generating considerable Beantown buzz afterward.

Edward Bland, co-producer-director-scripter of the pic, says it deals with the "function of the Negro experience in America and its importance to the total American experience, with jazz as the interpretive vehicle of that experience."

Some objections voiced about the pic are that it is self-conscious and guilty of a reverse racism. Its producers deny any but the motive of wanting to stir thought and discussion—which, apparently, they've succeeded in doing.

Admitting that prospects for commercial exhibition look "slim," Bland stated efforts are forming to line up additional tv exposure for the picture. A Toledo station, for one, is said to fancy it, but so far money has prevented a deal.

Bland said some New Yorkers are interested in financing a second KHTB production, but want any sequel to have a softer theme and expression than the passionate "Cry."

11 DIFFERENT KINDS OF 'BEN-HUR' BOOKS

Eleven new editions of the Gen. Lew Wallace novel, "Ben-Hur," all inspired by the $15,000,000 Metro production, are schedued to hit the bookstands between now and the film's release in the fall.

The books include a deluxe edition, published by Harper's; an abridged edition for teenagers, published by Frederick Warne & Co.; a children's edition by Grosset & Dunlap; four paperbacks by Bantam, Dell, Signet and Pocketbook; Famous Children's Classics, Sports Shelf (Wardlock); a coloring book and a children's version to be issued by Loew's, and a souvenir book by Random House.

Scholastic magazine's Arrow Book Club is said to be planning "The Chariot Race from Ben-Hur." Metro has come across books in which sections from "Ben-Hur" have been published, including "The Chariot Race" and "The Christmas Story."

McCann's Clyne Sez Webs Boss Shows With 'Assist' From Mad. Ave., As FCC Probes 'Who Buys What'

In a showdown disagreement on what program should occupy what time slot, McCann-Erickson tv chieftain C. Terence Clyne said yesterday (Tues.) "the network is what I call the boss." Agencyman Clyne was leadoff witness in the FCC's Foley Square (N.Y.) investigation into web programming policies and practices.

Clyne was on the stand two-and-a-half hours in the morning and throughout all the afternoon session. Agency phase of the hearings is being aired by N. Y. C. station WNYC through Friday (10).

But, if the network is the boss in the final selection of a stanza, the ad agency is still a power in the preliminaries. Under detailed grilling by FCC attorney Ashbrook P. Bryant, Clyne told how his agency screens about 250 pilots each spring, and how it often works closely with the producer (particularly an indie producer) to shape a show format to a particular client or to conform to "company policy and taste."

He said that 90% of the pilots represented new investments (possibly totalling $11,500,000, or $50,000 to $70,000 each).

There is an obligation to the sponsor, Clyne stated, because the public will know in far greater numbers who is sponsoring the program than what channel or network is the carrier.

He pointed out that new stanzas are subject to a 70% rate of casualty—only 10 out of 30 new shows will be renewed. For these reasons, he said, the agency screens and consults on scripts and films and even story outlines, and has a representative on the set and viewing the rushes.

"If we recommend an independent show to the network and the network accepts," Clyne said, "we have a maximum depth of responsibility to help the producer make the show a success." But, if the net is the producer, the production responsibility is more with the web, he added.

He said that in the last two years, the networks have had very little to do with 25% to 30% of the programs out of McCann. Clyne also outlined his agency's executive table of organization and the steps showing purchase and production.

Ordinarily, he said, network tv is not recommended unless a client has at least a $3,500,000 budget ($2,700,000 is required, he said, for alternate sponsorship of a weekly half-hour program).

Scheduled to follow the McCann tv topper today are Robert Foreman, BBDO, and Richard A. R. Pinkham, of Ted Bates agency.

The agency probe is phase two of the FCC investigation into network program policies and practices. In May, web attorneys met in Washington with the FCC investigators for initial outlining of the program selection process.

Commission is interested in getting to "basic facts" on network-producer tie-in charges which have been made in recent Congressional hearings (Celler and Magnuson Committees). Agency-tv execs in general welcome the investigation, feeling it would possibly clear the air on the agency function in programming.

Hearings, which began yesterday, are before FCC Chief Hearing Examiner James D. Cunningham.

Cigar Sponsor For Kovacs ABC Show

Cigar wielding Ernie Kovacs will emcee a weekly panel show next season on ABC-TV, with the entire tab being picked up by Consolidated Cigars for Dutch Masters.

Title of the half-hour outing is "Take A Good Look," slotted for Thursdays at 10:30 p.m. Format of the show has the panelists trying to place an unidentified guest with the news event she or he may have been involved with. Show, developed by Irving Mansfield in association with the web, will have a variety of panelists. Taped pilot had Jim Bishop, Hans Conreid, and Venessa Brown.

WRCA-TV'S BANNER SIX-MONTH BILLINGS

WRCA-TV, Gotham flagship outlet of NBC, racked up a sales record for the first six months of 1959. NBC veep William N. Davidson said June sales also broke billing records for the month and a 19% increase was established for the first half this year over the same six months in 1958.

Max E. Buck, WRCA-TV station manager, attributed much of the June increase in billings to the "Orbit Plan," designed to increase an advertiser's cumulative audience by rotating prime-time announcements through all triple-A positions on Thursdays, and also revolving 8 p.m. announcements to cover six different days of the week.

MBS Willing To Offer Creditors 30c on Dollar

Next round in Mutual's bout for survival is to effect a settlement with its 750 creditors, whose lien against the web totals $3,195,207.

In a rapid series of developments, MBS filed a petition in Federal court seeking a reorganization of the company under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Act. Part of the reorganization would be a settlement of outstanding debts—and the savvy estimate is that MBS will offer creditors 30 cents on the dollar.

Asa Herzog, a referee in bankruptcy, who signed the order permitting the web to continue operation, has scheduled a meeting for July 13. At the meeting, Mutual's creditors will be heard.

The new MBS prez is Robert Hurleigh, who has been the key figure recently in finding buyers

Pye radio and tv group has had a cheerful year. Chairman Charles Orr Stanley announces profits of $5,278,000, a jump on the previous year of $534,800. Dividend is held at 12½%.

Disney Eyeing Another Web?

The romance between ABC-TV and Walt Disney, which started in 1954 with "Disneyland," has now wound up in the courts. The seven-year agreement, now attacked by Walt Disney Productions as being in violation of the anti-trust laws, runs out in 1961.

With the pact's expiration approaching, word is out that Disney might make a new network tie. Roy Disney, prez of Walt Disney Productions, for the record stated that at this time he's not switching networks. But in the wake of the bad feelings engendered by the suit, with Roy Disney calling a press conference and ABC-TV issuing a rebuttal statement, it might be unlikely for ABC-TV and Disney to patch things up for a fresh whirl after the current basic pact expires.

Heart of Disney's dispute with ABC-TV rests on the exclusivity provisions of the contract. Two Disney shows are involved in the anti-trust suit, considered one of the first of its kind in tv. Shows are "Zorro" and "Mickey Mouse Club." Both shows have been axed for the coming season on the ABC-TV schedule after a number of seasons. Disney would like to peddle the properties elsewhere, either to another network or in syndication, but contends that it's barred from doing so by the terms of its initial agreement with the web, contrary to the anti-trust laws.

ABC-TV countered in a statement that it was willing to forego the exclusivity provisions if Disney would pay claimed monies due to ABC. Monies due one party from another is another issue of dispute, with Disney disclaiming any monies due to ABC-TV.

Unaffected by the dispute is "Walt Disney Presents," slated for airing next season on ABC-TV.

Non-British Com'l TV Programs Limited to 6th of Total Output

London, July 7.

Critics of the alleged overweighting of British commercial tv programs with American material get a forthright answer from Paul Adorian, chairman of the executive council of Independent Television Companies Assn., Ltd., in his survey for the year ended April 30. Pointing out that non-British programs are limited to a sixth of the total, Adrian declares that dollar exports of commercial tv material from this country are well above those of dollar imports. It would, he points out, be detrimental to the tv export industry to close the British market to other countries and adds that the association is determined to increase its export trade.

Adorian, who presented the executive council's report and accounts at ITCA's annual general meeting last week, estimates that the commercial webs between them will pay over something like $25,200,000 in direct taxation to the Government in the current year. This is more than the annual excise revenue from tv licenses, of which none goes to the commercial tv operators.

The report declares than 152 plays were produced for tv by the commercial webs last year, a production rate double that of all the London West End theatres put together. In dealing with contributions made to religious and schools broadcasting, the report says there are various types of special programs the companies would like to produce but which can't be done because of the present limitations on airing hours.

ITCA is shortly to introduce a scheme for the registration of tv program titles. Its central clearing house for the scripts of spot ads, operating since March 1, 1958, has proved "most valuable."

All the commercial tv companies now operating are members of ITCA, while the other outfits not yet on the air—Anglia Television, Ltd., and Ulster Television, Ltd.—are represented by observers at meetings.

Britannia Rules

London, July 7.

Val Parnell, Associated TeleVision chief, has hotly denied accusations that British scriptwriters are being neglected in favor of foreign scribes. He checked the company's output for the year ending last April with the following results.

In variety ATV produced 91 shows all written by Britons. Documentaries and dramatic serials accounted for 205 programs, again all scribed by Britons. Parnell added that out of the whole of ATV's output he could find only three scripts by foreign authors, the U. S. plays "Arsenic and Old Lace," "The Bridge Of San Luis Rey" and "No Time For Comedy." This did not include, he added, such classics as Ibsen's "Borkman."

'Station Image' Makes a Lot Of Difference—Merle Jones' Study

Hollywood, July 7.

In what CBS Television Stations prexy Merle Jones described as a "breakthrough" in television research, a quantitative study indicates that the audience in fact does have a "station image" which differentiates one television channel from another in a single market.

Moreover, this station image—similar to the much-discussed "corporate image"—translates itself into an association of the station with the advertisers using it. A station with an "image" of good, balanced programming tends also to be associated with a picture of honesty and reliability among its advertisers, the study indicates.

Study was conducted among 1,204 respondents in New York and Los Angeles by Dr. Ernest Dichter's Institute for Motivational Research in association with McCann-Erickson's Market Planning Corp. The two markets were selected because they are the most competitive in the country, because they both contain three network o&o's and four independents and because in each market, the webs occupy Channels 2, 4 and 7 and the indies 5, 9, 11 and 13.

Questioning was indirect and no reference to call letters or web affiliation was made. Respondents, for example, were asked to name the channel "most likely" to fit this identification: "they have more worthwhile programs which I really look forward to, and watch with interest." To this particular question, 52% of respondents in both cities named channel 2 (CBS), 28% Channel 4 (NBC), 8% channel 7 (ABC), while all indies combined got 12%.

Similar questioning, framed in both positive and negative (their programs . . . don't hold my interest) ways, pursued the programming "image," showing the CBS o&o's with a greater margin of respect than others in the markets. Then came the "correlative" questioning, with respect to commercials shown on the stations.

Respondents, for example, were asked to identify the channel fitting this description, "I have a feeling of greater confidence, more trust in the products I see advertised on that station." In this particular instance, 53% named channel 2, 30% channel 4, 9%

HOWARD BARLOW IN CHI SYMPH STINT

Chicago, July 7.

With "Voice of Firestone" displaced next fall, Howard Barlow, the show's maestro for 16 years, is picking up guest shots.

WGN-TV has inked Barlow to a pair of appearances with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra next season in its new Sunday night series, "Great Music From Chicago." Barlow will conduct a symphonic concert on Nov. 15 and a lighter program of Broadway music March 27.

Other conductors in the series include Fritz Reiner, Alfred Wallenstein, Walter Hendl, Hans Rosbaud, Igor Markevitch, Arthur Fiedler, Andre Kostelanetz, Isler Solomon, Sir John Barbirolli and Sir Thomas Beecham.

ABC-TV's Accent On Sports Skeds; Pro Grid Clients

ABC-TV, in the midst of beefing up its sports schedule, has set its pro-football lineup of seven games and is scouting other fields to enter.

Pro-football, which starts with an Aug. 22 exhibition game, is two-thirds sold, with Hamm's Beer, National Bohemiam Beer and General Mills lined up. The games all are slated for Saturday nights, starting at 10 p.m. (EDT).

Web's sports department, now under the aegis of programming v.p. Tom Moore, also is exploring the possibility of telecasting major league baseball nighttime games next season, as well as live college football matches. In addition, it's trying to buoy its Wednesday night fights, getting better matches via its tieup with the Norris-Wurtz-Gibson trio. (Schedule of championship fights starts tonight (Wed.) with the bantamweight title at stake. Others upcoming include the middleweight and featherweight title matches.)

Bud Yorkin Dickers Skelton for Special On Rags Ragland Bio

Hollywood, July 7.

Bud Yorkin has acquired rights to late comic Rags Ragland's life as an indie project and is negotiating with Red Skelton to take over title role in projected onetime color spec. Property will be the first on a program of live and filmed tv undertakings. As a result of prepping his own properties, Yorkin has nixed all outside producer-director assignments.

Yorkin, who last year staged "An Evening With Fred Astaire" for Chrysler Motors, has inked four writers to develop two of five proposed film properties and is talking with Chrysler, as well as with 20th-Fox and Ford Motor Co., relative to live specials for next season. In line with this personal activity, Yorkin has nixed a Pontiac bid to do the Mario Lanza spec in fall.

ABC-TV Sun. Slot For Champ Bridge

Chicago, July 7.

Walter Schwimmer has sold his latest tv film entry, "Championship Bridge with Charles Goren," to ABC-TV for Sunday afternoon slotting this fall. The 26-week series goes in at 3:30 p.m., clock time, starting Oct. 11.

Pasteboard show promptly snared a sponsor for 13 alternate weeks, one which will be making its maiden entry in network tv, North American Van Lines. Buy was made through Biddle Co., a Bloomington, Ill. agency, and it's understood a sponsor for the remaining half is in the wings.

Schwimmer, who has been associated with Pete De Met on the filmed sports series, "All Star Golf" and "Championship Bowling," has produced the bridge show as a solo venture. It will have noted cards authority Charles Goren on the commentary, with Alex Drier as emcee, and will pit teams of the world's top bridge players in a continuing video tourney.

TV'S KINGPIN--THE PRODUCER

Detroit to CBS: 'We Want Color'

Pressure from the automotive companies in Detroit may force CBS-TV into a greater acceptance of tint tv in the future, with the loss of some lucrative billings as the alternative to the present practice of looking the other way. Since CBS has no intention of walking away from those fat Detroit billings, it's anticipated that there will be an upgrading of tintcasts in the coming season.

When Chevrolet pacted Red Skelton to do an hour color special in October, one of the requirements for the show was that it be done in color. It's understood that there was some initial reluctance at CBS about the tint aspect but the web finally yielded to Chevy's demand.

NBC is getting the lion's share of the automotive tv business in '59-'60. One of the major factors in embracing NBC is the additional tint dimension given the programming.

Arthur Freed TV Special on NBC's Roster; Sussan's Flock of Dickers

By BOB CHANDLER

Hollywood, July 7.

NBC is negotiating with Arthur Freed for a 90-minute or two-hour television special to consist of memorable segments from the producer's many film musicals. The Freed show, which would be aimed at the fall of 1960, was one of several projects initiated last week by Herb Sussan, director of special programs for NBC, prior to his departure Saturday night for New York.

Sussan also initiated discussions with reps of Debbie Reynolds for the star to headline her own special this season; set up talks on a tv version of George White's "Scandals, starring the Ritz Bros.; met with Gower Champion on a music revue to star Nanette Fabray which Champion would stage and direct; and discussed with Alan Handley the prospect of his producing and directing the Victor Borge special to be taped in Denmark this summer.

All of the projects except the Freed musical are planned for this season. Freed feels he would need at least a year to plan and cast his project. Sussan must now present all the packages to the NBC program board for approval before finalizing negotiations.

Handley's Denmark assignment will depend upon the timing of his visit to India where he's to scout talent there in August for a winter Chevy show similar to the all-Japanese show he produced and directed this past season.

Decision on Debbie Reynolds awaits her return from Hawaii in a couple of weeks. Sussan is in charge of Sunday night and Friday night specials at NBC. The Tuesday night Ford series is being produced outside the network by Hubbell Robinson Jr. While here Sussan also met with Henry Jaffe on the 15 AT&T musicals he will produce and with Milton Berle in Las Vegas on Berle's two Sunday specials, one with Danny Thomas and the other with Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz.

$1,500,000 Tums Coin to ABC-TV

Chicago, July 7.

Lewis Howe Co. (Tums) gestured ABC-TV's way last week, and it's a virtual certainty now the company's entire network budget of $1,500,000 will go to American. Through McCann-Erickson, Chi, Tums purchased alternate week thirds of "The Untouchables" on Thursday night, the buy taking the bulk of the company's budget. Remainder undoubtedly will filter into the net via the scatter plan.

With L&M ciggies already committed to the major portion of the Desilu series, only one-third on alternate weeks remains to be sold.

A sidebar to the Lewis Howe deal is that the sale was clinched in the air by Vince Murray of ABC-TV's central division, acting for web sales veep Jim Beach. It's believed to be the first network order ever to be written on the back on an American Airlines envelope.

Bart McHugh Exits JWT

Bart McHugh Jr., for the last 10 years associate director of radio-television with the J. Walter Thompson agency (under Dan Seymour), exits the agency Sept. 1 to go into another venture. Prior thereto he was 11 years with the Music Corp. of America.

McHugh's future plans will be firmed up for early announcement.

Toy Makers In TV Big Spread; Marx's 6 Skeins

Toy makers will be pitching their wares hard via network tv this fall:

World's largest manufacturer of toys, Louis Marx, has bought into six moppet skeins on all three webs. Company will have ABC-TV's weekday "Rin Tin Tin" and "Rockey and His Friends" and Sundays Paul Winchell show; CBS-TV's daily "Captain Kangaroo" and Saturday "Heckle & Jeckle;" and NBC-TV's "Howdy Doody" on Saturday.

Buy is for the pre-Christmas shopping months of October to December. Marx this spring moved to the Ted Bates agency and the spread represents the first important advertising in the firm's history.

Toy train maker Lionel Corp. will have participations in ABC's Sunday late afternoon lineup for kids with "Broken Arrow" from 4:30 to 5 p.m. and "Lone Ranger" from 5:30 to 6 p.m. Agency is Grey.

Another Grey client, Ideal Toys, will again sponsor the Macy's Thanksgiving's Day parade on the NBC network (Ideal a year ago also was on NTA's several market setup for Sunday telecast of Shirley Temple pics).

Mattel Inc., maker of plastic and musical toys, will take its own show into the slot between the Lionel buys with "Matty's Funday Funnies," from 5 to 5:30 p.m. Contract on this one is for 61 weeks through the Coast agency, Carson-Roberts and represents a doubling of the tv budget over last year.

Toy makers nearly doubled their spending in tv in 1958 compared with 1957, but the big slice of the new money had been going to spot, almost $3,000,000 to a little more than $600,000 for the webs.

Maschwitz's 'Carissima' As Ginger's British Bow

London, July 7.

Eric Maschwitz, boss of BBC-TV Light Entertainment, caused some eyebrow raising when he picked his own stage play, "Carissima," as the vehicle for Ginger Rogers' British tv debut.

Maschwitz is now donating the entire author's copyright fee to the British Songwriters' Guild, of which he was a former chairman.

NETWORKS FACE ACUTE SHORTAGE

By GEORGE ROSEN

Television is facing a major crisis—a shortage of topflight producers. Any producer worth his salt today enjoys a kingpin status in the business and can write his own ticket. But there aren't enough of them to go around. Those with the sought-after credentials and a track record in tv are all accounted for, contractually committed to next season's schedules. The networks will admit that it's easier to get a sponsor today than a good producer.

There are something like 200 specials riding the tv networks in '59-'60. At least half of them still remain unassigned because of the producer shortage. There are only so many good ones to begin with, resulting in a situation where it's become necessary to recruit top tv names from other creative areas.

Take, for example, the situation at NBC, in connection with the forthcoming series of Sunday night 8 to 9 specials. Thus far three producers have been assigned to the series—yet in no single instance have they been drawn from the ranks of personalities whose forte is producing.

Last week NBC negotiated a deal with Robert Alan Aurthur to produce a bundle of Sunday drama specials. Aurthur's rep is in the writing field. Previously the network had set a deal with John Frankenheimer and Alex Segal for producer - director assignments. Frankenheimer, out of the "Playhouse 90" stable, is a director. Basically that's where Segal cut his tv teeth, too. Similarly, NBC has been after Dore Schary to produce one or more entries for the Sunday series. Schary says if the right play comes along he will do one. But bringing an "outsider" in isn't quite that simple. He'll still need a tv producer when he goes into the studio.

For nearly two months Ford and J. Walter Thompson were on the prowl for a top producer to helm the ambitious Tuesday night NBC-TV series of specials next season. By a strange quirk of fate which corresponded with his unhappiness at CBS, Hubbell Robinson Jr. set up his own shop and took over the Ford assignment. But Robinson's an administrator. He still needs producers for each and every special that goes into the series. Those he would like—the Fred Coes, the Gordon Duffs, the Ralph Levys, the Bob Banners, the Herb Brodkins, etc.—are unavailable.

Why are they unavailable? Because the selfsame Robinson had committed them to longterm contracts with CBS during his tenure as an exec veepee of the network. There's nothing he can do about it.

CBS board chairman Bill Paley played it smart two-three years ago when, following the same precepts of his early radio days in contending that a network is only as good as its production staff, he gave Robinson as program chieftain the go-ahead to commandeer

Entire Second Act Of 'Playhouse 90' Omitted, Nobody Seems to Mind

Honolulu, July 7.

Entire filmed second act of Playhouse 90's "Project Immorality" was omitted by KGMB-TV Monday (29)—and only a handful of viewers evidently realized that somebody had goofed.

Few "how come?" calls were chalked up at the switchboard and most of those came in only when viewers realized the show had run 30 minutes short. Curiously enough, switch from the end of Act One to the start of Act Three didn't seem to interrupt the continuity to any extent.

NBC Radio 'Sticking Around' Both Day & Night; Affils Cautioned To Clear Time or Go Elsewhere

Recently there have been reports that NBC Radio, despite its boast that it is now enjoying something like 53% of all three-network radio billings, would soon trim its sails a la CBS and shave off its nighttime operation as a means of reducing expenses.

However, the air was cleared last Thursday when the NBC brass met with the affiliates' executive committee, at which the lie was officially given to any such move. Here, as a matter of fact, were the following set of premises set forth at the meet:

1. NBC Radio will not only maintain the status quo, but will stregthen its operation both daytime and nighttime.

2. Affiliates who aren't willing to play ball with the network and clear time on the important network programming segments are invited to go elsewhere.

3. Despite reports to the contrary, Matthew J. Culligan, the web's radio chieftain, will not switch over to the parent RCA or anywhere else—at least not at the present time, but will remain right on top of the operation.

4. Those reports about NBC Radio operating at a $3,000,000 annual loss just aren't so. True, the network isn't making money (which one is?), but a responsible source put it this way: "We've got our losses down to somewhere between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000."

A program managers committee will be formed for the purpose of meshing web programming as close as possible to the needs of the affiliates. George W. Harvey, veep and general manager of WFLA, Tampa, presided at the affiliates exec committee meeting.

'Oz' Spec in Dec.

"Wizard Of Oz," the Metro pic which was already showcased as a two-hour spec on CBS-TV, will get a repeat on Sunday, Dec. 13, in the 7:30 to 9:30 period. Red Skelton has been pacted to host the program.

Skelton, along with his regular weekly show, will also do a full hour CBS-TV special for Chevrolet in October. It'll be a tintcast.

Dicker Moss Hart, Sullivan, Susskind In 'P to P' Hosting

Just about every big name raconteur CBS-TV can lay its hands on is in the running for hosting chores on next season's "Person to Person" telecasts now that Arthur Godfrey has bowed out. But the principal contenders at the moment are dramatist Moss Hart and CBS' Ed Sullivan, with David Susskind, who in addition to producing for tv has done somewhat this kind of thing on his local WNTA-TV (N.Y.) "Open End," being another name cropping up most often.

CBS and "P to P" sponsor Pharmaceuticals say they are in no particular rush to find a series of rotating hosts, since the half-hour weekly program doesn't kick off again until middle fall. However, this take-it-easy attitude hasn't diminished the number (at least 11) of personalities contending for the post. Since "P to P" is guaranteed at least one, and probably more than one, 13-week cycle, it is even conceivable that all the important probables will get a crack at hosting the show.

In addition to Sullivan, Hart and Susskind, others being considered by CBS are Faye Emerson, Walter Cronkite, Charles Collingwood, Margaret Truman, Eric Sevareid, Peter Lind Hayes, Red Skelton and Red Barber. Jack Benny's name has also been mentioned, but his availability to do the show, even once during the course of the season, is unknown at this time.

Station Rep's WNEW Early-Morning Pitch To Agcy. Time Buyers

Jargon of Madison Ave.'s ad agencies has been seeping through the mikes of WNEW, Gotham indie, past few days in behalf of Tv Advertiser Representatives Inc.

Ketchum, McLead & Grove, agency for TvAR, bought a flock of one-minute live announcements for airing on the Klavan & Finch early morning show with an "eye" to catching the "ear" of agency time buyers. Announcements began June 22 and will run through July 10.

Copy line informs time buyers that TvAR is a new sales rep outfit whose primary function is to sell national spot time on out of town stations to ad agencies and also calls attention that this month it too will represent all WBC stations.

Average listener catching the commercial is obviously bewildered by the nature of the copy but Madison Ave.'s not-so-hidden persuaders catch quickly, a WNEW spokesman said.

'Lineup' Pilot Down CBS Drain?

There's now some question as to whether "Lineup" in expanded 60-minute form will get off to the races in the fall, despite the fact that the CBS-TV entry scheduled for the Wednesday 7:30 to 8:30 period is virtually SRO. There's some enthusiasm around the network over a new series of Alaska, "New Frontiers," out of Martin Manulis' 20th-Fox TV shop, with some rooters at the web for installing the series in place of "Lineup."

Something like $100,000 has gone into the "Lineup" pilot, which the network has yet to see. Final decision will probably rest on the outcome of the pilot—and how the advertisers feel about switching allegiance to the "Frontiers" series.

K.C. Stations Evaluate Role in Dailies' Strike, Wonder If Worth It All

Kansas City, July 7.

Radio and television stations here now are adding up the figures on the period of operation from June 19-29 while the Kansas City Star and Kansas City Kansan were on strike and are finding it an expensive whirl. Broadcasting boomed to the frantic point during this period, but so did expenses and promotion.

Major network stations scheduled extra shows, especially newscasts, most of them working crews around the clock. News got the big emphasis, KMBC-TV, for example, adding local and regional newscasts alongside ABC network news. Virtually all news bureaus of broadcasting stations operated with extra help during the strike period.

One of the very few times "Breakfast Club" was not on the

Koslov Bid Accents 'Meet Press' Vs. 'Face Nation' Rivalry for Names

Race between NBC-TV's "Meet the Press" and CBS-TV's "Face the Nation," two biggest panel news conference shows stemming from Washington, for telecast with Frol R. Koslov, First Deputy Premier of the Soviet Union, points up the constantly hot battle between these two newsmaking programs.

True, there's a third program, ABC-TV's "College News Conference," competing for name politicos and diplomats but the big fry, as a rule, manage to get their best exposure on "Meet the Press" and "Face the Nation." At least, that's the way recent ARB rating figures have it.

In Washington, the ratings reveal, it's "Meet the Press" two to one. Program had an average rating of 13.4 more than double combined ratings of "Face the Nation" (4.7) and "College News Conference" (1.6) for Oct. 1958-May, 1959 period.

Reaction throughout the country was similar with "Meet the Press" scoring a 35% lead over its CBS rival and an 85% lead over its ABC competitor, according to Jan.-May, 1959 Nielsen figures.

News staffers at the webs are watching with interest what Koslov will do with the invite from Frank Stanton, prexy of CBS, to appear on latter's "Face the Nation." Koslov, at outset, said emphatically no, largely because his colleague Mikoyan had been unable to answer a question put to him on "Meet the Press" before the program went off the air. Veep Richard Nixon, it is reported, asked Koslov to reconsider the Stanton's offer.

Should Koslov, before returning to his homeland, appear on any CBS program it could be construed as a softening of the USSR's attitude toward CBS in view of the latter's production of "Plot to Kill Stalin" on the web's "Playhouse 90" last year.

Meanwhile, Nixon has been assured that when he visits the USSR in connection with the opening of the American fair in Sakolniki Park, Moscow, he will have red carpet tv treatment to address the Soviet citizenry for as long as he wishes.

Nixon on CBS' Side

Washington, July 7.

Vice President Richard M. Nixon asked Russia's First Deputy Premier, Frol R. Kozlov to let CBS network correspondents back into Russia, but received no indication the USSR will do it.

Incident happened at a reception Nixon gave for visiting high-ranking Russian, CBS prez Frank Stanton came down receiving line. Nixon stopped him and said to Kozlov, "He should be allowed to operate again in Moscow." Kozlov replied, "When you and I reach agreement, he can stay."

GF Still Up in Air On 'Father of Bride'; $150,000 Investment

Hollywood, July 7.

General Foods has over $100,000 tied up in Metro-TV's "Father of the Bride" but no decision has been reached on disposition of the half-hour comedy series. Understood that more than $150,000, including production costs, have been poured into the property, which would make it the most expensive pilot ever produced.

GF is known to have advanced more than $100,000 to Metro for the property, which included literary rights, the pilot and a batch of scripts. Many of the top comedy writers in Hollywood have worked on it.

So far, Metro has only the answer print to show for it. Even if GF had decided to get it on a network next season it would be hard put to find a desirable time. Considering its investment, the food packager will hold it in reserve as a replacement for a faltering show.

Breck Shampoo Dickers Some NBC-TV Specials

Breck Shampoo is dickering with NBC-TV about buying into several specials for fall, which might include participation in the network's Sunday lineup of original dramatic programs.

Consummation of a deal with NBC-TV would mark Breck's first significant buy for the 1959-60 season. Shampoo firm, handled out of Reach McLinton, still has a few Shirley Temple "Storybook" reruns slated for the fourth quarter on ABC-TV but, beyond that, nothing else.

Joyce Davidson, CBC Make Peace

Toronto, July 7.

Joyce Davidson, femme interviewer, made her peace with the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. and returned to her "Tabloid" program on Monday (6) night. Her other Toronto-emanated program will include such CBC-TV pops as "Long Shot" on Sunday night (12) and "Scan" on Monday (13) nights.

(She has been off the CBC since June 14 when, the day before, as a guest on Dave Garroway's "Today," she claimed that "most Canadians are indifferent to the Royal visit of Queen Elizabeth." On international headlines on both sides of the Atlantic, she resigned from the CBC "to save them embarrassment.")

Said H. G. Walker, CBC director of English-language tv, "Despite the continuing mixed comment from viewers concerning a remark she made on a New York program, we will be pleased to see her back on the shows. She is under contract to the CBC as an interviewer and that is what she will be doing when she returns.

"Her remark concerning the Royal tour was a personal opinion and, although the CBC did not agree with the opinion, we certainly feel that her work as a television performer should not prevent her from having opinions."

Britain's 2 New Links

London, July 7.

The two next commercial tv outlets in Britain are to go on the air within a space of 48 hours.

The first new link will be at Norwich on Oct. 29. Two days later—on the 31st—the Belfast transmitter will begin to beam.

Leon Goldstein Exits WMCA After 25 Years, To Set Up Own Shop

Leon Goldstein, veep in charge of puffairs for WMCA, N.Y., is leaving the indie after nearly a quarter of a century to form his own company as radio consultant and to apply to the FCC for a construction permit for an upstate AM daytime operation and FM fulltime outlet. Goldstein quits July 15.

Goldstein is leaving the Nathan Straus operation under most amicable circumstances with an upcoming long term pact in his pocket as counsellor on pubaffairs. He figures that it will take approximately 12 months before any FCC approval may be granted and during that period will make his services available on a consultant basis.

During his tenure at WMCA, Goldstein went through numerous management changes. He has worked successively for Donald Flamm, Edward J. Noble and more recently Straus. He began as director of publicity and subsequently was made director of news and special events, veep in charge of pub-relations, veep in charge of programs, and lastly pubaffairs veep.

Goldstein's ankling comes on top of station changes which saw R. Peter Straus becoming prexy and his father stepping into the chairmanship. Stephen B. Labunski was upped to veep and general manager and Elizabeth M. Rogan named corporate secretary-treasurer. Station, as yet, has no replacement for Goldstein.

EQUAL TIME ISSUE SQUELCHED IN PENNA.

Harrisburg, July 7.

Headlines became firelines here this week when the Republicans demanded 35 minutes of tv time over a four-station hook-up to answer a talk made by Gov. David L. Lawrence on his tax program to the State Legislators.

What at first apeared to be a major rhubarb in the making was quickly squelched, however, when Den Wear, general manager of WTPA-TV here, originator of the Lawrence telecast, stepped in with a firm refusal of time to the GOP, stating the telecast was not political in nature, but was, in fact, a public service by the video industry in advising the populace of a proposed legislation which would effect each and every resident of the Keystone State.

Rep. W. Stuart Helm, chairman of the House Republican Policy Committee, had initiated the request for equal time, describing the telecast as political in nature. Wear's answer, made in a matter of hours, brought a quick conclusion to the matter, but left all broadcasters and television stations in the State with a warning of possible events to come in the political wars of 1960.

Canadian B'casting Corp. 'Tell All' On Sponsor Coin, Tax Subsidies

Ottawa, July 7.

Submitting grudgingly to government demands, the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. filed a 102-page document with the parliamentary committee on broadcasting, listing, for its commercial television stanzas, money paid by the sponsors and by the federal treasury. What is referred to unofficially as "taxpayer subsidies" of some CBC commercial shows range from $300 to $20,454. The corporation has always claimed that, because its chore as set out by the government is to produce shows on the public-owned web, it is actually saving money for the taxpayer who would, sans sponsors, have to stand the whole bite.

The high mark of $20,454 was paid by CBC for its "Cross-Canada Hit Parade" tv airer for which the sponsors, Imperial Tobacco and Texaco, only paid $9,678. "Showtime" cost Canadian General Electric $10,217, to which CBC added $14,551 from its federal coffers.

The list included shows aired last March, including a March 2 show, "General Motors Presents," costing $28,221 to produce of which $14,813 was paid by the bankroller, the rest by CBC. For a three-day stretch, "PM Party," an afternoon variety stanza, was sold to Mount Royal Rice for $1,990, of a total production cost of $15,013.

Other w.k. video programs cost the public:

Music Hall (Labatt Brewery), $12,683; Roland et Roberte (Noxzema), $75; Les Belles Histoires des Pays D'en Haut (Campbell Soup), $3,105; Je Vous Ai Tant Aime (Robin Hood Flour), $3,639; C'est La Vie (The Prudential Insurance Co.), $1,744; Car L'Amour (Lever Bros.), $884; La Famille Plouffe (Imperial Tobacco), $4,079; Pension Velder (Standard Brands), $2,641; Marie-Didace (Coca-Cola), $1,095; Rendez-Vous Avec Michelle (Colgate-Palmolive), $38; L'Heure des Quilles (Gattuso), $1,022; Front Page Challenge (Lever Bros.), $2,629; One of a Kind (Colgate, Adams), $3,262, Music Makers '59 (Chesebrough-Ponds, Sunbeam), $5,034; Talent Caravan (Rothmans, Standard Brands), $3,804; Country Hoedown (Procter & Gamble, H. F. Ritchie), $2,132; Saturday Date (Sterling Drugs, Javex), $721; Juliette (Imperial Tobacco), $237.

POLITICOS' OFF-THE-CUFF TV

It's Now Jack Paar Vs. Henry Morgan

Jack Paar took on Henry Morgan with a well-stocked blunderbuss last Wednesday (1) on the former's NBC-TV late hour show. Paar recounted that when Morgan first appeared on WNTA-TV he (Morgan) told columnists he was going to start "A Hate Jack Paar Club" and drive Paar off the air. Paar's reply was "That's fine and peachy for him and we'll check with the ratings you see after a while."

Paar said that Morgan was opposite him for some seven weeks and the ratings turned out to be "quite frightening to Mr. Morgan." Paar went on to say: "I have always called him Duplex Head. I have been watching for instance this Arbitron . . . On July 19, Mr. Morgan had a 1.0 against our 15.6. On the 9th and 12th he had a 3.2 against our 15.1. On June 5 he had 0.4. This means he owes 4 points against the 13.7 on May 29 and 0.3. Again he is in debt to a 16.2. He's moved the show out of the competition with our show and he is now in the 8 to 9 and of the seven shows in N.Y., Mr. Morgan ranked 7."

Paar then quoted John Crosby re similarity of their routines, adding that in Crosby's opinion, Paar would probably go further because of personality, something which Mr. Morgan lacked. "That's unkind, I think, because I think Mr. Morgan has a personality, "Paar said. "Unfortunately it shows through . . . and I think he has talent. Unfortunately it is not in demand but I think he has talent. And so we leave Mr. Morgan and say good night to you Henry Morgan wherever you are."

Is 'Court of Human Relations' In Keeping With That 'NBC Image'?

NBC-TV is reportedly staggering like an untouchable from the critical blows thrown at A. L. Alexander's "Court of Human Relations" which preemed several weeks ago in midafternoon time. Industry observers say they can't ever recall a program getting such lacerating notices from the press as did Alexander's opening program.

Two schools of thought apparently prevail at NBC as regards the fate of "Court of Human Relations." One group, that dealing with pubrelations and the moulding of an affectionate, highly regarded image of the web, feels that the program should be scrapped while the other group believes that ultimately the Alexander show will get into a more acceptable groove and that the masses rather than the critics will be the victors in the final analysis. Arbitron report on the show has been encouraging in view of previous program ratings against the opposition.

Alexander, busily extracting the poisonous barbs shot at him by tv critics, said this week that any critic who thinks of "Court of Human Relations" as entertainment is mistaken. He said he hadn't been too keen on opening the series with the kind of a case that he did offer but that NBC felt the program should get off with a bang. Alexander thought the opener was forthright and frank, perhaps much too frank for the preem but nevertheless decided to go along with network thinking. If he had to do it over again, he would present a more typical case, he said.

Alexander insisted that the calibre of mediators he has on the pro-

Canada Dry TV Specials Fizzle

Looks like the Canada Dry deal for 10 musical specials on NBC-TV next season may be dead. NBC says it won't take the formats proposed by the bankroller even though it wants the CD biz, which would have amounted to roughly $2,000,000 time-talent for next season.

Fizz bottler is understood to have desired a straight pop music format, fronted probably by Mitch Miller, but NBC "had something else in mind," according to one source. Some of the CD shows were being aimed at NBC's Friday hourlong special lineup, the rest for undetermined times during the season.

If the network and potential sponsor don't reach an agreement shortly on the content and accepability of the music shows, NBC has, in effect, walked off from a $2,000,000 sale.

BBC Gets More Coin

London, July 7.

Extra cash is to be allocated to the BBC from the money raised by television and sound radio licenses. Over a three-year agreement the state network has been receiving 87½% of the revenue, a total of $70,700,000. It is now to be upped by 5% which will bring the BBC an extra $4,620,000. The new arrangement is, at the moment, for one year only.

Where will the money go? In programs? Unlikely. Owing to rising costs the BBC has had to draw on its reserves for the past few years, and the Government handout is probably designed to arrest this necessity.

Jack Paar Tops 'Late Show'; U.S. Aud at 6,500,000

Fact that Jack Paar was able to best "The Late Show" on WCBS-TV, based on ARB local reports in June, has NBC-TV programmers in a state of elation. For a long time, it was well night impossible for Paar to buck "The Late Show" but evidently there's been a switch from watching old movies, albeit good ones, to gandering the antics of Paar and his guests.

Programmers at 30 Rock point out that when Paar took over the "Tonight" show in August, 1957, its total audience was in the vicinity of 3,000,000. Today, Paar is credited with some 6,500,000 viewers nightly. Moreover, NBC-TV is saying that New York is only one of many cities where the Paar show is currently the top-rated late night diversion.

Before Paar hit the WRCA-TV channel in 1957, the flagship station was being shellacked with a feeble 2.1 rating against a 9.7 for "The Late Show on WCBS-TV. Since Paar appeared on the scene ARB average Monday-through-Friday ratings have run something like this: June 19, 1958, WRCA-TV, 4.8 against 7.6 for WCBS-TV. However, the big change came last month when WRCA-TV came up with a booming 9.4 for Paar against a 9.0 for "The Late Show" on WCBS-TV, described as a video achievement at WRCA-TV.

WCBS-TV, on the other hand, is confident it will return to its former preeminent position with its strong lineup of film product. It cited Arbitron ratings for the Schaefer Award Theatre for Friday, June 26, when it had "Mr.

SCOTT & CLARK'S UNIQUE PATTERN

By JAY LEWIS

Washington, July 7.

Television is making strange bedfellows on Capitol Hill.

In a unique bipartisan collaboration, Pennsylvania's two Senators —Democrat Joseph Clark and Republican Hugh Scott—appear together every other week to thrash out domestic and world issues for the edification of their constituents.

Although the televised "report to the people" has become increasingly common on Capitol Hill, the Clark-Scott program stands out as the only one staged jointly by lawmakers of opposite parties.

Since March, when the Senators embarked on their video venture, the half-hour program has stirred acclaim and already is used by seven tv stations as well as 10 radio stations throughout the state. These include outlets in Pittsburgh, Harrisburg, Altoona, Johnstown and Philadelphia, where three tv stations show it on a rotating basis.

Audience and critic reaction so far has been highly favorable. There have been private grumbles from a few uncompormising partisans in both camps who apparently view the joint endeavor as a "cozy" arrangement to be shunned by true party gladiators.

Scott and Clark may call each other "Joe" and "Hugh" on the program, but don't pull any punches when in disagreement, of which there is no dearth. Both are articulate spokesmen for their respective party wings. Clark is a taut-spoken Democrat of the Humphrey-Douglas ilk and Scott, a "progressive" Republican of the Eastern variety.

Scott tells Clark he is a "wild-eyer spender," among other things, whereas Clark heaps strongly-worded criticism on the policies and actions of the Eisenhower administration and Scott's defense of them.

There are many advantages to the Scott-Clark type of program over the usual solo endeavors by other lawmakers. Listener appeal is obviously enhanced by the quality of face-to-face controversy. Furthermore, the burden of putting out the program is considerably lightened with two instead of one Senatorial staffs pitching in to make the arrangements. And the Senators themselves find it much less of a chore to appear in an off-the-cuff duel with a familiar adversary than going through the necessary preparation for a solo tv presentation.

In addition, station owners, conscious of the Communications Act's prescription of fair treatment of controversial public issues, naturally are less leery of a program featuring opposing viewpoints.

Scott and Clark have used varying formats for "Your Senators Report," Sometimes they simply stage an informal debate between themselves; or they have newsmen on to quiz them.

Recently, however, prominent guests have been featured. Among these have been Democratic National Chairman Paul M. Butler, his GOP counterpart Sen. Thurston Morton, Sen. George Aiken (R-

Patterson-Johansson's Whopping Brit. Audience

London, July 7.

BBC-TV's airing of the film of the Patterson-Johansson fight won viewers in 3,149,000 of those British homes able to get both BBC and commercial programs. Figure is given by Television Audience Measurement Ltd.

TAM further reports that for the previous four Sundays at the same time, 7.30-8 p.m., the average home viewing figure on BBC-TV was 672,000. The fight film was shown on June 28.

CBS, NBC Not Too Happy With ABC's Refusal to Join Forces On 'Total Repeal' in Equal Time Hassle

CBS and NBC, to say the very least, are dismayed by the stand ABC has adopted regarding legislative changes in Section 315 of the Communications Act.. They have intimated that ABC-TV failed in its obligation to the entire radio-tv industry by refusing to join them in a call for total repeal of the Act, thereby destroying the immediate opportunity for a consolidated industry front when a consolidated front is allegedly imperative.

ABC-TV wants Congress to stick, through legislative action, to a revocation of the recent Lar Daly decision made by the FCC. CBS and NBC want the Senate and House of Representatives to change the law so that not only news programs but debate, forum, "news interview" and probing public affairs programming are freed of the "equal time" fetters.

ABC has insisted that there is too much opposition to an immediate "general rewriting" of Section 315, and that any effort in behalf of a major overhaul will lead to a legislation bogdown in which not even the Lar Daly matter is satisfactorily resolved before the 1960 Presidential campaign.

CBS and NBC, as one exec said last week, after the hearings in Washington before the House Interstate & Foreign Commerce Committee, said that the FCC's handling of the Lar Daly issue was the perfect springboard from which the industry could apply for changes of an entire section of the law that has been long a sore on broadcasting's side. "The Daly matter helped us get up steam and it's no time to ease off now."

These various comments would suggest that ABC differs with CBS and NBC on legal strategy only, but the different approaches convey, more importantly, basic disparity in the philosophies and administration of NBC and CBS, on one side, and ABC, on the other.

Pubaffairs Obligation

CBS and NBC have always had a big stake in pubaffairs programming and that, it has been interpreted, is simply the reason why those two networks are hell bent for total repeal of 315. Conversely, ABC, the "poorer network," has

TVaricose Veins

Boston, July 7.

Watching tv can lead to varicose veins!

Dr. Paul Dudley White, famed Hub heart specialist, known as "Ike's" medico, says: "The automobile and the television set have prevented us from using our legs properly and this is conducive to varicose veins."

Chief hazards of a married man over 25 are his tv set, his automobile and his wife "who can cook too well," Dr. White told participants in B. U.'s Physical Fitness Institute. "The best way to prevent this leg trouble is to be active physically all one's life," he said.

Reinsch, TV Execs Assemble to 'Plot' Dems Convention

Los Angeles, July 7.

First detailed meeting on television coverage of the 1960 Democratic Convention among Demo execs, network news brass and execs of the new L. A. Sports Arena is set for tomorrow (Wed.) morning.

J. Leonard Reinsch, managing director of the Convention and exec director of the Cox radio & tv stations, arrived over the weekend. Already in or en route are key execs from the networks. Repping CBS are Sig Mickelson, CBS Inc., v.p. and general manager of CBS News; Elmer Lower, CBS News director of special projects, and Paul Levitan, special events director

Attending for NBC will be v.p. in charge of news Bill McAndrews, with local news director John Thompson aiding him. ABC delegation will be headed by special events boss Don Coe, with Coast execs Tom Velotta, Milt Fishman and Ted Grenier (engineering) aiding in the session. Sonny Diskin, who'll be ABC's director for most of the coverage, is also in.

Meeting will be devoted to detailed breakdowns on studio and camera allocations for each network, on the amount of construction of its own each web will be permitted, on choice of additional camera locations other than those built into the new Sports Arena, and other technical details of coverage. Moreover, though some of the execs saw the Arena while it was under construction, none have yet seen the completed structure.

Arena officially opened Saturday night. First televised event from the spot is set for tomorrow night, the ABC-TV "Wednesday Night Fights" pickup of the Halimi-Becerra bantamweight title bout.

DEL VALLE IN MEXICO TO DEVELOP SERIES

Hollywood, July 7.

Jaime del Valle, for five years producer of "The Lineup" for CBS-TV, is now in Mexico City developing a series based upon activities of the Mexican federal police for the network. Key facet of the series will be location filming in Mexico City and other colorful Mexican backgrounds, in the same manner del Valle used on "Lineup" in San Francisco.

Producer was recently taken off Lineup" to devote his time to the new series. He was replaced as producer of the new hourlong "Lineup" version by Frank LaTourette.

5-Month TV Web Biz $260,761,205

Network television gross time billings hit $260,761,205 for the first five months of 1959, a 9% rise over the same five months of last year. ABC, CBS and NBC during this past May collectively sold better than $50,000,000 worth of airtime for the third month in a row.

Compilation of tv time sales by Television Bureau of Advertising lists the ABC-TV five-month figure at $52,230,215, an 18.7% rise over 1958; CBS-TV at $110,759,141, a 6.2%, rise, and NBC-TV at $97,509,662, a 7.4% rise.

Winston, Bristol-Myers In Tradeoff on Shows

Instead of sponsoring all of "I've Got A Secret," as it has for the past few years on CBS-TV, Winston ciggies is relinquishing half sponsorship of the 30-minute panel stanza to Bristol-Myers. And Bristol-Myers, instead of sponsoring all of "Peter Gunn" on NBC-TV, as it did last season, is giving up half-sponsorship of the detective film to Winston.

Tradeoff by the pair of bankrollers was designed to give each of them a two-network spread.

65% of All TV Com'ls Will Be On Tape in '60, Sez McMahan —On Other Ad Agency Fronts

Agency consultant Harry McMahan predicts that 65% of 1960's tv commercials will be on tape.

It's the view of a veteran film man who has made a depth study of the new technique. McMahan headed his own film company, Five Star Productions, Hollywood, for 15 years. He's been on the plans boards of McCann-Erickson and Leo Burnett, Chicago. With Burnett he supervised live and film commercials on more than $240,000,000 in tv billing.

In a book he's preparing for October publication, "Tv Tape Commercials—New Techniques of Creating and Producing Television Advertising" (Hastings House), McMahan says, "film of course will not disappear from the field but its most significant use may well be as a component of the tape commercial . . . In the transition, certain obstacles will slow progress."

In agencies, he says, the basic problem is the copywriter. "The industry's commercial writers often have been too highly specialized. In many agencies they have been departmentalized into rival camps. Specialists in live. Specialists in film. On the production end, a similar jealousy has been fostered since the very beginnings of tv."

Live writers and producers (for whom the transition to tape is a natural) still need to study film's production values and story-telling techniques, he says. Dimensional lighting, composition, editing transitions all can be studied for adaption to tape work.

"And the film contingent must open their minds as much—or more—and literally unlearn some past procedures to keep pace. Live's traditional spontaneity, speed and electronic matting tricks offer much to be desired in this new type of commercial. The tv camera's depth of focus, too, simplifies a film problem."

But once the human element is licked, McMahan sees the new "instant film" really taking over. The book cites many successful pioneer tape commercial efforts. BBDO for U. S. Steel made a three-minute spot with six cars and a flock of models on a Tuesday for the next night's "U. S. Steel Hour." It was made in sequences, then put together with six splices. All were perfect. Cost: $6,500. On the local scene, KTTV Los Angeles and Barker Bros. department store made 23 commercials in a five-hour session in actual store settings. The six minutes of color commercials for Chrysler on "An Evening with Fred Astaire" cost $56,000. They were taped by Leo Burnett and featured a cast of 50 and a 26-piece band.

First real tape commercial success, says McMahan, was credited to Hooper White of Earle Ludgin who pre-recorded eight and a half minutes in 12 hours (against the four days it would have taken for filming) for Easy Washer's sponsorship of the Pebble Beach Golf Tourney.

"VARIETY reviewed the commercials as 'live,' unaware this part of the telecast had been pretaped!"

Jingle Music Appreciation

N.Y. admen are getting a free course in music appreciation—jingle music, that is.

Music Makers, commercial music firm, is making the rounds of agencies with a one-hour institutional pitch on film and tape. Prexy Mitch Leigh and veep Herman Edel give a commentary that includes an explanation of commercial music and a rundown on how sound and instruments are applied to spots and jingles.

Agencies on the roster include Ogilvy, Benson & Mather, Warwick & Legler, Cunningham & Walsh, Doherty, Clifford, Steers & Shenfield. Music team hopes to visit 20 agencies by year's end.

Switches: Paul E. Newman, who joined MacManus, John & Adams, Bloomfield Hills, Mich., a year ago, exits to return to N.Y. He was here previously with the Kudner agency. He'll shortly announce a new agency affiliation.

Michael Hicks is new managing director of BBDO in Canada. He resigns account super post at MacLaren Advertising and will headquarter in Toronto. Leslie F. Chitty, BBDO's former Canadian director, will now act as liaison between agency's Canadian and U.S. offices.

Harry B. Bressler, formerly with Doherty, Clifford, Steers & Shenfield, joins Ted Bates as a veep and creative supervisor.

Barry Loughrane joins Doyle Dane Bernbach as an account exec. He was director of advertising and sales promotion for Hathaway shirts and was an account man at Ogilvy, Benson & Mather.

Dwight S. Reed and Frank E. Pellegrin, two of the founding partners of H-R Representatives, become exec veeps by action of the board of directors. Reed HQ is in Chicago, Pellegrin in N.Y. Same time, Miss Avery Gibson, formerly research director, gets new post of vice president; Don Softness is named director of promotion and publicity and Martin Goldberg director of research.

Moving: Parkson agency's tv topper Don Blauhut leaves this week for Los Angeles to set up a branch office. He'll be on the Coast for from six months to a year, what with four Parkson night time shows for fall in production there . . . H-R Representatives will triple space in move of San Francisco office to Jerome Bldg., 321 Bush St. . . . Russell Birdwell opens new p.r. HQ at 680 Fifth Ave. He'll direct activities of former Beverly Hills home office from N.Y.

Chi Agencies

Chicago, July 7.

Lots of veepees dubbed here last week, four at J. Walter Thompson and four at Leo Burnett. Latter made stripers of Dr. Seymour Banks, section manager in both the media and research depts.; Herman A. Bizzell, account supervisor; Peter Frantz, marketing supervisor; and Philp M. Schacherer, associate copy director. JWT upgraded John L. Van Zant, p.r. director, and three account reps, G. Matthews Baxter, Paul Lehner and Thomas J. O'Connell.

Burnett, in a move to strengthen its personnel resources, added to its staff Otis L. Wiese, longtime editor and publisher of McCall's Magazine, as a member of the creative review committee, and brought back into the fold L. F. (Fritz) Ohliger, as v.p. and marketing supervisor. Ohliger had left the agency in 1956 to work for the Fitzgerald agency in New Orleans on the Wesson Oil account.

Hertz Corp. dropped Campbell-Ewald after a 32-year relationship and will decide, possibly this week, on one of five agencies for its Rent-A-Car account. Estimated billings are $4,500,000 annually.

Marvin Frank, prez of the Chi branch of W. B. Doner Advertising, wrote the lyrics and music for the Z. Frank cartoon commercial that won a award at the Cannes Film Festival.

Mort Small, ex-Henri, Hurst & MacDonald, joined Mercury Records as Advertising Manager, reporting to Kenny Myers, director of advertising and promotion.

John W. Shaw agency will open a west coast office with Jack Schulter as manager.

Edward H. Weiss agency upped Bernard J. Gross to exec viceprez, Lee King to senior v.p., and Irving Auspitz to vice chairman.

London Agencies

London, July 7.

Ad agencies here are currently fighting problems raised by the print dispute. Production of posters, showcards, display material, packaging and stationery has at the least slowed down and in some cases stopped. They're facing a dilemma common to many: trying not to upset their relations with labor but at the same time aiming to give the best service to clients. TV looks more and more like getting a bigger bite of the cherry in the revised schedules.

In the year's first quarter, some $3,350,000 was spent on the tv advertising of household soaps and detergents, while over $904,000 was additionally spent on toilet soaps.

Segal's KOBY $1,750,000 Sale; Frisco's Top Deal

San Francisco, July 7.

Biggest radio real in Frisco history was consummated late last week when David Segal sold his KOBY to Kenyon Brown & Associates' KCOP-TV, Los Angeles, for $1,750,000.

At almost the same time, Segal unloaded his KOSI, Denver, to Bill Armstrong, ex-vice-president in charge of Balaban interests' broadcasting, for $387,000.

Both sales are subject to FCC okay.

Though KCOP is nominal purchaser, according to Segal, it's believed that much of the capital for the KOBY buy will come via Brown's syndicate, which includes Bing Crosby and the NAFI Corp. Syndicate bought KPTV, Portland, for $3,750,000 only last month.

NAFI is an oldtime auto fabrics manufacturer, formerly headquartered in Oakland, Cal., on eastern shore of Frisco Bay. Its headquarters is now in Detroit. Its management was reorganized about a year and a half ago and, according to its own statement to stockholders, company is aiming for capital diversification because of instability of the auto business. NAFI has lost money in three of the last six years on business volumes in the $20,000,000 to $40,000,000 neighborhood and has a tax loss of a couple million dollars to carry forward.

For Segal, who says "I started out in radio in 1946 with $9,000 I borrowed," the KOBY sale was especially satisfying.

He purchased KOBY, then known as KEAR and operating on a "good music" policy, from S. A. Cisler three years ago for $467,500 on a 10-year note. The station was nearly broke and faced a NABET strike which took place in October, 1956, as soon as Segal took over.

Strike lasted until end of December, 1956, and Segal started 1957 with almost no business on the independent station. However, he adopted a gimmick-laden, r&r formula and says the station is now grossing "more than $1,000,000 a year."

Included in the $1,750,000 is $300,000 which Segal still owes on his note to Cisler.

In first 18 months after his takeover, Segal ran KOBY ratings to number one, but station subsequently yielded first position to Golden West's KSFO, and is nose-and-nose with two or three other strong outlets, including the networks'.

SYNDICATORS: 'HELP, HELP!'

'Stations Itch for New Ideas'

Chicago, July 7.

A one-man syndicated sales force who in the past six weeks combed 35,000 miles' worth of stations in the U.S., returned to his home base with the clear impression that local operators itch for new ideas in television, and get excited by them, while network nabobs and admen shrink from them. This very difference, he believes, along with the advances in video tape recording, will bring about a renaissance of creativity at the local level which will serve to revitalize the medium in general.

Max Cooper, head of a Chicago p.r. firm who decided to turn tv entrepreneur this season with a scheme to tape record winter baseball in the Cuban leagues, said he found station managers so willing to listen to his pitch that he was able to make his rounds at the rate of four a day, while, by contrast, it sometimes took him four days to get an appointment at one network or one ad agency.

"A fellow with a fresh idea and a pilot is wasting his time at the networks. They're either too busy to consider anything new or too afraid to stick their necks out. No one at that level wants to take the rap for a flop, however imaginative it might be."

Cooper believes tape and the paralysis of network imagination will bring about the early days of television, when creative people in the provinces put ideas to work that were later borrowed or bought by the webs. He sees VTR as the instrument that will give back the local station its dignity, enabling it to produce or buy fresh shows for television of approximately network quality.

Rank Org's War at Sea Footage May Spark a Flock of Series

London, July 7.

The Rank Organization's new vidpix venture, involving a trial 13 half-hour yarns on the war (World War II) at sea, may spark off a whole program of companion skeins utilizing newsreel library footage as basis. Size of the operation will, in fact, be governed by the interest that can be whipped up among the commercial networks here and in markets overseas, including the U.S.

Announcement of the war at sea project, as yet given no skein title, was made with the added info that the Admiralty had promised full assistance, that Capt. Jack Broom, RN, would be scriptwriter and technical adviser, and that the series was expected to be ready for the networks in the fall. First script was skedded to be submitted last week and production was expected to start at Denham Laboratories as soon after as possible.

According to F. L. Thomas, Rank Film Distributors topper, there's plenty of material in hand to round out 39 of the sea-war subjects, some possibly taking in the Korean conflict as well as Hitler's war. Thomas aims to fly to the U.S. within a month with a pilot to see what gives with the networks there, though it's anticipated that the pix would pay off handsomely even without the American market via home and colonial playdates.

Thomas personally plans to handle the initial sales moves, but reckons that a new sales setup may be called for if the venture clicks as anticipated. He points out that, with no newsreel being made for theatrical distribution and with years of footage in the vaults, the Rank outfit ought to be able to turn out many tv skeins on many subjects almost, as it were, from stock.

The making of these from-the-vaults tv compilations is an operation completely distinct from Rank's other vidpix ventures at Pinewood Studios

Alka Seltzer In 'Manhunt' Spread

Following the upper New York State regional by Genesee Beer, Screen Gems has lined up another large regional deal for its latest syndicated series, "Manhunt." Alka Seltzer has bought the Victor Jory-fronted half-hour in most West Coast markets.

Alka Seltzer began its dickers with only two markets in mind, yet, at the moment, it's understood that the bankroller is on the verge of signing for no less than 15 California, Oregon and Washington markets. Besides the Genesee buy, another regional beer sale is brewing for "Manhunt," but SG won't disclose the advertiser's name until the deal is technically closed.

GENE BARRY & ZIV SETTLE DIFFERENCES

Hollywood, July 7.

Gene ("Bat Masterson") Barry and Ziv Television last week settled the contractual differences which have kept the actor off the "Masterson" set for more than two weeks. Though terms of the settlement weren't disclosed, it's reported that Barry's new company, Barbety Enterprises, has been guaranteed a minimum number of pilots it will produce for Ziv.

Barry, currently in Calgary as Grand Marshall of the Stampede and Exhibition, returns to work July 13 to resume next season's "Masterson" output. He walked off the set a couple of weeks ago, precipitating major negotiating sessions between Nat Goldstone (Goldstone-Tobias agency) and Ziv. Latter's Frank Reel came in from New York to achieve a settlement.

Foreign Markets Step Up Campaign To Ban TV Oldies

Some of the most lucrative foreign tv markets for features are being hit either by local film industry plans to keep oldies off tv, or the threat of sanctions from exhibitors.

The broad outlines of Britain's Film Industry Defense Organization has been copied in West Germany. FIDO in Britain buys up the tv rights to features in order to keep the cinematics from the tv screens. In Germany, which also is a major market, a similar plan is being pushed for adoption. Underwriting both plans are various segments of the theatrical motion picture industry in the respective countries.

Also acting as a brake is the threat of exhibitor sanctions against any American distributor

39 'Counterthrust' Segs Set for ABC Films Sked

Hollywood, July 7.

ABC Films has skedded "Counterthrust" for filming in Manila later this year and inked Tod Andrews to star in 39 segments.

Vic Whitlock, former story editor with Ralph Edwards and Warner Bros. TV, has been signed as story ed of ABC-TV, and will write 10 of the "Counterthrust" episodes.

NO TRADE ORG TO COMBAT REBUFFS

Syndication is being buffeted from many sides today, taking it on the chin in many situations, without having an effective, overall arm to fight back. The lack of a trade organization has hobbled the biz in the domestic and foreign fields.

Item: Japan has placed a ceiling of $300 per half-hour episode for all American telefilm imports. The price is unrealistically low compared to the number of sets in Japan and Japan's relative good economy. Nothing is being done about it, because there isn't a trade organization around to negotiate for higher pix prices with the Japanese government.

Item: Many local and regional advertisers are buying spots, as opposed to program purchases of syndicated shows. Yet, there isn't a syndication trade organization similar to a Television Bureau of Advertising to supply the qualitative data and other ammunition to oppose that trend. There is some data from some houses, but nothing comparable to the campaigns waged by TVB or Radio Advertising Bureau.

Item: Networks have bit into the 7 to 7:30 (EDT) and 10:30 to 11 p.m. (EDT) time periods quite heavily next season. (Syndicators have a vague hope that the Federal Communications Commission will adopt the proposal to slice network option time, but decline openly to express their anger on the local option time encroachment).

It's impossible to put a dollar figure on what it costs syndicators yearly for their failure to have a trade organization, but many execs acknowledge that the cost is higher than what would be needed to underwrite an organization. If that is so, why no trade organization?

Reasons form mainly along two lines: One, syndication is highly competitive and one syndicator doesn't want to trade information or function cooperatively with another syndicator. Two, some syndication houses are subsids of networks, Screen Gems is a subsid of Columbia Pictures, while others are indies. Then these problems are compounded by the fact that syndicators sell both to the networks and the market-by-market field, so they don't want openly at this late date to take any public swipe at the webs.

Then there is the problem of financing a trade organization. The larger houses don't want to ante up the bill only to have the nonparticipating smaller houses profit from the work of a trade outfit.

Bloom Off Features? MCA-TV Study On Par Pix Shows Differently

Who says the bloom is off the feature rose? The comparative lack of excitement about cinematics to tv appears to be more due to the pix distribution famine than to the ratings.

Some of the rating excitement is reflected in a MCA TV survey on the Paramount pix. Sampling seven of the 15 markets which have begun telecasting Paramount cinematics to date, MCA TV found that in every case the station showing the Paramount pix rose to a leading position in the market.

Analysis measures ARB share-of-audience reports covering Minneapolis, Denver, Milwaukee, Omaha, Philadelphia, Seattle and Boston. In each case, average share of audience for an entire month of Par pix programming was compared with audience measurements for the preceding rating periods, of non-Par pix.

WITI-TV, Milwaukee, scheduled Paramount features every night but one for the period April 10 to May 7, beginning at 10:15 p.m. (10 p.m. on Saturdays). The ARB rating figures for the February-March period, before the Paramount pix debut, showed a Monday-to-Friday 10 p.m. to midnight average share for WITI-TV of 10.3. With the Par pix, WITI-TV grew to 39.4 for the April 10 to May 7 period.

During the same rating period (April-May), station KBTV, Denver, showed a similar rise in share of sets-in-use with Paramount programming, Monday - thru - Friday, with Paramount programming. The rating periods for other cities occurred earlier in the year, but in each case, comparing the non-Par pix period, with the period including that cinematic label, there were share-of-audience rises.

43% of Stations Devote 10-20 Hours Weekly to Feature Pix

NTA's Shift to Coast

Major execs of National Telefilm Associates, along with their respective departments, are moving their headquarters to the Coast. Move is part of NTA's consolidation with National Theatres, which acquired NTA recently.

Coast headquarters will be a new building along Wilshire Boulevard, Beverly Hills, which will be shared by National Theatres and NTA. Theatre circuit will move from its present downtown Los Angeles quarters to the new site.

Remaining in the East will be the program sales department, headed by Michael Sillerman; Ted Cott's o&o department, NTA Pictures, and the Telestudios operation. With some minor exceptions, all other departments will move to the Coast. Switch is expected to take place by September.

In one of the most comprehensive studies of feature film use, National Telefilm Asscciates found that 43% of all stations throughout the country devote from 10 to 20 hours weekly to cinematic telecasting.

The findings were based on responses from 300 stations, or 54.2% of the country's 554 stations. The survey comes at a time when the fresh pix pool has sharply dwindled on the distribution level, and again points up the question of possible substitute programming.

A sharp difference in cinematic use between indies and network affils was brought out by the survey. Indie stations, of which 17 participated in the study, average 21 feature film telecasts each week for an average time total of 36 hours weekly or 38.3 of their total telecasting hours. Affiliated stations, on the other hand, average nine feature films a week for an average weekly hour total of 15, or 13.7 of their total weekly hours on the air.

As the number of stations in a market increase, so does the use of feature films. Los Angeles and New York stations devote 30.2 and 26.8 of their total air time, respectively, to feature films. Detroit, Phoenix and Washington, each four station markets, devote 18.7, 19.4 and 20.3% of total air time, respectively, to features.

The greatest number of stations responding to the survey questionnnaire telecast from six to 10 features weekly. Total cinematics used, however, ranged as high as 45 films weekly in some instances.

Part of the survey grouped stations according to whether they telecast one to five features a week, six to ten, 11 to 15 and so on through multiples of five up to 26 to 30 films per week.

These are the results:

106 stations, or 35.3% of the total responding, used from 6 to 10 features weekly; 67 stations, or 22.3% used from one to five weekly; 61 stations, or 20.3%, used from 11 to 15 pix; 30 stations, or 10%, from 16 to 20 features; 20 stations, 21 to 25 features; eight stations, from 26 to 30; three stations, from 31 to 45, and five stations reported that they didn't use features at all.

Desilu Earnings Show 170% Hike; $20,470,361 Gross

Hollywood, July 7.

Desilu Productions Inc. reported a net income of $249,566 on gross income of $20,470,361 for the fiscal year ended May 2. Report to stockholders was the company's first since becoming publicly owned.

The $249,566 net represents a 170% increase over the $92,336 net for the previosu fiscal year. Per share earnings camee to 22c on 1,150,000 shares, contrasted with 10c per share in the 1958 period on 90,000 sharess outstanding.

Desilu has paid two quarterly dividends of 15c per share on 584,000 shares of common stock this year, and anticipates this dividend level will be maintained. No dividends were paid on the 565,000 shares of Class B stock owned by Desi Arnaz and Lucille Ball, which comprises 49% of the total stock outstanding.

The 170% increase in earnings accompanied a 35.6% increase in gross income over the previous year. Gross at that time, $15,094,806, exceeded the 1957 gross of $12,166,341 by 24%. In 1956, repore reveals, Desilu grossed $9,-

Vidkid Shows Are 'Reexamined'

Possible kiddie programming in syndication is being re-examined closely in the wake of a number of developments.

1. Independent Television Corp. has had quite a success with "Ding Dong School," placing the stripped show in over 65 markets and getting half of the available spots sold to national advertisers.

2. Cartoons on the whole are readily sold.

3. Many local stations throughout the country have the 5 p.m. to 7 p.m. slot to fill, the ideal period for kiddie shows. The network bite into the 7:30 to 8 p.m. (EDT) and 10:30 to 11 p.m. periods in no way affects the time slots usually devoted to children programming.

It's known that CBS Films and a number of other syndicators who once took a standoffish attitude on kiddie fare now are reexamining that attitude.

CBS Films Moves Hqs.

CBS Films will be moving its offices from 54th and Madison to 51st and Madison, in the building adjoining CBS headquarters.

Switchover will take place in another couple of months. New space for the CBS subsid is three times the present facilities.

Syndication Seen As the Answer To Pay-TV Proponents

By BRUCE EELLS

(Exec V.P., United Artists Television)

United Artists Television is excited about that irrepressible, growing giant: Syndication.

Like the power of prayer, syndication has always been surprising: yet the seeming miracles of syndicated programs have been quitely working themselves since the advent of sound recording. It's no surprise to some of us that syndication is growing to giant proportions with first class citizenship application pending.

In early 1939 a chain of Los Angeles shoe stores was saved from bankruptcy by the desperation expenditure of $100 per week for a syndicated radio program. Since I made the sale to the shoe chain I am intimately familiar with, and still awed by, the results. They are significant even today — 20 years later. The $100 brought the shoe people a transcribed program which had cost $10,000 per episode to produce. A lot of money for a radio program in those days.

The weekly audience commanded by the program increased the sales volume of the 11 shoe stores by 38% within nine weeks. The local sponsor was able, for the first time, to utilize the then-magic impact of radio on a basis of quality competitive with that of network sponsors. Everybody benefited, including the program's producer-distributor, because his aggregate of similar sales throughout the United States, Canada, and foreign countries, returned to him all his production and sales costs plus a profit.

Soon afterward I conducted a similar experiment for a national advertiser, Borden's, in three troublesome markets. The results were equally impressive.

In the years since, with the advent of television and the preponderance of programming recorded and perpetuated on film, "shared underwriting" — syndication — has begun to assume its inevitably massive form. With the bulk of even network programs on film, and sponsorship of the majority of these shared by two or more compatible advertisers, the principle of cooperative program cost underwriting is totally asserted.

Altogether, network, national spot, regional and local sponsor demand for filmed programming has already grown to approximately 9,000 hours per year. This does not count old theatrical film sold to television, which will soon have to be replaced by telefilm.

Equated to the motion picture industry, a startling and significant comparison is made. At its very peak of production volume, the entire motion picture industry never aggregated in excess of 800 hours of theatrical film per year.

Now, from Eric Johnston, comes the report that even the reduced output of the motion picture industry is seen by "a third of a billion people every week, throughout the world." Of further significance, Mr. Johnston adds that 75% of this enormous weekly theatrical audience is in countries outside the United States and that their appetite for American film is tremendous.

At United Artists our analysis of these facts had led to important conclusions and major policy decisions. We realize that in countries outside the U.S. television has not scratched the surface, that those countries are five years behind the U.S. in installation of television station; that most of Johnston's "third of a billion weekly theatregoers" don't have television receivers in their homes; and that when they do catch up in a few years, demand for American telefilm should jump from its present 9,000 hour annual volume to conservatively 25,000 hours of production per year. A volume 26 times greater than the annual output of all Hollywood studios combined when the motion picture industry was at its peak.

'Pay-TV? Who Needs It?

Inherent in assured volume in any industry is security of investment. And inherent in these combined is the guarantee of quality of product, of the ultimate in entertainment value. Values some have said could be achieved only by Pay-TV.

In the light of such an analysis, a pretty good question vis-a-vis Pay-TV might well be — "Who needs it?"

But in any event, we at United Artists have placed our chips on 1) the inevitability of a large world market for television film, sponsored cooperatively on a selective market basis by large and small business alike, and 2) the security and profit inherent in quality.

Our procedure to date, based upon these convictions, has included firm 39-episode commitments, in advance of sale, for five half-hour seriees: "The Troubleshooters," with Keenan Wynn and Bob Mathias; "The Dennis O'Keefe Show"; "Hudson's Bay," with Barry Nelson; "Tales of the Vikings," with Jerome Courtland; and "Miami Undercover," with Lee Bowman and Rocky Graziano.

To the extent that volume enhances budget, and budget affects artistry—I predict that the entertainment values of all commercial television will be taken to a most satisfactory new high level by that stepchild heretofore loosely referred to as—SYNDICATION.

THE FUTURE OF FEATURES ON TV

(A Symposium)

By JEROME HYAMS

(V. P. In Charge of Syndication, Screen Gems)

To corrupt a quote from Mark Twain, the reports of the end of feature film distribution have all been premature. At least so far as Screen Gems is concerned. Since we always intended to be in the tv film distribution business on a permanent basis, we have never attempted to liquidate our features.

While stations were simultaneously lured and pressured into longterm library deals, we've been quietly assuring them we'd be back with more. Since the release of our original group of features in January, 1956, we've been back eight times with groups ranging from 20 to 112 pictures. Hence, we still have over 400 Columbia and Universal features untapped. And, what's more, we're now back selling the reruns of features we originally released in 1956.

This is not as glamorous as the longterm library deals. But it's much more steady, for us as well as the stations.

Now, in view of the industry-induced shortage, we've begun an even more conservative policy. We will henceforth release new features only in those markets, and only at such times as the stations demand it. We will no longer put fresh features up for broadside sale. Future releases will be tailored to the supply-and-demand situation of each individual market.

By RICHARD HARPER

(Director of Syndicated and Feature Sales, MGM-TV)

Every week we hear that a new record price has been paid for the television rights to an old feature film. It's no secret that first-run tv rights to old feature films are continuing to skyrocket. And the inevitable question arises—are upward spiraling tv feature prices getting out of control? Are features, which have long been the most economical type of "volume programming" that a station could acquire, beginning to lose their bargain values?

To this, I can only answer with a resounding—NO!

I remember three years ago when we first began signing multi-million dollar contracts for the MGM features with tv stations in the key markets. There were many cynics who declared that those stations which were foolish enough to pay there kind of prices, would never get their investment back, even with seven years in which to play the films.

But hindsight is better than foresight, and now experience has shown these cynics how wrong they were. Of course, the acquisition of the major studios' top film libraries cost the tv stations a lot more than they had been accustomed to paying for inferior product.

But the arrival of better film product on television brought a bright new era to the programming of those stations which were foresighted enough to make the necessary investment. Bigger audiences were attracted to feature films than ever before . . . and literally tens of millions of dollars in new tv spot revenue was attracted by these ratings. Stations that once counted themselves fortunate if they were able to sell five commercials in a feature, now began crowding a dozen or more spots into a 90-minute late show.

And the remarkable thing about the major studios' really fine pictures (and a fact that we suspected at the time, but could not prove) was that they had in a way become "classics"—which meant that they got big audience ratings on their second and third runs, as well as the first time they were programmed. In fact, they often got bigger ratings in their reruns than they had received the first time, thanks to the wonderful word of mouth advertising generated by those who had seen the first run, and told their friends.

Bargain Prices

Those stations which leased MGM features several years ago, now realize that as high as they thought our prices were at the time, in terms of the additional spot revenue they have generated (and by all indications will continue to generate for the full seven-year length of their license period) they actually got the sort of bargain that comes along but once in a decade.

The proof of this is that these same stations are now paying even higher prices for product just being released to tv, and still feel they're getting more than their money's worth.

From the tv station standpoint, feature films offer a number of built-in plus factors: (1) they run an average of 90 minutes in length; three times more than most other film programming; (2) they accommodate 12 or more one-minute commercials; four times as many as conventional half-hour programming; and (3) they have tremendous residual playing value, picking up new audiences with every rerun.

No, indeed, when you consider all the factors, features are not too expensive. They've well earned the right to every penny of their cost by delivering more program time per dollar invested . . . greater rerun value . . . and bigger audiences . . . the kind that attract the big bluechip ad spenders.

With the last of the big major studio libraries now gone, and no new large reservoirs in sight, prices can be expected to stay at present levels indefinitely. And it is quite possible that even today the peak has not been reached. Yet, as high as feature prices may be, stations that know how to program and sell them will tell you: they're still among the biggest bargains in television programming material today!

By FRANK J. SHAKESPEARE JR.

(General Manager, WCBS-TV)

There has been much speculation on the prospect of depletion in the feature film market.

Television is such a gross consumer of films that to any dispassionate observer it would seem patent the market would be depleted of full-length feature films at some time in the near future. Naturally, since there is such a vision, the question is addressed to WCBS-TV, widely recognized as the touchstone for the television industry in feature film programming.

Channel 2 in New York has the finest library of feature films in the country. It always has had. In an eight-year period, from the time "The Late Show" made its debut, WCBS-TV has shown over 1,600 different feature films, played on an average of five times each, with about six months separating play dates. The station currently telecasts 24 film shows weekly. These shows are consistently the toprated programs in their time period and more often than not are commercially sold out. So our interest in the question of product depletion is, to put it mildly, intense.

Yet, despite the terrific rate of consumption, WCBS-TV still has over 1,000 films that have never been shown in the New York metropolitan area. These pictures include some of the finest ever made . . . many from the MGM and Paramount star-studded libraries. And this total predates the general release to television of the post-1948 Hollywood product. To say, on the basis of these facts, that the supply is running out, is to be entirely premature. There are enough available films to keep running (happily for audience, sponsors, and station) for at least a decade.

The station has followed an historic policy of selling feature films to participating minute advertisers . . . scheduling two one-minute announcements back to back at about 20-minute intervals . . . for a total of 12 per film. This is less than permissible under the NAB Code but, we feel, is consistent with high programming values.

Schaefer 'Specs'

Recently a slight sales variation was introduced with Schaefer Beer fully sponsoring four big motion-picture "spectaculars" per year. The first of these . . . "It Happened One Night" with Clark Gable and Claudette Colbert . . . premiered at 11:15 p.m. on Saturday, May 23. Schaefer used only four 75-second commercials during the entire two-hour program. It drew substantial and highly laudatory audience mail. It won a 70% share of audience and a 22 rating (Arbitron and Trendex) thus becoming the top-rated program in New York all night, beating such stellar network attractions as "Gunsmoke" and "Perry Como." This result was particularly outstanding since WRCA-TV counter-punched against the Schaefer show by premiering one of its own very best pictures in direct competition . . . Clark Gable and Loretta Young in "Call of The Wild." But to no avail. It did no better than a 7 rating and 20% audience share. The station believes this extraordinary result illustrates the habit engrained in the New York audience through many years of film programming of automatically associating Channel 2 with top motion pictures.

We feel that in order to properly program feature films, tv stations must invest in a substantial and varied library of quality product. Films need to be varied in appeal . . . action, adventure, musical, drama, historical, comedy . . . and a library must be large enough to allow a sufficient resting period between play dates. It is a mistake to go into feature film programming with a limited schedule and a limited library.

WCBS-TV believes in feature films has achieved great success with feature films . . . and has every intention of continuing with features as a basic part of its local programming in the foreseeable years ahead.

A 'Live TV' Giant Gets Its Feet Wet In Telefilm Arena

By BUD AUSTIN

(V.P. in Charge of Sales, Goodson-Todman)

The fact that the two pilot films we produced this year were sold immediately seemed to have created a good deal of conversation. To packagers, producers and distributors of television films what we accomplished seems to rank with the discovery of the Comstock Lode. While the facts are certainly impressive, the impression is not completely accurate. For the past few years we have carried on an expensive flirtation with Hollywood, courting film success with large sums of money and hogsheads of creative sweat. Our investments included the purchase of many scripts that never justified their story outlines, the hiring of production of several well intended but poorly conceived pilot films.

One of our well kept secrets has been a closetful of stillborn pilots which we have never screened for outsiders. Incidentally, this is a practice which we have retained from our live packaging activities. Often we spend many months in creative research, run throughs, etc., before we decide whether or not we believe a particular format has the potentials which will make it a hit. Those that do not come up to this standard are abandoned.

Now that we have served our apprenticeship in films, we are examining the comparative opportunities for profit in live and filmed packages—and while the results are certainly not conclusive, we are beginning to question the generally accepted concept that film packages with their residual values are necessarily more lucrative.

In most cases, the film packager who finds himself with a first run profit is a very fortunate fellow.

The Gang's All Here & There

By SAM GANG

(International Sales Director, Bernard L. Schubert Inc.)

Tokyo.

Television is considered one of prosperous Japan's strongest growth industries. There now are 34 commercial stations in operation, with seven more expected to be telecasting by the year's end. Ten percent of the $296 million allotted by Japanese firms for advertising in all media last year went to tv. In seven years the new medium should capture 20% of the nation's total ad outlay.

Technically, Japanese tv is top flight, with the finest equipment utilized, and tape and color rapidly being introduced. American standard of 525 lines is employed for transmission.

Programming is excellent, with an exceptionally high level of locally-produced live shows. U.S.-made syndicated films are extremely popular, topped ratingwise only by the Sumo wrestling tourneys.

Despite the rosy scene described above, let me put it on the record that it is absolutely ridiculous for an American video film distributor to maintain an office in Japan. An agent is very essential, however.

For although Nipponese viewers love Yank shows—their average rating is over 50%—the Japanese Government has established a quota and price ceiling for foreign films.

Thus an American film company can get no more than $300 per half-hour show; $600 per feature film.

On the other hand, Japanese telepix produced at a fraction of the cost of U.S. films are bought by the stations for $2,000.

Furthermore, the commercial stations are each permitted to import only nine series yearly, the Government stations five. This year's quota is already taken up by various distributors, and the chances are thought to be very

$150,000,000 Vidfilm Budget At Stake In Hot Competitive Race For Supremacy

Telefilm Producers Riding Crest of Booming TV Biz, With A Big Fat Vidtape Assist; Still Many Problems To Be Coped With, Syndication Misses 'Fat Cat' Status; Feature Supply Dwindles

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

Telefilms, features and the newborn babe of vidtape are riding the crest of a tv biz boom. That's the general proposition, descriptive of the overall field in mid-'59.

There are problems galore. There are exceptions to the general prosperity. Not everyone has assumed a fat cat status—not by a long shot.

But the measure of the prosperity can be gleaned from this sole fact: nearly 70% of the prime network schedules next season will consist of telepix. The multiplicity of "live" specials hasn't cut into the day-in-day-out vidpix network programming. In fact, the upcoming season will see the greatest number of hours ever devoted to telepix.

Overall field of telefilm syndication isn't riding as high. Telefilm syndication remains a $100,000,000 biz, a rough estimate that's not to be sneezed at. But much of the boom-boom atmosphere of years past is missing.

The feature famine is here. On the distribution level that prophesy of hitting the bottom of the cinematic barrel has been borne out. Stations have a pix backlog of varying dimensions—but for stations in general, it's just a matter of a few years when the lack of fresh features will be felt acutely.

Vidtape is coming into its own. For a new-born, the tape technique has shown a remarkable quick maturity. Vidtape has changed the patterns of commercials. On the network, it's being used widely in "live" programming. (The best of this season's "Playhouse 90" outings are being repeated this summer due to the blessings of vidtape.) The corelationship of vidtape and "live" has become the "living tape" slogan of National Telefilm Associates, currently engaged in syndicating a variety of taped shows.

Nothing stands still in this biz. Witness the burgeoning of vidtape, the drying up of features, the telepix spread on the networks, and the predicted syndication plateau for this season.

Quality won't stand still either. Next season will see one of the biggest spread of "live" specials on the networks ever, with CBS-TV and NBC-TV taking the most bows in that direction. In the midst of this, there will be the greatest spread of telepix on the three networks.

Who won't compare the "specials" versus the telepix? Who is the interested viewer who won't ask himself which offers the best entertainment? And what about the sponsor? It won't be ratings for many a sponsor. It'll be class, identification and for a few enlightenment.

The Stakes Are High

So while the "live" specials and telepix may be living in the same network houses in apparent harmony, next season is bound to be one of the most competitive for telepix in years. Vidfilms will not only have to match themselves against other telepix, but against the heavy schedule of "specials." There's a $150,000,000 network production budget riding for next season's prime evening time. The stake of telepix isn't small, by any measure.

"Specials" can also be a bust. They don't represent a breed insured. But many of them do represent a reaching out for something different, a galaxy of stellar names, and "a let's-get-out-of-the-rut" story approach. When they click, they lend excitement to the medium. There's no reason for many a telepix series to assume the same "special excitement" function, as some have in the past. It's truly a "wide, wide world" on tv with a multiplicity of tastes to be satisfied. If telepix play a "johnny-one-note-tune," as so many have in the past, how will they stand up in the long pull in the competition for the viewers' time?

Probably no end of the biz represents "bread and butter" programming more than syndication. There's some solid reasons for that. Other than the relative few indies, station berths for syndicated product are in the local option time areas. the prime syndicated time periods being in the 7 to 7:30 and 10:30 to 11 p.m. (EDT) time slots. Syndicators found that feeding action-adventure type of fare in those off-hour time slots garners the best ratings. So, on the whole, telefilm syndicators stick pretty close to the action-adventure formula, in the hope of ensnaring the entire family, along with the kids in the early evening, and the action fans in late evening.

But an odd situation has occurred in syndication. The very prosperity of the networks has bit into those prime half-hours, 7 and 10:30 p.m. (EDT), with many a network program recapturing what heretofore had been station option time. Many a syndicator privately says the problem should be dumped again in the lap of the Federal Communications Commission. But no one wants to stick his neck out. Same syndicators are involved in trying to sell network shows and they don't want to be lambasting the potential network customer. (FCC has a proposal to slice network option time at this time, anyway, it's pointed out.)

Competition in the market-by-market field is hot and heavy. There's a backlog of rerun product. Vidtape shows are making inroads, taking away time normally allocated to telefilm fare. In the wake of this scramble, there's a relative high turnover of sales personnel and many a syndication exec reads his profit scorecard closer than ever before.

Syndication of vidtape shows is getting its biggest shake from NTA. Shows varying from "Bishop Sheen" to "Mike Wallace Interviews" to "One Night Stand" are being put into the market. Right now, the number of vidtape equipped markets is close to 60. But by January, the count is expected to climb to 100. Vidtape shows, from NTA, Guild, Independent Television Corp., stations, and other sources, will be bunking up against the traditional syndication product. It'll be a race worth watching.

Causing concern is the number of sponsor spot buys. as opposed to program buys, of telefilms on the local level. Some say it's a passing fad among regional, national spot and local advertisers. Others take the development more seriously. No one's pressing the panic button. but an atmosphere of "watchful waiting" has settled over the syndication field.

The shortage of fresh Hollywood pix for tv has sent many distributors abroad in search of suitable product. No doubt about it. If the Hollywood post-'48's don't open up, the American public, via tv, will have more of a chance to broaden its tastes. There will be more imports sold to tv than heretofore. Some of the imports are inferior product that couldn't even get a theatrical whirl in the U.S. Others are prize winners. But the bet still is that the post-'48 deadlock on residual payments to Hollywood guilds will be broken in from two to three years. Then, according to forecasts, more Hollywood pix will be unwinding on tv.

No matter what end of the biz is examined, the story's the same. Everything is changing, moving. Nothing remains still.

5,000 Feature Exposures a Week

By HAROLD GOLDMAN

(President, NTA International)

Upholding the front-line position as the solid programming stalwarts of the television industry are the feature length motion pictures which currently are being televised throughout the country at the unbelieveable rate of approximately 5,000 films each week.

That information is causing no end of conversation among industry leaders as they seek to analyze the facts and come up with definitive plans for the future.

One of the most important questions facing both the distributor and the station operator is how to program the motion pictures that are already committed to television exposure. The thousands upon thousands of available films makes this no easy task. Another equally important query heard in all quarters is what can be expected in new product.

The uncontroverted facts are that practically all of the pre-1948 feature films have been sold to the tv film distributors who in turn have brought them to the television screens in the nation's living rooms. On the other side of the ledger are the post-1948 which have been making their appearance in the video market from time to time—but in limited quantities.

While these facts seem to portend a definite dearth of feature film programming some time in the future, distributors and programming executives alike are not too concerned. They feel sure the resourcefulness and ingenuity displayed in the past will once again prove equal to the occasion.

The present stock-piling of feature films by stations indicates that this type of programming will continue its present pace for some years to come. Feature films under contract to stations range from a handful to more than 3,000. Despite this backlog, stations are still eager to purchase additional feature films. They claim this stock-piling insures a continuation of programming strength.

Bonanza for Indies

A recent survey conducted by NTA reveals that stations are making excellent and fruitful use of feature films. The survey shows that independent tv outlets are telecasting an average of 21 feature films per week with approximately 36 hours being devoted to such presentations. Network affiliated stations only average nine feature films per week for 15 telecasting hours.

Various programming concepts have been conceived to breathe new life into these features that are available for telecasting.

One of the more important approaches to the problem is the creation of the "Blockbuster" technique. This approach is gaining acceptance as both distributors and station operators scan the impressive ratings resulting from its usage. The concept revolves around the highlighting of motion pictures that have gained audience approval in both the theatres and television. These hits serve as the backbone for programming a series of features.

Another programming technique that is gaining in popularity is the thematic concept.

NTA recently took 90 hour-long films produced by 20th-Fox and Warner Bros. and suggested stations use them back-to-back as a feature film type of programs. Other plans are constantly being tried and developed.

In addition to various programming techniques designed to make reruns attractive to viewers. station managers discover that playing good features for multiple runs does not necessarily decrease audience response. Numerous case histories prove that reruns garner high ratings time and time again.

For today's younger viewers there is no such thing as an old motion picture. They are the audience of tomorrow. The mature viewers take for granted the titles of yesteryear's blockbusters. The youngsters who were either too young or too busy to have seen these film classics during their theatrical release now become enthusiastic and excited about films scheduled for television exposure.

As for advertisers, they find feature film spots perfect vehicles for commercial messages. With consistent receptive audiences, these spots continue as premium buys at premium prices.

The station operator finds that the feature film gives him greater audiences which in turn enables him to post premium prices for participating spots. This, in turn, puts him in a buying frame of mind for more feature films for his programming schedule.

The feature film strength puts the syndicator and distributor in a better position, too. Since he paid huge sums to the motion picture companies for distribution rights to the features, he can now project dollars that he can keep. He had no doubt recouped his investment from the initial exposure of the films. It is the rerun sales that now bring him the profits.

To those who say that feature films are losing their hold upon viewers and station owners, the following figures will prove interesting.

In a recent survey conducted among 300 tv stations approximately 45% devote an average of 14 hours each week to feature film programming and almost 40% play an average of seven films each week. Another finding speaking well for feature film programming is that in 10 representative markets, approximately 20% of the total telecasting hours are devoted to feature films.

These facts augur well for feature film programming. As a product in demand by the viewer, it can do nothing else but continue its reign in the nation's living rooms.

Sam, You Made The Prints Too Few

By JO RANSON

There's a standing gag among distributors of free tv film that adds up to this wry observation: "Sam, you made the prints too few!"

What it means, to quote Robert Finehout, director of advertising and promotion for Association Films, Inc., a major distributor of on-the-cuff documentaries, cartoons, travelog and other types of celluloid product plugging industry, governmental, social service, etc., enterprises, is that "there is nothing more heartbreaking and harassing" than for distributors to be inundated with pleas from tv program directors for certain films that, unfortunately, can't be satisfied because of one glaring oversight on the part of the sponsor, namely "print anemia."

So many superbly produced free films are currently available for video presentation, it appears, but sponsors of these arresting productions in many instances did not have the foresight to provide the distributors with sufficient prints to cover the many stations seeking to display them in frequently advantageous time slots.

Sufficient proof is at hand that tv is unquestionably a principal distribution source for business films. Modern Talking Picture Service, Inc., also one of the country's leading distributors of free pubrelations films, recently engaged a responsible market research and opinion polling organization to question the film directors of more than 500 tv stations across the country anent their attitude toward biz sponsored free films. Nearly 70% of the tv stations, big and little, responded to this important survey.

Survey revealed that 99 out of every 100 tv stations made excellent use of free films. The question: how often do you telecast public relations films supplied free by industry or associations? was answered thusly: At least once a week, 84.8%; at least once a month, 10.4%; less than once a month, 4.8%. More than 70% of the stations telecast films during afternoon hours. Over 24% carried the films in the nighttime class.

3.7 Hours Weekly Use

Currently, film directors make use of free films on an average of 3.7 hours weekly. More than 78% of the respondents said they liked the idea of getting films in series format, majority requesting them in half-hour length. Most tv execs wanted them of 13-episode duration. More than 86% preferred dealing with film distributors rather than with pubrelations firms or with individual componies.

Though considerable progress has been made in the elimination of commercialism of free film, there's still a tendency on the part of some industrialists to abuse this aspect of their investment. A typical reply: "Makers of P. R. films should keep in mind I am giving them time they are unwilling to buy. NO COMMERCIALS inside films!" Another suggestion: "Eliminate commercialism under the guise of public service."

Regarding subject matter, there's a need for more good sports films, more storylines with humor and more animated cartoons. Tv stations could use more films dealing with everyday life such as vacations, travel, care of gardens, national holidays, research development, but, above all, more sports and less industry.

Subject matter, it was reiterated, should be handled with more entertainment and minus the traditional documentary approach. Modern Talking Picture Service emerged on top in reply to the queries: "Generally, which one source do you rate highest in terms of overall efficiency" and "Which one source do you use most frequently?" Nor did the U.S. Government fare too badly in these categories. Uncle Sam came out third in the response to these questions.

Programming free calls for showmanly skill on the part of station film directors but there is so much currently available and of such highly professional calibre that the average video outlet could exist hours on end with dozens of varied program series.

A look at the top 50 free films (see chart) is proof positive distributors maintain that there is a catholicity of product on hand—and mind you, it is there for the asking.

Britain Cautious As It Reevaluates Its Stake In Global Telefilm Market

By HAROLD MYERS

London.

Having paused for breath and taken stock of the situation, the British tv industry is taking a more cautious attitude towards its continued vidpic operations. Today, more so than at any time since commercial tv was launched nearly four years ago, there is full recognition that the honeymoon is over, that indifferent product can no longer find a niche, and that quality is of paramount importance.

These factors, coupled with the acute economics governing British telefilm programming, have resulted in an important reappraisal of the potentialities. At best, the British market can only pay about $7,000 for a half-hour episode, but while the earning capacity remains static, production costs are mounting. The minimum budget on which a half-hour program can be brought in is around $25,000, but even that estimate involves a considerable amount of trimming. For extra quality and big star names the budget is substantially higher. A striking case in point is "The Four Just Men" skein which has just been completed by Sapphire Films, at a cost of $50,000 per entry. That is an expensive undertaking in any language, but, with the right sort of network deal in the United States, can still yield a handsome profit.

An analysis of the economics shows that the Eastern Hemisphere, including the United Kingdom, can only return around one-third of the negative cost and that calculation does not take into account distribution commissions, print costs and other overheads, including publicity and promotion. Therefore, so far as the British packager is concerned, the American market is of supreme importance and must of necessity condition all program thinking. The trend in the past has been to safeguard the investment by Anglo-American partnerships between a producer on the British side and a distributor on the Yank side, but a development of this pattern may transform the situation. The next phase will probably be a direct network-to-network production partnership between the majors in British and America, and the first such deal may well be made within the next few weeks.

So far as the commercial programming companies are concerned, their main anxiety is to consolidate the position they've gained with such surprising rapidity. It's an acknowledged fact that two out of every three viewers automatically select the commercial channel, but today the challenge from BBC-TV is a force with which to reckon. To meet that challenge and to hold their audiences, the independent tv companies are determined to improve the quality of their filmed programs. Vidpix, both British and foreign, account for 30% of the air time on the commercial network. Half the filmed programs are of British origin, and the balance makes up the quota of foreign material allowed under the Television Act. Only two of the four major commercial outfits have been actively engaged in vidpic production—Associated TeleVision and ABC-TV—although there are reports of the Granada group entering the ring within a few months. Associated-Rediffusion occasionally dabbles in film production, but has steered clear of a continuous output.

BBC & Rank Entries

A survey of current and future programming reveals two major developments. One is the entry of BBC-TV into the film production arena and the other is the debut of the Rank Organization as a telefilm producer. Both have considerable significance.

The BBC's initial project is "The Third Man" skein, which the web is making on a 50-50 deal with National Telefilm Associates, sharing costs as well as revenue. It's an Anglo-American partnership in the real sense of the word, inasmuch as the first 20 episodes were filmed in Hollywood and the balance of 19 is now being made at Shepperton Studios. That is the beginning of a longterm program envisaged by the BBC, embracing about 17 series within the next three years at an average rate of five to six a year. All will be on a partnership basis with an American company. One intriguing subject on the BBC's slate is a possible deal with CBS for a filmed series based on the Jimmy Edwards "Whack-O" program, in which the comedian plays the headmaster of an erratic establishment of learning. CBS and BBC are to cooperate in making a pilot in the fall and will take it from there. Coincident with its entry into production the BBC is also developing its distribution activites and has established a world-wide sales organization covering every territory, other than the United States. The network has gone into business on a scale comparable with that of any of the commercial companies.

Rank's first vidpic venture, "Interpol Calling," a partnership with Jack Wrather, is currently resting after the completion of the first 14 episodes, but is due to resume at Pinewood this month. Later in the month the studio will start its second project, "A. 1 At Lloyds," which is being made in association with Sol Lesser, and a third project with Lesser is now in the talking stage.

Although the Rank Organization is a Johnny-come-lately in the v film scene, it is, of course, a partner in Southern-TV, the commercial outlet which has the franchise for the South of England and which has been on the air for almost a year.

The biggest individual promoters of vidfilms is ABC-TV, which has an impressive schedule of projects made either on its own account, by its parent corporation, or in association with packagers. For example, it currently has on release three series produced for it by Harry Alan Towers—"Dial 999," "Mantovani" and "Martin Kane" and a further three skeins made by Gross-Krasne—"African Patrol," "Jungle Boy" and "Glencannon."

On its current roster Harry Alan Towers is producing two other series, the first of which is "Tales From Dickens," for which Fredric March acted as narrator. The other is Sir Winston Churchill's "History of the English Speaking Peoples," which is being made in association with Milton Gordon's Galaxy Productions. Gross-Krasne have two new projects on the slate, "Fate," on which pre-production work is currently being carried out in Hollywood, and "Have Plane, Will Travel"; while the Halas and Batchelor cartoonery is making 78 animated subjects in two series—"Snip and Snap" and "Foofoo." Associated British Picture Corp., the parent company of the tv network, is currently filming "International Detective" in association with Eddie Sutherland with Arthur Fleming, and "The Flying Doctor," which was made on location in Australia and is being completed at the Elstree studios. Additionally, ABC-TV has commissioned from its distributing affiliate, Associated British-Pathe, a scrapbook series entitled "Time To Remember," in which the narrators will include Michael Redgrave, Ralph Richardson, Basil Rathbone, Edith Evans, Rossano Brazzi and William Bendix. The final 26 "Torchy" episodes, quarter-hours for the moppets, are also in production, making a total of 52 featurets.

For its future programming, ABC-TV is to explore the potentialities of the one-hour feature and has plans for at least four pilots during the season. These will also be made in association with Harry Alan Towers and subjects so far selected include "The Saint," a "Chime Club" skein, a safari type project, with the fourth yet to be agreed.

Associated TeleVision has two projects in the immediate future. The first to go into production will be "The Danger Man" skein which starts rolling at the National Studios at Elstree around the end of this month with Patrick McGoohan in the lead. He'll play a secret agent employed by all the western powers and in each episode he'll be involved in some romantic situation. It was originally intended to shoot the skein as one-hour subjects, but this has now been abandoned and the 39 episodes will run for 30 minutes apiece. ATV's other venture, titled "Whiplash," will be made entirely on location in Australia. Casting details are not yet finalized. The network has recently completed the second group of 13 in "The Invisible Man" series and a third batch is under consideration. The program company, of course, was also directly associated with Sapphire's "Four Just Men" series.

The Danziger Bros., who also operate their own studios at Elstree, are putting the "Mark Saber" series into its sixth year with Donald Gray continuing as the private eye. "Man From Interpol" is in active production with Richard Wyler in the title role. Malcolm Arnold, noted for his "River Kwai" score, is writing the music for the new series, which is already slotted for the fall season by Associated-Rediffusion. Also on the Danziger vidpic program is a color skein for UA-TV entitled "Adventures of Ali Baba" with Daniel Massey in the lead and another subject to be known as "The Cheaters."

A new vidpic packaging company, Vance-Gruner-Connell Productions, has already completed 13 quarter hour programs featuring interviews with Lord Russell by Woodrow Wyatt and are due to start their next series at the end of August. This will be "Doctor Pygmalion" based on the casebook of plastic surgeon Dr. Maxwell Maltz in which Eric Portman will play the title role and for which Dennis Vance will direct the pilot in New York. The rest of the skein will be filmed in Europe.

Beyond the fact that they've slotted "Woman In Love" for fall production, Sapphire Films has not yet finalized its program, although two or three other new series are on the stocks.

Seymour Dorner, who recently ended a four year association with Sapphire, is now operating his own company, Command Films Inc., and is currently negotiating U.S. distribution for his first project "The Monte Carlo Story," a skein of 39 half-hours. A French production company is providing half the coin and, apart from sharing in the returns, will retain distribution rights in France. Other projects which Dorner has in the planning stage are "The Story of El Cid" and "A Yank At Rugby."

An unusual project recently completed in London was Nicole Milinair's production of "As Dark As the Night," which was a combined operation for tv and picture theatres. In the United States it was presented by CBS-TV as an entry in "Playhouse 90" but for the rest of the world it will be distributed theatrically. Lead roles were played by Michael Wilding, Laraine Day, Dennis Price, with Julie Hopkins and Sheila Allen, and Terence Young was the director. This is the first of a number of similar subjects which Miss Milinair will film in various European capitals.

Foreign Films Good Bet As The Thinking Man's Late Show

By JOSEPH HARRIS

(Pres., Art Theatre of the Air)

The foreign film has been an important element in sustaining whatever is left of the picturegoing habit in America. The calculated emergence of Bardot, Loren, Guinness, Lollobrigida and Fernandel, to name but a few, has been a steady, lifegiving transfusion to interest in motion pictures. Foreign films and their leading players have won awards at all major festivals. English, French and Indian directors have been lauded for their exquisite cinematic techniques. And the most recent statistics indicate that one or more so-called Art Theatres exist in all principal cities. The growing attendance at these theatres is in no small way connected with the tremendous rise in tourism. It is quite clear, then, that the foreign or art film is no longer the seldom-seen curio appealing only to the avant-garde, but rather an increasingly popular entertainment purchase.

Too few of this type of picture have been televised. Because they are, in the main, dubbed, and because they are foreign, too many tv film buyers have shown great reluctance to book them. They would rather show an outdated American film, vintage 1932, which has nothing more than nostalgia interest. But that the tv film buyer does not know is that the viewing audience in range of his station would welcome fine foreign-made, recently-produced motion pictures with great interest. We have an organization, the Art Theatre of The Air, Inc., that has proven just this. Just a glance at the ARB ratings of "Rififi," "Anna," "Bitter Rice" and other outstanding foreign product that we have sold to television indicates that there is a mass audience for fine dubbed foreign films which have been proven theatrically.

How often does any medium lag behind the taste of the public it serves? Too often, I'm afraid. When television forcibly usurped the throne that Hollywood had for so long occupied, it took the motion picture people too many years to revise their policies and product to offset the changes in taste of the move going public. They are, in fact, still trying. Now that tv is the undisputed champ, it has to accomplish the most difficult part of being a champion—to stay on top. And, in the one area with which I'm primarily concerned, tv is not doing it. The quality foreign film now occupies a totally different position in the market place. It is a position of increasing stature and saleability. How long will it take the tv film buyer to overcome his "play-it-safe" attitude and recognize that the glamour is fast wearing off of American films with "big" names that are so old as to be virtually anachronistic. How long will it take them to realize that the emergence of realism in all forms of entertainment is the result of the public's demand for it. How long will it take them to realize that if the public will pay to see a fine film, foreign or otherwise, they will in time tune in their tv sets to see it also. I emphasize the words "fine" and "quality" to indicate that the Art Theatre of The Air will not involve itself in a bushel basket operation. We are interested in only the best foreign-made product, with the ultimate aim that the Art Theatre of The Air banner will come to mean the best in foreign film entertainment.

The Art Theatre of The Air has just purchased three hours and 40 minutes of film, made in Russia, of the Bolshoi, Moiseyev and Georgian Ballets. The films are exquisite in their production values and exciting in content. We plan to sell them to tv on a network or syndicated basis because we know how interested the American public is in the Russian ballets. The enormous success of the live presentations of both the Bolshoi and Moiseyev companies in the U. S. proves that the audience wants this. How long will it take the tv buyers to recognize this? I'd hate to hazard the guess.

What's The Future For Syndication? 'Let's Wait And See'

By MICHAEL M. SILLERMAN

(President, NTA Program Sales)

Syndication was the topic of conversation at a recent get-together of a group of radio and television pioneers. One veteran broadcaster asked why television is so much more active than its predecessor, radio program syndication.

Before the answer was forthcoming, somebody recalled the genesis of program syndication in the broadcast field. It was more than 20 years ago that a midwest advertising agency executive had a local retailer as a client, and cast about for means to compete with some of the leading chains in his field which were sponsoring important radio network shows.

The idea struck him that were he able to put together a program of network calibre to be sponsored locally, and to have some of the costs of that program absorbed by other sponsors in non-competing markets, then his own local clients could meet the national companies on their own terms and their own levels. He knew his local client could not afford the budget of this program. But he also knew that his client could absorb and afford a proportionate share. It finally worked out. It was the beginning of program syndication.

TV lends itself more to syndication than radio. Since the days of radio, the means of reproduction have been improved considerably. Film, too, has been highly developed, and now we have video tape which gives us added dimension for program reproduction.

What makes television program syndication of paramount importance is its place in our economy. If the local merchant and the company with regional distribution problems were not able to compete on television with the giant national corporation, then our economy would suffer substantial injury.

Today, through film programming, television makes available to any advertiser in any market top quality programs which can be merchandised, promoted and coordinated in a general sales plan with the same success and effect as a network program involving enormous expenditures.

The effectiveness of syndicated programs is evident in the impressive ratings they receive in market after market throughout the country.

We now have a new dimension in the field of television program distribution—that electronic marvel known as video tape, or as we call our tape system at NTA—"Living Tape," a reference to the totally life-like quality of the picture you see at home from a piece of electronic tape.

Tape is now making available to local and regional advertisers programs which would be uneconomical to do on film. For example, NTA currently is handling such shows as The Bishop Sheen Program, the Henry Morgan and Alexander King shows and Juke Box Jury. No local advertiser could afford to pay for these programs were they done on film. On tape, however, despite the small number of tape markets opened during the past year, they provide quality production, immaculate technical quality and reasonable program costs.

The foregoing does not necessarily mean that one-man shows will be the rule. On the contrary, we hope to put into syndication two musical programs which are currently in production. One is the Xavier Cugat-Abbe Lane program and the other is "One Night Stand" featuring top musical performers and organizations. Also in the works are tape spectaculars, and no doubt we and other companies will soon be making available dramatic programs where tape will be more advisable and more economical than film. And there is no doubt in my mind that each, tape and film, has its own place, and that each will hold on with equal tenacity and equal success.

The importance of syndicated programs is emphasized in the figures that reveal how much program material and program hours are contributed to television by the

TAPE: PLANNED PARENTHOOD

The Monstrous Infant

By SOL SAKS

Hollywood.

Of the many criticisms leveled at television—not the least of which has been its immaturity—the main point has been overlooked, namely that TV has matured too fast. In a few short years we have seen TV grow from an infant to a powerful adult and then, before we could hardly get over our admiration and wonderment, TV—like the fruit which gets rotten before it gets ripe—became old, senile and fearful. Barely out of its infancy, TV is already suffering from hardening of the arteries.

Television came out of its crib like a giant, stumbling sometimes, swingly wildly, but with a strength and aim that made itself felt. Its prime opponent, movies, smug and placid, soft and flabby with years of easy living and no competition, went down in the first round.

Now we saw a curious transformation take place. Movies became the lean, hungry ambitious challenger and television became smug and placid.

The first casualties were the parasitic hangers-on in the picture industry. These were the little old ladies of the industry who sowed not but reaped like crazy. Their so-called function was to serve as high priestesses who muttered incantations over every picture such as "motion pictures are your best entertainment" which was supposed to insure success. They also claimed to have secret formulas to avoid any possibility of failure—which usually boiled down to putting Rosalind Russell in a tailored suit with a man who looked something like Cary Grant to call her boss lady; to have John Wayne with a small group of marines beleaguered on a South Pacific Island; or Betty Grable in a scantily clad costume surrounded by 300 chorus girls in slightly less scantily clad costumes. As long as pictures were successful these witch doctors were worshipped, pampered and, periodicallly, fat annuities were laid on their altar. And when the dragon television appeared on the horizon (I suppose I'm mixing my figures of speech but I can't stop now that I'm rolling), they muttered more incantations and cried out that it was only an apparition and if you ignored it, it would go away.

TV was ignored but it did not go away. One of the first acts of the movie industry which now realized that it was in a fight for its life was to throw out the little old ladies. And here comes the astounding part of the story. TV courteously, nay, eagerly, invited the little old lady into the fold. And they came—rocking chairs, bifocals, superstitions, fears, fright and all.

Which is all a way of saying that television is suffering from the almost inevitable characteristic of old age—ultra-conservatism, playing it safe. I suggest that playing it safe should never be of paramount importance in show business.

This same playing it safe has done most to bring upon us the two most decried handicaps in television, censorship and lack of originality. The things you can do are far outnumbered by the things you can't do. They agree with everything you say, but will fight to the death your right to say it.

For the little old ladies, transferring to the new industry, have retooled simply by replacing ingredients in the formula. They have replaced boss lady Russell in the tailored suit, John Wayne and his attractively smudged cheek as he waits for the troopships to bring supplies, Betty Grable with legs way up to her collarbone, with westerns, panel shows and situation comedy. This, they have decreed, is the new formula for guaranteeing success. Just keep from saying hell and damn and have a pleasant toothy MC and you don't take any chances. Get the guy with the gun to stop them at the pass; have your cloyingly sweet heroine burn her roast when the boss is coming home to dinner but the husband gets the raise anyhow because the boss happens to like burnt roast; and a panel putting blindfolds on while they guess the occupation of a brassiere manufacturer—which will lead to hilarious double-entendres if the panel knows their business.

This is what put radio where it is. This is what made movies susceptible to the first real competition that came along. And this is what is fast making television the entertainment of only teenagers and unutterable bored adults.

I do not, of course, suggest that the blame for all the little old ladies lies with the movies. Television has created at least its share.

Directors, writers and actors must often do what the little old ladies interpret the public wants. This is why the psychiatrists' couches in Beverly Hills rarely have a chance to cool off. And this is why from the golden land of mink-lined swimming pools, Jaguars and cashmere coats, you occasionally hear an inexplicable cry of anguish. Because others, like myself, have made certain sacrifices for the not yet paid for mink-lined swimming pools, but refuse to give up the inalienable American right to beef.

Today's Syndication 'A' Rate Card

The following is a class "A" rate card rundown of syndicated shows in the top 22 markets in the U.S. The prices, gathered from a number of sources, should not be considered absolute figures. They reflect prices of class "A" product sold to blue-chip regional and local advertisers. In some markets, prices may vary sharply, such as New York, where a direct-to-sponsor sale may bring as high as $4,200 per half-hour program to as low as $1,500 in a station sale. But that differential is lessened when considering direct-to-advertiser sales, as does the subsequent table. The direct-to-sponsor prices quoted for individual markets for class "A" product are net figures, with agency commissions already deducted. The quoted price is the cost of the program per week on a 39, plus 13-week basis. The price rundown follows:

Atlanta	$ 415	Los Angeles	$2,200
Baltimore	600	Milwaukee	485
Birmingham	275	Minneapolis-St. Paul	550
Boston	1,000	New Orleans	360
Buffalo	475	New York	3,500
Chicago	2,000	Philadelphia	1,100
Cincinnati	475	Providence	365
Cleveland	750	St. Louis	650
Columbus	400	San Francisco	950
Dayton	360	Seattle	415
Detroit	1,000	Washington	475

EVERYONE WANTS TO CUT UP BABY

By ART WOODSTONE

This is the one time in contemporary history everybody seems to favor planned parenthood, and the baby is video tape. Only trouble is that everyone is planning to be the only parent.

Pecksniffery and piousness, raging, railing and legalistics are part of this majestic custodial battle and the outcome promises to be pyrrhic.

Producers are fighting producers, networks are fighting producers, unions are fighting unions and the government stands ready to fight everybody in behalf of anybody.

Intensity of the situation makes it hard to believe any longer that the industry really places any serious hope in the future of that other show biz sibling—celluloid, except as a relatively minor complement to kid brother tape.

First of the parental struggles over video tape began to simmer years ago and it set the theme for subsequent fights. But none of the latterday imbroglios possess, for journalistic purposes, the same degree of drama as the one between the Screen Actors Guild and the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists.

And Still They Fuss

Each planned to be the parent of tape and jealously the combatants still fuss—in front of the NLRB (a fair substitute for the courts) and in outcries from the gutter, where any outsider was free to look on. Only hope for amicable settlement is for the rival unions to accomplish what no two other potential fathers have ever been able to do physically—for the two to become one, and this magical alternative is presently under consideration by union Merlins, skeptical though they still be.

If they don't merge, there promises to be a series of explosive jurisdictional disputes that can only hurt them both and perhaps even delay the inevitable growth and flexibility of tape.

And should these two dramatic opponents eventually remove themselves from the operating arena, there are still others on hand and ready to cut up the baby. By hook, crook or by the book, everybody's got his own strategy for emasculating his challenger as father of tape.

There is—and this in time should prove to be a generally acceptable axiom—no single group which in some way isn't affected and doesn't sense the grand image this baby suggests.

Some of the other combatants are the Film Producers Assn. vs. the networks; International Alliance of Theatrical & Stage Employees against the ranged forces of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the National Assn. of Broadcast Employees & Technicians; N.Y. and Hollywood; producers vs. agencies, and networks against producers.

For the record, it should be stated at this point that some of these problems hinge not just on a desire to possess baby but on a desire to abort baby, or at least delay its growth. Since any dwelling on particulars in such cases is a possible wellspring for outcries from the "vested reactionary elements" and since it is really away from the main point, suffice to say that such situations exist and let it rest at that.

NABET's Global Issue

As AFTRA is pitted against SAG, NABET was recently pitted against foreign technical help for tape production. This also pitted NABET against NBC, an unfortunate choice of opponents for NABET, since NBC clomped the union good on foreign jurisdiction of tape and on several other points, which may tend to weaken the union's overall strength to grab off the latest electronic marvel.

NABET-IBEW vs. IATSE is a situation that can be stated rather simply: IATSE is a union with a background in film and is allied to the indie producers. NABET, at ABC and NBC, and IBEW, at CBS, are unions with all their experiences in live tv and the techniques of live tv closely resemble those for taped tv. IA is learning the live techniques, and if the indie producers win tape, then NABET and IBEW will lose a great deal, perhaps everything, or so goes the theory in some places. If the networks win, then IATSE will be the sufferer. Nothing less than a mint in potential wages stands to be lost by the childless one.

For the same general reason, Film Producers Assn., consisting of indie producers, has taken a case to Washington (with IATSE backing) demanding that the networks be divorced from the production of video tape blurbs on the allegation that failure to do so encourages network monopoly. These days, everybody in the capital seems anxious to prove ABC, NBC and CBS a monopoly of one kind or another, so the FPA-helmed movement in the direction of the Justice Department is fearsome to contemplate. Besides, the legislators (Small Business Committee, etc.) always seem game for a cause that will garner headlines and the FPA drive poses just such a cause.

IATSE, apart from its legal and moral support of FPA against the networks, was evidently quite starry-eyed over the prospect recently that NABET might lose jurisdiction at NBC. A strike by NABET against the network ended in union-network hostilities that temporarily paved the way for a new referendum among technicians that had a very outside chance of giving new NBC jurisdiction to IATSE. This hasn't happened and might never happen, but if it ever did, IA wouldn't have to worry about the part it was going to play in planned parenthood. Jurisdiction at both a network and continuing jurisdiction among producers would have both sides of the street amply covered.

FPA has even been sharpening its knives against ad agencies. An ironic twist, because agencies are the ones who give the indies their sustenance. But when it comes to tape, everything seems fair for the moment. FPA wants tape facilities, which only a few of its members can afford as individuals. Consequently, a pooled setup is what FPA has in mind. Only weakness is that if the indies cannot tie up the exclusivity of a tape studio (not necessarily owned by themselves) the agencies need only move in with their own personnel, produce their own commercials (at less money, theoretically, because it obviates a middle-man) and, thus, deprive the indies of any fatherhood status whatsoever after awhile.

Like any custodial struggles, the headlines made over tv tape have been interesting, even exciting, but hardly ever pretty. And nobody yet has been convinced that one big happy family can exist where there are dozens of fathers and mothers and only one child, however big. Maybe the child will have to grow up even more before the litigants grow up at all.

A New Look at Old Movies

By GEORGE T. SHUPERT

(V. P. In Charge of MGM-TV)

The grass always looks greener on the other side of the fence—except in the entertainment business, where the other man's meadow always has a way of looking like a garden of weeds.

The legit theatre still looks down through its lorgnette at the rest of us. Only recently Walter Kerr in his Sunday N.Y. Herald Tribune column urged his theatrical confreres to accept Dore Schary, writer of one Broadway hit and the director of another, into the Shubert Alley fratrnity, despite certain misgivings about Schary's Hollywood tendencies.

Motion picture executives still like to twit tv as the repository for old English films that couldn't be peddled to a product-starved drive-in at flat rental. And they are delighted that the "bright young men of television," who had put on the mantle of a crusade against Hollywood stereotypes, are in stampede before the same cavalcade of stage coaches, posses and Texas longhorns that were the standard fare of low-budget movies in days of yore.

The fact is, of course, that a good dramatic idea is—like any other kind of energy—indestructible and transformable. Paddy Chayevsky's "Middle of the Night" saw the light of day as a tv show. Then it moved successfully on to the Broadway stage. Finally it has become a motion picture which the producers of motion pictures, through their association, saw fit to nominate as the only American entry in the Cannes Film Festival.

The adaptability of one good dramatic idea to all media of expression—(didn't they turn "Street Car Named Desire" into a ballet?) is of special interest to us here at MGM-TV. MGM Studios has, perhaps, the largest backlog of proven dramatic material in the world. Anyone who has any questions about the future ability of tv to meet demands for large-scale program ideas need only look to the MGM catalog of properties to put aside his doubts.

The MGM-TV co-production with Talent Associates of "Meet Me In St. Louis" should give a fair idea of the adaptability of motion picture screen plays to the television medium. As is known, we are going ahead with Talent Associates on the tv adaptation of several other famous MGM motion pictures. "Ninotchka," "Mrs. Minver," and "Random Harvest" are three of the movies which will soon be revitalized as star-studded, 90-minute television "specials" in this co-production deal.

I have no doubt that just as the tv program, "Middle of the Night," became a Cannes Film Festival entry in the theatrical field, so the tv adaptation of a movie will become a prize winning television program. We think that old movies may very well become the stuff that much of future large-scale television programming is made of.

There is another aspect of MGM screen plays that is beginning to attract sponsor interest. It is the whole field of tv film musicals based on outstanding motion pictures.

No need to recapitulate what Oscar Hammerstein has done to the "book" musical by turning "How Green Grow the Lilacs" into "Oklahoma." Here at MGM-TV we are currently examining the great MGM screen plays of the past to select those especially adaptable for musical treatment. Such movies as: "Honky-Tonk," "Boomtown" and "Her Highness and the Bellboy" are among those considered by us as potential musical films for television.

We are presently negotiating with top composers, lyricists, and musical producers to implement this approach to our "old" movies. Most exciting from the creative point of view will be the opportunity to harness the great reservoir of name talent that has so much to offer in the musical field. During the past 10 years these performers have found ever decreasing opportunities in motion pictures to use their musical talents. We find them eager and willing to do musicals for television.

As television and the public's taste for it mature we think that the demand for full-scale dramatic entertainment will increase—the same as it did in the motion picture theatre. At MGM-TV we are anticipating this demand by planning top-drawer, star-studded tv films, particularly in the field of musicals, which will be consistent in every respect with the MGM film-making tradition. And, of course, we will continue to develop half-hour and hour length film series programs. For all aspects of our future tv film production we count on our great backlog of MGM feature film successes as our stock in trade.

Look Closer and You'll See That Boom In TV Film Production In New York

By MARTIN H. POLL
(Pres, Gold Medal Studios)

There is a production boom in New York City which is the result of years of effort on the part of a nucleus of production people and facilities.

When I opened Gold Medal in June, 1956, there was only one tv series being filmed in New York City, the "Phil Silvers Show," and this was filmed with three cameras and utilized the technique of live tv and not motion pictures.

Only one or two major features were filmed in New York City each year. Hollywood crews would come to New York for location shooting of backgrounds and then return to Hollywood to shoot the interiors.

Why? Why, when the network brass and advertising agency executives are in the East?

Why? Why, when the acting pool from the Broadway theatre is in the East?

Why? Why, when creative people like Elia Kazan, Paddy Chayefsky and Sidney Lumet want to work in the East?

Three years ago New York didn't have trained crews that had worked together as a team.

Today we have several trained crews. The same crews at Gold Medal that worked on feature films such as "The Goddess" and "Middle of The Night," worked during the past year on "New York Confidential," "Deadline" and the Carl Reiner, Barbara Britton pilot, "Head Of The Family."

There are several other crews that have worked together as a team on tv series such as "Naked City" and "Rendezvous" this past season.

Today these few New York crews work faster and are more efficient than the Hollywood technicians and do not have the Hollywood departmentilization which makes it impossible to work economically.

Unions Coordinate

Three years ago, New York IATSE craft unions had impractical work schedules with the various crafts starting their eight-hour regular day at different hours and limiting the production by designating the starting time rather than allow the starting time to fit the production schedule.

Today the IATSE East Coast Film Council in New York City is aware that we must adjust the work hours of the various crafts so they all start the day at the same hour and that the rates for night shooting or construction at night must be adjusted so that the work day can start at night without the heavy overtime penalties. The first step was taken a month ago in the new scenic artists contract which adjusted this problem and the others will follow.

Three years ago the labs were not experienced in printing dailies, they could only make release prints.

Today the F.P.A. and the film editors and producers are working with the labs so that we now have fast service and perfect quality from any of the New York labs for printing.

Three years ago the city and all its departments were uncooperative—there was red tape and lack of interest in solving location problems throughout the city.

Mayor Wagner's Assist

Today, Mayor Wagner and his former assistant, Stan Lowell, have worked with us and have eliminated the red tape and are continuing to work with us in improving location shooting condition in the city.

Three years ago there was limited and inadequate studio facilities. There was a limited amount of first class equipment. The cost of tv pilots was very expensive as studios did not have scene docks with basic elements such as windows, doors, flats.

Today, since the opening of Gold Medal Studios, New York now has a facility with large stages and a vertical operation which includes everything from a carpenter shop to a commissary.

With the increased feature film and tv film activity, the rental equipment companies have increased and modernized their equipment.

The increased production should encourage the investment of building additional studios in New York City.

The ones who are continually rapping New York are the few Hollywoodites who come here with improper preparation. They hire the wrong people and attempt to handle everything over the long distance telephone. After THEY make a horrible mess out of their operation, they blame it on New York. The ones who come here adequately-prepared, arrange for adequate studio facilities and work in a professional manner find working here efficient and cheaper than Hollywood.

ITV: Tempoed To Jet Age

Paris.

According to Dave Lown, president of Intercontinental TV, the recent ITV technical job on Dave Garroway's NBC show "Today" from Paris last April proved conclusively that a fully equipped Ampex-stocked mobile unit can give topgrade Yank video quality abroad. With the NABET difficulties ironed out, Lown said that interest in, and demands for, use of ITV services are now more than they can handle.

ITV, a Panamanian corporation with primarily Yank capital, is helmed by Lown, with James F. Gannon as secretary-treasurer and Hugo A. Seiler, Robbert Koch and J. Herbert Riedel as veepees in charge of sales, production and engineering respectively. Headquarters are in Paris with offices now in New York, Geneva and Rome, with others skedded soon for other world capitals.

Lown specified that ITV was worldwide now with another 15-ton complete truck unit being prepared for use in Asia. His unit is the only one with three cameras and can do a complete show on tape, plus sound, mixing and editing. Outfit is primarily a technical service org but will also soon go into production or coproduction on various projects—mainly spectaculars and series—as well as package complete series on its own for U.S. and world sales.

Lown pointed out that tv, like films, is interested in new and fresh approaches that can be given by foreign locations. Lown stated that interest and contracts came faster than the unit could be put into operation. ITV has solved its logistical needs and operates with an 18-man crew with other workers picked up when needed. He also stressed that the main engineers and officers of ITV were Yanks and NABET members.

Though mainly servicing Yank tv, ITV will be ready to service all national tv networks. It can work with 525 and 625-line networks which include the U.S., all of Continental Europe except France, Belgium and Luxembourg (819 lines) and Great Britain which has 405 lines. However ITV will soon have conversion setups for servicing all countries.

This summer ITV will do Yank show stints in France, Switzerland, Italy, Moscow and Denmark. With the "Today" show under its belt, ITV showed its jet age swiftness in its Geneva Conference coverage. Spoleto and Moscow for Ed Sullivan, a Sinatra spec in Italy and a Victor Borge spec in Denmark are on the summer-fall calendar.

Growing Pains Can Be Fun If You Know Where You're Going

By WALTER KINGSLEY
(President, Independent Television Corp.)

A report on the activities of a new company is like a report on the first few months of marriage. If you talk about the pleasant things you are considered immodest, and if you speak about the others everyone assumes you're in trouble. So let's just take a look at the events which everyone has had the opportunity to observe.

ITC was set up early in July last year as a joint investment of Jack Wrather and Associated Television, Ltd., of England. Jack Wrather was named chairman of the board and Michael Nidorf vice-chairman. I was installed as president of the company on July 11 and ITC set out to make a name for itself and a profit for its owners.

Since we were a new entry in an industry that had already established itself as a prime factor in the nation's economy our first year of operation was geared to do primarily three things: acquire property and manpower, organize a strong syndication department and establish our name in the industry.

Late in September ITC took over Television Programs of America for something in excess of $11,000,000, reportedly the largest transaction of its kind in the tv film industry. ITC acquired the full catalogue of TPA's 16 properties. Several weeks later, Arrow Productions was set up as the residual division of ITC and in the ensuing months 11 of the original properties were put into Arrow for sale.

Also in the line of setting up our sales organization we formed a national sales staff and regional and syndicated sales staffs. With more than 70 men operating in the sales area, it was necessary to give them something to sell. And we have done that.

Five new-to-syndication programs have been released in the last seven months, which is a sizeable release schedule for a new organization. "Cannonball" has been sold in 102 markets, "Sergeant Preston of the Yukon" in 95 markets, "Jeff's Collie" in 160 markets, "Brave Stallion" in 85 markets, and the all-new videotape version of "Ding Dong School" in over 60 markets.

We made another major program acquisition when we purchased "The Gale Storm Show" from Hal Roach. This was in line with our corporate policy of acquiring properties from outside sources as and when they fit our requirements. We expect to make additional acquisitions of this type in the ensuing months. I guess we, in a way, are unique in program production and distribution in that we can move speedily in the open market as acquisition possibilities present themselves. From a business standpoint, we feel there is as much skill required in these areas as in the creative areas.

On the national sales front there has also been considerable activity. "The Gale Storm Show" was sold in a combination daytime strip-nighttime once-a-week arrangement to ABC-TV for three years. "Fury" was renewed for its fifth year on NBC-TV by General Foods and The Borden Co. The Jack Wrather owned "Lassie" was renewed for its seventh year by the continuing sponsor, Campbell Soup, insuring continuous flow of episodes for our successful "Jeff's Collie" and its identification with a long-running network program.

In 33 Foreign Countries

In foreign sales, ITC currently has 16 properties in 33 foreign countries.

We have moved ahead in shoring up our foreign lines of distribution by setting up a subsidiary organization, ITC of Canada, Ltd.

ITC is now geared up for production in both the film and tape fields. The ITC production staff in Hollywood is currently engaged in the production of its first videotape series, "Ding Dong School," another videotape pilot, "The Gale Storm Show," two undisclosed film pilots, and "Fury." It is also setting up production plans for "Whiplash," to be filmed in Australia.

Those Foreign Pastures Grow Greener & Greener

By NORMAN KATZ
(Director of Foreign Operations, United Artists Associated)

Many of my colleagues in the film field have dubbed me the "Magellan of the Movies" because of the numerous trips I have made around the world. Facetious or not the title isn't a valid one. I like circumnavigating the globe but unlike Magellan I have kept a log of my travels and find many things of interest both in and out of the film field. My most important observation hinges on a simple statement of fact: wherever and whenever a station buys films for tv it has been paid off handsomely in both profit and prestige.

According to my vantage points in Sydney, Australia, or Helsinki, Finland, or Zurich, Switzerland, I have found that American films were more popular than ever on the home screens.

For instance, Down Under in Australia, the entire 750 plus, pre-1950 Warner Bros. film library is completely sold out—has been for over a year now. Two of the biggest stars on tv are Popeye and Bugs Bunny, both of whom by a happy coincidence, are stalwarts in our cartoon library.

In fact we have blanketed the entire 3,000,000 sq. miles of that continent with our product, with three rare exceptions: the Bush Country which is aboriginal; the northern Territory, only because at this writing there are no facilities for telecasting in that sector and New South Wales, currently planning to have facilities ready early next year.

Tests Are Similar

Two of the most notable things I have found in my peripatetic existence is the similarity of tastes—whether adult or small fry, and that movies are big on tv. In all the polls of syndicated shows compiled in the U. S., our features and well-muscled Sailor have both consistently been high up in every poll—be it Pulse or ARB. In fact, as I write this in London, on one of my infrequent sojourns at home base, I have a copy of the latest U. S. Pulse poll which I culled from VARIETY. Our Popeye is No. 10 nationally—one of two cartoon programs listed and 10 points higher than the other cartoon shows. That's American taste.

Over here in the British Isles a recent poll of syndicated shows, similar to the Stateside Pulse, put Popeye on the top of the popularity list—with a whopping 77 Nielsen, the highest rating ever of any opening program in the United Kingdom. That's British taste.

The relation of such figures convinces me that people are people the world over. Differences in language and/or environment can be easily overcome by a common denominator: understanding. Mind you, now, I'm not saying that all the peoples of the world can be reached by a feature motion picture or by Popeye. But if that unique individual can be the means whereby the children of the world can start on a common understanding and appreciation then maybe our future generations may live in a world free of tensions. If I am right about this premise I will look back in 1980 and say this portion of the article has made me a prophet ahead of my time.

$3,000,000 WB Gross

Yes, the foreign pastures are green indeed, as a $3,000,000 overseas gross for 1958 on our Warner Bros. product amply indicates. We are, as already noted, big in Britain, big in Australia. In Japan we have achieved great popularity on tv, too.

With the exception of Japan which telecasts via a live synchronization, and France, Germany and Italy which use dubbed versions, all other countries telecast in English with sub-titles in the mother tongue. In many cases the cartoons are not even sub-titled. Maybe in this way we can take pride too in helping people of the world overcome a language barrier, too, by familiarizing them with English. A universality of language, the ability to communicate in a common tongue may be another step toward international amity.

Yes, in Belgium, Switzerland, Finland, Denmark, Sweden, France, Italy, South America, everywhere on the globe we are making good friends with our films on tv. I'm sure that once we start selling behind the Iron Curtain—and we are in the process of trying to negotiate for engagements in those countries—and our films are shown over the individual stations then we'll make even more friends.

Don't call me Magellan. Call me Nostradamus.

Rash of Mergers, 2-Coast Spread For Blurberies

By ART WOODSTONE

Trend in the past year among tv film and tape commercial producers has been toward further concentration of power among the indies. And this has made it just that much harder for the small production indies to make a buck.

There have been three large mergers in the past year, the opening of more and more two-Coast shops and the demise of some smaller companies.

Screen Gems bought out Eliot, Unger & Eliot, one of the more well established blurberies. Warner Bros. made a tieup with Filmways, details of which are still unclear although one report has it that Warners, despite denials, got a majority of Filmways and the money exchanged went to develop an expanded plant for tape and film in N.Y.

Buckeye bought Transfilm, and presently Metro and Four Star are among the larger program producers who are actively seeking a commercial subsidiary among one or another of the remaining indie N.Y. companies.

Other trend has been a move toward the two-Coast shop. Nearly everyone of the established Gotham-based blurberies now has some kind of tieup on the Coast, either via ownership or rentals or cross-referencing of new business possibilities, depending on where the ad client wants to have his commercials shot. This trend has virtually ended the major East-West blurb struggle that geographically soured the commercial film biz no more than 15 months ago.

MPO has offices at Republic and now that N.Y. company works consistently on both sides of the continent. Van Praag Productions and Robert Lawrence Productions (latter among the first to go both ways) also have N.Y. and Coast setups, so if a client wants sunlight Coastward, they go and if he wants N.Y. they just go over to the west side of Manhattan and push a different button.

There are some fundamental reasons behind the rash of mergers and the two-way spread of the blurberies. The mergers give the producers more cash and larger facilities, and since the networks are in there bidding for commercial biz (via tape), cash and facilities are more than ever maintaining competition.

The mergers also give studios those now-essential two-Coast parlays for blurb production. Its been up to the rest of the indies to find some kind of a Coast tieup, to satisfy the whims of agencies and their alternate "sunlight and shade" demands.

A Market-By-Market Telefilm Appraisal

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

In line with Madison Ave's "image" thinking, indie stations in the nation's No. 1 market of N. Y. are assuming separate programming personalities.

With WPIX, it's telefilms, as in years past; with WOR-TV, it's features still; with WNEW-TV, it's "diversification;" and with WNTA-TV, it's "living tape" personalities. The network flagship stations assume the characteristics of their respective webs. Yet each web outlet, in its own way, has an accent of its own. WCBS-TV, the best supplied feature station in the market, still is riding high with its "Late" and "Late Late Shows." WABC-TV, in the competitive feature struggle, has taken to "horror" nights. (WABC-TV's vidpix strip at 10:30 has been bitten into by the web.) WRCA has a number of feature strips, but with "Jack Paar Show" riding high, it's far less dependent on cinematics for programming.

The various station "images" are important for they spell out the potential customers for syndicators and possible slots for sponsors.

But there are other key facets of the nation's top market. They are:

1. Sponsor buys of syndication product are few and far between. Overall, vidpix in N. Y. is a vehicle for participations. There are very few openings on the web flagships, WCBS-TV and WRCA-TV, for first-run skeins. WABC-TV has more time open than the other two web o&o's, but the situation even on WABC-TV is tight. The program buys are in order for the few first-runners on WRCA-TV and WCBS-TV. But participations predominate on WABC-TV, and on the other outlets.

2. Consequence of the tight slotting situation on the web o&o's, particularly WCBS-TV, and WRCA-TV, is that prices of many first-run properties are beaten down. Series serving as participation vehicles hardly bring the same price as skeins sold directly to sponsors as program buys.

3. Features in the market don't seem as much affected by the tightened local schedule of the web o&o's. Despite Paar and what have you, WCBS-TV remains strongly entrenched with the "Late Show", which has a potential gross billing of about $60.000 weekly, exclusive of agency discounts. That cinematic showcase is practically sold out most of the time. WOR-TV, which recently replenished its first-run pix with a $1.000.000 buy from Screen Gems, shows no signs of relenting on its "Million Dollar Movie" format. The multi-exposure "MDM" format still commands sponsors and audiences.

Here are some operational highlights of metropolitan outlets:

While its prime syndicated slots will be contracted this fall, WABC-TV will remain firm in its feature programming periods. The pix slots are the Monday through Thursday "Night Show [illegible] at 11:15 p.m., with Friday and Saturday nights devoted to horror pix. There also will be a Sunday-night film and the 9 a.m. one-hour stripped feature showcase continues the next season.

WCBS-TV, despite its playoff of features, still has a cinematic library of 2.150 pix. Station telecasts 24 different features weekly. At the present rate of usage, taking into consideration the repeats, WCBS-TV feels it has sufficient pix for seven years. Recent innovation on pix sponsorship was the sole sponsorship by Schaefer Brewing Co. of four pic specials, which preempted the "Late Show."

WRCA-TV will continue its telefilm and feature format next season, without any marked changes. WPIX remains the most heavily programmed telefilm showcase in the seven-station market, buying a good portion of the available first-run product. In the daytime hours up to 3 p.m. next season, it will be an educational outlet for the N. Y. Board of Regents. WNTA-TV again plans to accent its "living tape" personality shows, a format which has won the NTA o&o outlet attention in the N. Y. market. WNEW-TV also uses telefilms and features quite heavily, but as part of its diversified program format, station also relies on taped shows.

That's about the shape of the N. Y. market in midsummer '59.

L.A. Hot on Syndication But Lukewarm on Features

By BOB CHANDLER

Los Angeles.

Los Angeles—and the same goes for any market with a multiplicity of indies—is hungry for syndicated product. Paradoxically, it's less interested in feature films. And perhaps causing that disinterest is a keen appreciation of the potential of vidtape.

KTTV, long a pacesetter among indie tv'ers, feels its position in the market has been hurt by the lack of enough good syndicated properties. Not only aren't there enough of them, the station feels, but quality hasn't improved in syndicated film shows for years, while network film standards have been raised appreciably over the days when there were as many syndicated film shows on the market as there were network telefilms.

KTTV remains the key telefilm buyer. KRCA, the NBC flagship, is second in the firstrun area, using plenty of syndicated shows in its 7-7:30 strip and after 10:30, though NBC's expansion into the later area may curtail its buying activities severely come fall. KTLA, the Paramount station, is still attempting to concentrate on live production, on the premise it can build quality programming off the coin accrued from syndicated sales of tapes of the shows. Premise has yet to be proven.

KABC, the ABC flagship, also concentrates on local live programming and is not a factor in the market. KNXT is like its sister station in New York, WCBS-TV, a feature film and public service operation when it comes to local programming. And KCOP, the Big Crosby-Ken Brown indie, concentrates its buying in the area of first-run travel-adventure shows and subsequent run product in other fields, including features. KHJ-TV, the RKO Teleradio outlet, buys big in the kiddie field but only sporadically in other syndicated programming. RKO furnishes its features.

On the feature film front, KNXT is top-dog, sitting pretty with the Paramount library. But other feature film outfits have found L.A. a hard sell. There are currently Screen Gems, United Artists and NTA packages still going begging for buyers. One reason is that in the late-night field, KNXT and KTTV, latter with its Metro library, are dominant. Another is that some station execs feel the Metro package didn't pay off for KTTV in terms of the size of the investment. A third is a feeling of "who needs 'em?"

Tape Factor

This latter factor is largely keyed to tape. The stations —at least the indies—have found that through tape, they can produce their own shows at a cost far less than they shell out for features and attract an audience that's comparable. KCOP's Tom Duggan is still a strong late-night draw, perhaps not so much in terms of a huge audience but in an SRO sponsorship situation. KHJ's Oscar Levant, who pre-tapes according to his mood and physical condition, is a strong contender for the station.

KTTV's toprated show, in spite of a schedule overladen with syndicated properties, is a local production, its own "Divorce Court," which Guild Films sells nationally for KTTV. Station is now in the tape business for fair, what with "Divorce Court," and NTA's "Peter Potter's Juke Box Jury" originating there, along with its own Paul Coates show, which it is syndicating on its own as a strip. Moreover, it's purchased the two Westinghouse-Ted Granik shows and is looking elsewhere.

KTLA, which has also set up its own distribution, hasn't clicked yet with any taped properties. It's tried the courtroom and musical routes, the later with a minimum of success and the former with some success locally but no exposure yet in other markets. Station, however, is stockpiling taped properties, some of which it hasn't even aired, in the belief that it's going to make a major dent on the market one of these days.

Tape's no millennium, as the L.A. stations have quickly discovered, but it can be a mighty big help. KTTV will net over $200.000 this year on sales of "Divorce Court," a potent factor in an overall profit & loss statement for the year. And a few occasional tape shows from other sources help in the struggle for enough programming for an indie. But the tape formula as a major aid to stations has yet to be found.

'Supply Adequate For Next 5 Years': Cincy

By JOE KOLLING

Cincinnati.

Cincy's three tv stations, each net affiliated and with bustling biz schedules, are at ease about fall programming.

What's to happen if no large groups of feature films are offered?

The supply is adequate for this market for the next five years, according to Roger B. Read, general manager of WKRC-TV, now using an average of 18 full lengths a week. Should that be exhausted, he points to syndicated reruns from CBS-TV.

Mortimer C. Watters has station programming in mind for his WCOP-TV, in the ABC-TV link, a la Jack Paar. "Most NBC stations carrying the Paar show," he says, "have requests for feature films drastically reduced. They're not bothered with public demand for feature films."

Robert E. Dunville, Crosley Broadcasting Corp. president, notes that at least one major producer is video taping programs for syndication. "It's only a question of a year or so before many shows will be available for video tape," he stated. His organization takes in three Ohio tv stations and WLW-A, Atlanta, and WLW-I, Indianapolis.

Telefilms in this market bring from $100 to $700, an average of $650 per title and syndicated half-hours from $100 to $600. Sponsors are mainly participation from the food and beverage fields

Are prices too high? "Yes, to attract full sponsorship at local level," said Dunville. According to Read there's a growing tendency to increase prices, which producers blame on increasing costs. From Watters: "Some prices are too high, most any station manager will always say."

A Dissent From Green Bay

By JAMES R. GAHAGAN

Milwaukee.

Some sharp criticism on syndicated programming and prices was voiced by Jack R. Gennaro, station manager of WFRV, Green Bay, Wisc., a NBC-TV affiliate.

Said Gennaro: "We find that there is too much mystery, too much adventure, and not enough quality syndicated westerns on the market today. In fact, I would say that only one out of 10 syndicated film shows today are the quality that our station wants on the air. We would like more diversified selections for our syndicated films. As always the prices are much too high for this market.

"One big reason why there is not more sponsorship on syndicated half-hours in this market is because we have to pay too high a price for the films. We are, therefore, required to go to second runs, or package deals with particular film companies, so that we may buy at a price advantage. This necessitates running a lot of the film as participating and never recapturing the money we've spent for them.

"We have paid as low as $15 for half-hour shows and as high as $125 in this market. Most shows are selling for $75 and $100 here. To be more realistic these shows should be selling more in the $50 to $75 range, so that we could attract the kind of sponsors we would like. I would guess that the syndicators are the people who are forcing local and regional advertisers to spots rather than to programs," Gennaro stated.

Those Syndicated Blockbusters Ain't What They Used To Be in Chi

By LES BROWN

Chicago.

Gone are those maniac days when every station in town was buying all the celluloid it could get, if only defensively, to keep it from the competition.

Film syndicators, even those with hot new product to peddle, will find this oversized four-station market a tough one to crack for the coming fall season. Not only do the station managements here feel they're amply supplied, or even overstocked, they've acquired through experience a few reservations about pictures for television as a programming staple. There will be some buying, of course, but it should prove anything but spirited.

To sum up the prospects briefly: WBBM-TV wants some strong titles to supplement its feature film library but isn't going to be interested in half-hour telefilms; WGN-TV, on the other hand, will be looking mainly at the 30-minute fare but only the cream of the crop, having plenty of filler on hand; WBKB and WNBQ will virtually stand pat. The last, for instance, has cut down its feature exhibition and has announced it will only stock new half hour series if they come in fully sponsored. That attitude, although extreme, points up a general unwillingness of Chi stations to speculate anymore. They're thinking more cautiously than ever before making celluloid investments.

Symptomatic of a growing disenchantment with feature films (except at WBBM-TV) is the fact that a number of them have been axed recently. WBNQ has deleted six shows and now is down to one feature a week, on Sunday evenings. With 70 features in stock, the NBC station feels no emergency. WGN-TV, the lone indie, is showing two a day but has withdrawn its Sunday evening feature and is considering lopping off its Monday night film for a live comedy show in the fall. And WBKB is dropping "Shock Theatre" (in this case, because of a shortage of product) on Saturday nights and is replacing it with "Cuban Winter Baseball" on video tape.

Discouragements

Behind these symptoms are some discouraging developments over the past year, the chief one being Jack Paar's incredible potency in the latenight arena against a trio of features. Consistently Paar has been doubling the combined ratings of his opposition. Not even WBBM-TV's 10-day blockbuster binge at the start of the year, to introduce the new Paramount package, was able to jar Paar from the ruling roost between 10:15 and midnight.

This situation, plus the development that features in every area seem to have reached a sets-in-use plateau, is creating no panic here over the news that the Hollywood vaults are near depletion. In any prime local periods, competing cinematics have been meeting head-on, and the effect of this has only been to divide the audience pie several ways.

With the singular exception of WBBM-TV's Saturday night feature, blockbuster shows ain't what they used to be. Reruns, the stations have found, frequently get ratings to compare with firstruns, so they're playing off what's on hand. The selling has been good, both on participating and single sponsor bases.

The particular problems of the stations have a bearing too on the negative revaluation of film in this market. As a result of greater network invasion of local time—particularly at the ABC station, when the daytime network was incepted—there are fewer choice timeslots available for the better and more costly half-hour series. All three network stations have a fair share of syndicated shows waiting in the can to plug any programming gaps. WBNQ last year dropped its 10 p.m. strip of half hour vidpix, including "Sheriff of Cochise" and "Death Valley Days," and is concentrating instead on off-network skein for late afternoon stripping. Already set for the coming season are the syndicated editions of "Life of Riley" and "Jim Bowie."

Also worth considering as a factor in the foreseen telefilm recession here this fall is the fact that at least two outlets—WBBM-TV and WGN-TV—are preoccupied with the station image, and it's clear that no awards or citations obtain from grinding film. Both stations will be accentuating live production next fall, and both seem eager to create shows for video tape syndication.

WGN-TV, which as an indie must needs program a quantity of film, has indicated it is looking only for "Class A" product. The station has overbought half-hour films in the past and got stung on some expensive ones, and so has plenty to play off until 1960 and is proceeding gingerly with new buys. The Trib station so far has scheduled only five fresh syndicated properties for the coming term: two firstruns, "Cannonball" and "Lockup," and three firsts-off-the-nets, "Air Power," "You Are There" and "I Married Joan." Not counted are a raft of oldtime comedies and cartoons, which will be slotted daytimes.

Syndicated video taped shows came late to this market but interest in them appears to be growing. At least half a dozen of them will be beamed here this fall, including "Ding Dong School," "Mark Wilson's Magic Circus" and "Divorce Court" on WGN-TV; the previously mentioned "Cuban Baseball" on WBKB; and "Peter Potter's Juke Box Jury" on WBBM-TV. WGN-TV will also continue as Chicago outlet for the shows developed for syndication by New York sister-station WPIX.

Back to feature films, WBBM-TV, with both the Paramount and MGM packages, has taken over topdog status as local tv exhibitor. Station is getting over $1,000 per minute spot in its prime Saturday night feature, which still gets blockbuster ratings in or near the 30s. Running three features per day on weekdays, the last one starting at midnight, WBBM-TV grinds out 1,100 full-lengthers a year from a library containing only around 1,800 titles. However, by rerunning the films in different time periods each time around, the station has been able to get good mileage out of its supply.

The CBS outlet last season dropped a long-running lineup of local shows starting at 10:15 p.m. to get an equal start with the Paar show, and has improved its ratings considerably thereby, although not enough to make a real dent in the NBC ratings.

Tape Shows Competition For Features in Detroit

By FRED TEW

Detroit.

Tape shows may have an important place in Detroit tv stations programming plans for next fall. It appears that in at least two situations they figure to compete directly with feature film fare, heretotore the bellwether of late-evening viewing here.

While details naturally are lacking at this early date, it is apparent that WWJ, WXYZ and WJBK are disenchanted with feature films. The latter two are itching to try some new late evening formats. WWJ is relying on the Jack Paar show to maintain its high viewer interest but is thinking about tape substitutes should that interest begin to wane. Only CKLW remains enamored of feature films for late evening viewing.

In a survey of local attitudes toward tv films, profound disagreement over the value of feature films was uncovered in discussions with toppers at WXYZ, CKLW and WWJ. For the second consecutive year, WJBK officials declined to participate in the survey. However, plans of the Storer outlet here were obtained from reliable sources.

More than any other local station, WJBK is committed to a policy of trying taped shows in late evening is an effort to break up the large blocks of viewers devoted to WWJ's Jack Paar Show, WXYZ's Soupy Sales Show, and the feature film offerings of CKLW.

WXYZ and CKLW will obtain tape equipment shortly. WXYZ expects its tape machines to be in use this month. It plans to tape commercials and live local shows. Tentative plans are to syndicate one or two of the local programs, undoubtedly one of them being the Soupy Sales Show.

Sponsors Balk at Higher Tab

Spokesmen for WWJ, WXYZ and CKLW agreed that film prices, both syndicated and feature, are stable. WWJ amplified that by saying that distributors' asking prices have been higher but the station has "found i necessary to resist these prices simply because sponsors are unable to absorb the higher costs. This resistance on the part of the buyer has caused the prices to remain fairly stable." CKLW, in stating that the stable prices continue to be "much too expensive," added: "Only such sponsors as tobacco companies and breweries can afford the syndicated series on a regional basis."

In regard to sponsorship patterns, CKLW said that the half-hour syndicated shows attract a few local jewelers, furniture stores and building-supply firms on an individual or co-sponsorship basis, while feature films attract a wide variety of jewelers, auto dealers, remodelers and appliance companies. WWJ said that "full sponsorship continues to be quite rare. Demand for alternate-week sponsorship is on the same level as last year, and one minute participation continues to increase."

The three stations said that the supply of syndicated films is adequate. WWJ added: "Strip programming has proven very successful and more films are needed in this area. Only a few good series are available for stripping [illegible] this situation should be remedied with time. We are looking for network shows with a proven track record and an adequate backlog of films (usually five years or more) such as 'The Life of Riley,' 'Mr. Adams and Eve.' etc.

WWJ's spokesman continued: "It is not really a question of syndicated film material. In many cases, the station prefers to program a first-run-off network package, that is a proven audience success ("I Love Lucy," "The Honeymooners," etc.) rather than a 'fresh' first-run, second-rate syndicated series."

Asked if there was a need for more diversity in syndicated film subject matter, CKLW's spokesman said: "There is no need for more diversity. We feel producers have kept abreast of the cycles with western films, the hottest item at the moment. Previous cycles featured whodunits and situation comedies." However, WWJ's spokesman disagreed, saying there is a great need for more diversity because "syndicated film companies still are playing 'follow-the-leader.' Some producers, of course, have been willing to risk their money on new or unique program ideas, and some companies have come up with some offbeat program series. But most are sticking to the tried and true formula causing the syndicated offerings to lack the needed balance."

In regard to feature films, CKLW, which has the most local feature film listings, reported: "Our feature film backlog is more than sufficient. Because of our programming we are probably the only station able to make that statement in the Detroit area. However, we always are in the market for good features at a reasonable price." WWJ's spokesman said: "Although we have not purchased a feature film package in more than two years, the station has more than enough material for its present and projected feature film programming needs."

Asked what they would program if no large new group of film features are released to tv, the spokesmen answered as follows: WXYZ: "Some of the many excellent programs now current around the country which are certain to be taped. Some are available now, such as "Divorce Court," "Cuban Baseball," "Paul Coates," etc." CKLW: "By the time our large feature backlog runs dry, tape and syndicated film will undoubtedly supply a great measure of programming but we are not anticipating any difficulty in respect to features for several years." WWJ: "With the apparent lessening of public interest in feature films, we would not be hampered in programming if no large group of films are released for television. In the daily late-evening time periods where independent and CBS-affiliated stations (WJBK) normally program feature films, NBC station (WWJ) basks in the high ratings enjoyed by Jack Paar. This leaves only the late-evening weekend film programs which we can more than adequately cover with existing product. The price of feature film is out of proportion to its value," the WWJ spokesman continued. "The pricing situation has contributed greatly to making the feature film unattractive as a station program property. With the exception of weekend, late-evening feature film programs, WWJ is eliminating first-run feature film packages in its plans for the fall."

Baltimore's Well-Fed Picture, With Everyone Seemingly Content

By LOU CEDRONE

Baltimore.

Overall picture is still a cheerful, well-fed one here, with reps of all three outlets sounding a note of contentment.

TV-Film wise they're happy but "still looking" and feature-wise, they've still got a lot of coal to burn before they need to look elsewhere for fuel.

All three stations, WJZ-TV, WMAR-TV and WBAL-TV, are still heavy with features they haven't shown and it will be several years before all that have been purchased will be seen at least once.

Heaviest in the feature department is still WJZ-TV which recently added to library with 143 Screen Gem package. This, in addition to MGM, RKO and UA titles, represents a heavy investment and while it has paid off handsomely for the station, indications are that it will do more of the same.

Station has topped other two stations in ratings in 12 of last 17 months and feature films are credited with having played a big role.

And, though they've played many of the biggest items, there are more to come, said a rep, who added that they won't have to worry about a shortage of Hollywood product "for a long while."

At other two stations, picture is about the same. WMAR-TV is still playing it slow, introducing one new feature each week with no indication that it'll change the routine.

WBAL-TV is probably best stocked with unseen product. It still has a heavy backlog of unveiled Warner Bros. films and has not yet begun to dip into the Paramount package which is big and heavy. Station has least to worry about and spokesman for station said they are not too concerned about what will happen even when all these are shown.

"I believe," he said, "that the Hollywood film will be replaced or at least supplemented by specials made for tv showings and packages of bigger regulars like 'Playhouse 90.' These will be and some are already being sold on a syndication basis to stations and with the gradual but inevitable depletion of the film feature, the tv-made 'feature' will take its place," he said.

Like the feature film, video tape seems here to stay. With WJZ-TV already in possession of two recorders and both WMAR-TV and WBAL-TV on order for one each, tape is destined to play a big part in the coming years.

Local pioneer in this field is WJZ-TV which has been using video tape recorder for at least 18 months.

"We're completely happy with it," said an exec, "as our use of it shows. We've taped our editorials, musical shows, commercials, announcements and spots for late showing. It's given us great mobility, more than we could ever have had before."

All three stations seem happy with sponsor turnout. "We're flooded," says one. "We've got all we want," says the second. "We're very satisfied," says the third. And as any viewer of the late showings can tell you, what they say seems to hold water.

They're not too concerned about acquiring new film series. General attitude is that they have pretty much what they want but are "always open to another good buy because that's the nature of the business."

One outlet has series it hasn't "even used yet because we don't need it right now."

The 4-Station Minneapolis Pictures; Some Opposites and Paradoxes

By BOB REES

Minneapolis.

In this Twin Cities market with its four commercial stations, KSTP-TV, WCCO-TV and WTCN-TV, affiliates of NBC, CBS and ABC, respectively, and National Telefilm Associate's non-network KMSP-TV, not to mention the educational station, KTCA-TV, the situation with regards to film presents some far opposites and paradoxes.

KSTP-TV, which shares with WCCO-TV the distinction of being the largest and most prosperous of the quartet and which, in fact, is one of the nation's top independent video operations, has attained its enormous success with practically no attention whatsoever to feature films in its programming. And the coming fall and winter will find that programming sans any such theatre feature pictures, but comparatively heavy reliance on syndicated half-hour telefilms.

WCCO-TV also, comparatively, will be devoting little time to the feature pictures.

On the other hand, emphasizing feature films in their programming since being taken over by new owners, Life-Time's WTCN-TV and NTA's KMSP-TV, have been making enormous billings gains.

As to be expected and what's undoubtedly also the case elsewhere tape in this market will be cutting an increasingly important programming swath. Two of the stations, WCCO-TV and KMSP-TV, already have installed the equipment at costs of from $50,000 to $60,000 and KSTP-TV situation is planning its installation.

A survey of the local situation re the 1959 film fall and winter outlook follows:

All four stations are well-heeled—practically bought up and with large backlogs—as far as their 1959-60 film requirements are concerned. The two feature picture stations' libraries are sufficient to meet about two years' needs even if 1959, 1960 and 1961 find no more theatre oldie features being offered for sale during that period.

Amount of programming devoted to films—telefilms and feature pictures—runs from as little as 5% in KSTP-TV's case to as high as 88% for non-network KMSP-TV.

WTCN-TV estimates its investment in feature films to aggregate around $1,500,000. Investment in syndicated telefilms totals up to $500,000 in KSTP-TV and WCCO-TV instances.

This is only one of relatively few cities in the U.S. with four or more commercial tv stations and because of resultant stiff competition the costs of both telefilms and feature pictures are excessive. The syndicated telefilms are costing the stations from $500 to $600 each. The stations feel that $400 would be a fair price.

Feeling among the stations is that there's plenty of room for improvement and diversity in telefilms. Generally, however, there's reasonable satisfaction with the fare's quality. As far as feature films go, there are more poor than good ones, but when large packages are bought that's to be expected. Both feature pictures and syndicated telefilms command topnotch national and local sponsorship of all varieties.

KSTP-TV

Stanley E. Hubbard KSTP operation, which started small, now occupies two city blocks (tv and radio stations under one roof) and in physical equipment alone represents a $4,900,000 investment. It's regarded as one of the nation's largest and most prosperous independent tv-radio stations. Hubbard had the vision to foresee video's potential from the outset and his station was the first to launch tv programs. He's strong for telefilms and anti-feature pictures. He has prospered mightily on the theory that feature films are for theatres where they can be presented to so much better advantage and, generally, will be much superior in quality. His programming includes what Hubbard believes to be the 12 best half-hour syndicated telefilms in the market, on from 9:30 to 10 two nights a week and from 10:30 to 11 five nights a week.

WCCO-TV

CBS affiliate, WCCO, largely owned by the Cowles and Ridder interests—the same interests that own the Minneapolis (Cowles) and St. Paul (Ridder) only daily newspapers, also is an enormously successful and profitable operation—probably sharing the number one Twin Cities' position with KSTP-TV, if it isn't actually the top in size of its facilities and total audience. Its radio station, which claims a larger audience than all of the other Twin Cities' audio stations combined, occupies separate quarters.

Station uses eight feature pictures a week, buying them in packages in the open market. They are 20th-Fox, Columbia and Universal releases. The library of some 14 packages comprises about 500 features and the investment amounts to approximately $500,000. It's a sufficient backlog to see the station through the 1959-60 fall and winter, according to F. Von Konynenburg, general-manager.

Top features are presented Sunday afternoons in a show called "Command Performance" that has garnered high ratings. Some of the best films are rerun about every ssix months.

WCCO-TV programming is 60% network, 25% on films and 15% live. Its syndicated half-hour telefilm presentations average around 23 per week and are a mixture of first and second runs.

"The trend with us will be with tape and with the development of local live formats," says Van Konynenburg. "We find that the public will respond to a program depending upon its appeal and quality, regardless of whether it's network, feature film, syndicated telefilm or locally produced, but we believe it's to our best interests to expand our own locally produced live shows.

WTCN-TV

ABC affiliated WTCN was acquired by Time-Life in May, 1957, and lost no time in going to town in a big way in feature picture programming. Under the present ownership-management it has shown a 52% gain in gross income, with the "selling" of the feature films and their quality given considerable credit for the big increase in business.

The new ownership bought the complete Paramount package of feature films, Warner Bros. and some of the M-G-M and United Artists releases to video, investing more than $1,500,000 in a library that now numbers more than 1,200 such pictures. Then it started exploiting and advertising these pictures as "Movie Spectaculars" in a way that would do the most showmanship-minded of theatres proud and actually causing much consternation in exhibitor ranks hereabouts.

The station presents 11 feature films a week—five in the mornings, seven at 10 o'clock and one Friday late, late show. Morning "Spectaculars" never are repeats of the night before pictures. There are some repeats of top pictures, however, about every six months.

WTCN-TV's investment in telefilms totals about a half-million dollars, according to station manager Bill Hoffman. There are 10 of these half-hour syndicated film shows weekly, four of them reruns and six offered for the first time here..

The percentage of programming on film will remain at from 10 to 12% next fall and winter, says Hoffman. Network shows account for 60% of the programming at this station. Its only locally produced shows are one for children at 5 p.m. and news shows at 11:45 a.m. and 9:45 p.m. daily.

KMSP-TV

National Telefilm Associates non-network KMPS-TV station, under vice president-general manager Don Swartz's able direction, started with a feature picture programming bang when its present owners took over in Nov., 1957, and it still gives a measure of prominence to the feature films. But its programming expansion has been in the direction of much other film and locally produced shows, especially since its tape equipment installation late last year.

The gain in advertising revenue here, amounting to 300% over what it was at the end of the previous ownership a year and a half ago, is considered remarkable.

Recently, with considerable rating success, the station added six NTA taped in New York and now syndicated around the nation 30-minuted taped telefilm shows. These are the Mike Wallace interviews five nights a week and once-a-week Bishop Sheen, Henry Morgan, Alexander King, "Jukebox Jury" and "People's Choice." The Mike Wallace interviews, Henry Morgan and Alexander King now compete with the late-at-night Jack Paar network show on KSTP-TV and considerable inroads on the latter's audience are claimed.

"We're going to town on tape," asserts Swartz. "Our taped shows are 80% sold to topdrawer national and local advertisers."

U.S. Telepix Impact Abroad

List of telefilm sales abroad shows the wide distribution achieved by American telepix. Only three companies, MCA TV, National Telefilm Associates and Guild, declined to list their shows either being telecast abroad or sold for telecasting shortly. In many markets, MCA TV shows sold abroad were obtained from other sources, and are listed. The absence of NTA and Guild from the rundown doesn't significantly alter the value of the chart.

Fremantle, the distribution organization solely in the foreign field, represents many telefilm houses abroad. Among them is CBS Films, which Fremantle represents in Italy, Mexico and Central American countries. CBS Films shows sold in those countries are handled by Fremantle. Co-productions made in England, in many instances, are tabulated under the banner of the American telefilm firm. Most theatrical cartoons are not included in the chart. Definitely excluded are feature films sold abroad to tv. The chart represents virtually the only common foreign product entered into by most of the American telefilm distributors.

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week nine different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting, competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 150 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

MGM-TV Opening Studio In N.Y. for Com'l Films

MGM-TV will open a midtown N. Y. studio next month for industrial and commercial filming. Studio, located on Fifth Ave., will augment Metro's studio on the Coast, and give the subsid a N. Y. studio base for servicing of clients.

Construction and equipment plans for the new studio are proceeding under the direction of Bill Gibbs, director of industrial and commercial film division of MGM-TV. Gibbs recently moved his headquarters from the Coast to N. Y. Elmer Wilschke will be in charge of commercial and industrial film production at the MGM Coast studio.

syndicators. The average television station in the U.S. today devotes approximately 58% of its program time to telecasting film programs, both feature films and syndication films. These programs account for more than 55% of the total audience reached by these stations. And none of these figures includes any network programs on film.

The subject of program costs also is an important factor contributing to the popularity of syndicated shows. During the past several years the cost of television film production, as well as distribution, have increased about 40%, possibly even more. Yet programs are being sold today at the same level that they were even six years ago. This has been made possible only because the number of markets has increased both domestically and in foreign distribution.

How long we can hold the cost line is impossible to determine. However, it is important to remember that where prices for practically everything has increased during the past five years, program syndicators are supplying better programming today at about the same price levels which prevailed five and six years ago.

Finally, I would like to correct some misconceptions concerning pricing practices in program syndication. Most people think prices are arrived at primarily on the basis of television sets in a given market, combined with a rule of thumb which says, "Let's peg the price at whatever the traffic will bear."

That is not so. There is a much more complex and orderly and logical procedure in program pricing. Among the factors that determine price are the cost of the program's production; set circulation; retail buying indices; freight loadings, stratification and income levels of a given market; and the standing of the market in relation to New York City, considering that metropolitan market as 100%. These factors are weighed very carefully before a price can be fixed.

Syndication has come a long way since its early days in radio broadcasting. It is gaining in importance in today's television economy. The future for syndication? Let's wait and see.

'Stromboli' Added To 'Mid-'50 Movies' Roster

"Stromboli," the Ingrid Bergman starrer directed by Roberto Rossellini, initially released theatrically in '50, has been added to Show Corp. of America's "Mid-'50 Movies" package.

Other pix added to the package, which now totals 18 titles, include "Death of a Scoundrel," starring Zsa Zsa Gabor and George Sanders; "Back from Eternity," Anita Ekberg, Robert Ryan and Rod Steiger; and "While the City Sleeps," Rhonda Fleming, Dana Andrews.

Wolper's Soviet Segs

Hollywood, July 7.

David L. Wolper will go to Russia to interview two top Russian scientists for his television special, "Race for Space," currently being packaged.

Producer reported he received Soviet permission to interview A. N. Nesmeyanov, head of USSR Academy of Science.

Rank TV Aide in N.Y. For Wrather Huddles

London, July 7.

Connery Chappell, assistant head of production for the Rank Organization, flies to New York tomorrow (8) for huddles on vidpix with the Jack Wrather setup. He'll be carrying a couple of episodes from "Interpol Calling," the skein of 30-minuters being shot in partnership with Wrather at Pinewood Studios.

Rumors have been flying hot and strong since a temporary halt was called on "Interpol Calling" production a short while back, some suggesting that Wrather would settle for less than the full 39. Investigations here, however, confirm that the deal isn't in jeopardy and that the haitus was called at the Rank outfit's own instigation so that story formats could be eyed again. It's understood that it was decided to up the action content for the U.S. and that the episodes Chappell takes to N.Y. will show the result of this policy revision.

'Good TV Shows Don't Just Spring Up Like Toadstools'

By JOHN L. SINN
(President, Ziv TV)

Before the age of electronics there used to be an old Indian method of finding out who was approaching. It was simply keeping your "ear to the ground."

Today, in television, it is necessary not only to keep your ear to the ground, but to radiate electronic antennas in every direction to keep your ear and eye on the pulse of the public.

The interests and concerns of the public are of vital importance to Ziv. We feel that the public is a partner and constantly seek to discover just what intrigues and excites him. His interests are our interests. We know at Ziv that good shows just don't spring up like toadstools after a rain. We must search for the best talent available, the best story material, the best techniques in production, then couple these basic ingredients with a fresh approach and a stimulating important concept. Then we have the beginning of a film series that should be of great interest to our unseen partner, the viewing public.

Next season, we are presenting three new series, "Space," "Challenge" and "Lock-Up." Each series offers a new, exciting direction in television films.

The basic idea for "Space," which debuts on the CBS-TV network in September, was taken from the headlines of daily newspapers. Our first conferences followed the launching of our "Explorer" missiles. We went directly to the Department of Defense and received their cooperation and the aid of the Research and Develop-

THIS IS IT...

It's a matter of taste. But the fact remains that residuals are the egg in the beer that just about everybody wants! That's why the smart money bets on film—then you're ready for reruns, syndications. Ready for anything!

Actually, film does three things for you . . . 3 big important things:

1. Gives you the high-polish commercials you've come to expect . . . fluff-free . . . sure.
2. Gives you coverage with full pre-test opportunities.
3. Retains residual values.

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week nine different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting, competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 150 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

ment arms of all of the armed services especially the Air Force. Ziv spent more than $100,000 in research for this series before we went into production.

Lew Rachmil, who will produce the series about expeditions to outer space, is a veteran of motion pictures and an expert on this subject. William Lundigan, one of the most popular actors in both television and movies, will star in the series. Our writers are top caliber people especially schooled in the field of science.

Television film makers cannot live in ivory towers and just imagine what product will be successful. You cannot direct your efforts to the specialized likes and desires of a small segment of the people. We know that almost everyone will watch a television series that has dramatic impact and timeliness. This is the type of product that we constantly strive for.

"Challenge," another new series we will launch in the fall over the NBC network, is helmed by one of our most creative producers Ivan Tors, who has filmed "Sea Hunt" now in its second year, and "Science Fiction Theater." "Challenge" will dramatically portray the physical and mental factors which make a man of courage stand out above the rest. The series will depict unusual men in tense and exciting situations all over the world. It will dramatize the story of bull fighters, racing car drivers, champion skiers and other vital and extraordinary human beings. It will attempt to find out what makes them tick. George Nader portrays a doctor who travels over the globe to observe these men in action and report his findings to the Defense Department. This is an impact drama that should be of tremendous interest to the tv public.

Our creative teams have been active and producing new trends and ideas for 10 years. We deal in products for the networks and syndication, because both are equally important. Returning to the networks for Ziv for a second year will be "Bat Masterson" and "Tombstone Territory."

Our new syndication entry is "Lock-Up" starring MacDonald Carey, which is based on the real-life cases of Herbert Maris, a lawyer who specializes in helping people who have been convicted of crimes. The dramatic material will come from Maris' files.

We at Ziv constantly seek new material for our film series. We have brought to the tv screen best sellers, such as "I Led Three Lives" and recently purchased "Klondike Fever," a story about Alaskan gold rush days.

"Sea Hunt" was and is the first successful dramatization of skin-diving as a tv series. It is currently the number one syndicated show in the nation.

"Men of Annapolis" and "West Point" are two Ziv series that concentrate on bringing the fascinating story of the naval and military academies to the tv public.

Four years ago, Ziv introduced "Science Fiction Theater," the first show to make use of scientific fact and fiction stories.

But paramount in our minds, when we plan new series, we think of the public, our partners.

We strive to produce quality products that will excite and interest the viewing public. They are a real part of our creative team, for their interests are our interests, their concern, our concern.

Vic Whitlock Named ABC Films Story Ed

ABC Films has set up a story department in New York with writer Vic Whitlock as story editor.

Move is in line with prexy Henry Plitt's belief that sound scripting is the most important part of any film series. Plitt joined the firm early this year, was previously prexy of the Paramount Gulf theatre chain in the southwest.

Whitlock, former story editor with Ralph Edwards and Warner Bros., will write 10 of the 39 segments scheduled for the new ABC series, "Counterthrust," starring Tod Andrews and lensed in Manila.

Paul Harrison Exits SG To Set Up Own Shop

Paul Harrison has resigned as executive producer at Screen Gems to form Paul Harrison Productions as a television production company and a still unnamed company to function in the motion picture production field. Harrison will be associated with four others in pix, but will operate alone in the television field.

First two projects on his tv agenda are situation comedies, "Now Hear This," projected comedy about three naval air cadets, and "Love That Channel," series about a woman who owns a television station. He's huddling now on financing for pilots and expects to set a production date by the end of the week.

Also on his calendar are packaging of a pair of live musical specials for networks next season.

Ziv Sales Up

Ziv reports that sales and renewals for syndicated shows for the first six months of this year are running 34% higher than for the comparable period a year ago.

Paced by the new "Lock-Up" series, now sold in 125 markets, other series chalking up high sales are "Bold Venture," "Sea Hunt," "Highway Patrol," and "Mackenzie's Raiders," according to Ziv.

'59 Will Be Remembered As YEAR OF THE BIG BREAK-THROUGH

By EARL RETTIG

(President, California National Productions)

This is the most dynamic year in the history of syndicated television film series. By any yardstick—sales, quality, new programs, range of material, promotion techniques, competition or ratings — '59 activity started with and continues to hold a record-breaking pace.

For example, California National Productions grossed as much in this year's first 15 weeks as in the entire first six months of 1958, the year that far surpassed CNP's previous alltime high. The question is, where do we go from here? All the signs still point upward. At the outset of '58, there were some pretty reliable indications that syndicators were entering their most prosperous era — and we said so in the public prints. It wasn't crystal ball stuff but rather a sober appraisal of all pertinent data. Whereupon, CNP proceeded to increase its annual billings by 80%. Now, with equal discernment and objectivity, and in view of the first six months' results, we anticipate an even higher volume of sales when the '59 books are closed.

Every so often one hears talk about money "down the drain" on unsuccessful pilot films; there's also frequent argument about the relative merits of westerns, or comedy, or mysteries, science-fiction, adventure, etc. The trouble is that both topics are psychologically linked.

At CNP, we choose not to shoot a pilot merely on the hunch that it may be a big favorite riding with the herd over this season's fashionable range. We rather base our selections for new series on the much more solid basis of dramatic and entertainment values which have and will hold up in any season and over the years. Certainly we appreciate the impact of current events on the public taste. However, a show must have an imaginative story line, a talented cast and expert production to meet our standards. Jumping on the bandwagon of what is purported to be the latest fad in viewer-preference may well be the chief reason for so many pilots failing to grow up to be series.

Although at this writing CNP has been fortunate in having the first two of its series product slim that the Japanese Finances Minister will increase the quota for the fiscal year 1960.

The Japanese tv fan likes adventures, comedies and mysteries. Westerns are not too much in demand. So this writer was in a good position on his first trip to Nippon for the Schubert company, with such varied product as "TV Reader's Digest," "Mr. & Mrs. North," "Topper," "White Hunter" and "Crossroads" in his portfolio.

An indication of the size of tv in Japan is that Tokyo and Osaka have six tv stations. Only cities in the world to surpass this number are New York and Los Angeles.

In Japan, which has such great respect for "face" and reputation, a business can be started without a firm conviction of success. It was pointed out to me that the owners of the Osaka TV outlets began their operations with the belief that they would lose money. Results, of course, were very different.

Japan is the only country with an educational tv station set up on a pure commercial basis. This is Nihon Educational Television (NET), Tokyo, established by film companies, newspapers and publishers.

Another indication of the size of video in Nippon is that the industry employs close to 14,000 persons, exclusive of talent.

There are 2,000,000 sets, with this number increasing rapidly.

But American telefilm men doing business here can't forget that the most widely-viewed programs in Japan—the U. S.-made shows—command the lowest prices.

The Aussie Market

Sydney.

TV is booming in Australia. That's the overall feeling I had in June on my visit there—my third to that country in the last 12 months.

Before commenting further on the Aussie tele scene, let me recap briefly the short-but-swift history of TV Down Under.

The first commercial telecast was made there in late 1956, over TVN in Sydney. Soon afterwards, ATN, its commercial rival, went on the air. In Melbourne, two other commercial stations, GTV and HSV, soon were operating. In that year, a third outlet, ABN, was started in Sydney. It was owned by the Commonwealth Government as ABV, which followed as its Melbourne counterpart.

The Government stations are non-commercial, and according to Colonel Charles Moses, the head of the Australian Broadcasting Commission, it is never the intention that they become commercial.

While in late 1956 Sydney and Melbourne had a total of about 35,000 sets, the total receivers licensed in New South Wales and Victoria by the end of last April was 530,000.

Late last year, additional station licenses were approved by the Government, as follows: Queensland: BTQ, QTB and non-commercial ABQ; South Australia: ADS, NWS and non-commercial ABS; West Australia: TVW and non-commercial ABW; Tasmania: TVT and non-commercial ABT.

At the time the above licenses were granted, a stipulation was made that the commercial stations in Perth, Western Australia, and Hobart, Tasmania, would be completely independent of any other commercial stations as regards to programming and advertising sales. Result: Possibility for commercial stations to sell four-city network time and buy four-city network programs, while non-commercial Australian Broadcasting Commission can buy programs for six cities.

The stations are racing to get on the air and all are expected to start telecasting between August and the end of December. Natural result of the Government's permitting the stations to get together was that they did so, although in some cases there was different ownership. The new networks:

TCN Sydney; HSV Melbourne; ADS Adelaide; BTQ Brisbane; ATN Sydney; GTV Melbourne; NWS Adelaide; QTQ Brisbane.

The two nets have become very competitive in the purchasing of foreign product and in fighting for sponsor support. In the past, most overseas programs have been purchased on a two-city basis, i.e.: Sydney-Melbourne, but a four-city deal soon will be the most popular way of conducting business. Prices being paid for product are interesting. For good average American half-hour series, the prices range from $300 to $700 on a two-city basis. At present, Brisbane-Adelaide prices are 30 to 40% of those paid in Sydney-Melbourne deals.

At this time, however, it is not easy to make four-city sales with syndicated product because the new stations about to start will only telecast four to five hours daily as opposed to an average of 10 hours for those in Sydney and Melbourne.

The first buys being made by the stations just starting are those shows currently obtaining high ratings in Sydney and Melbourne. However, let me underline the fact that purchases in the future will be on a four-city basis.

Aussie TV is still expanding. The Government has made moves which will result in video service extending to 13 additional areas in four states. It is a fair guess that there will be only one commercial station and one non-commercial outlet permitted in theese areas.

Technically, TV Down Under is tops. With a 625-line system, the image is the best in the world. Stations are well-outfitted with fine modern equipment from the U.S., Italy and Germany as well as England, and there already has been heavy investment in tape machines.

All product is sold to the stations directly. This system has worked well to date and to the general satisfaction of all sponsors.

Many U.S. telefilm producer-distributor firms, including Screen Gems and ITC, have opened offices in Australia, or are planning to do so. NBC, which has invested in a station there, is reported to be considering establishing a branch there. Other syndicators have representatives or agents in Australia.

There is much talk of a third commercial channel in Sydney and Melbourne within the next two years. Naturally, there is a great deal of speculation as to who will receive licenses, and it may be an opportunity for further investment overseas by England and America. At any rate, if and when this third commercial station starts in these cities, U.S. tv film companies can expect still more revenue from this market.

Russel Hayden, ABC Dicker 'Peacemakers'

Hollywood, July 7.

Producer Russel Hayden is in N.Y. for meetings with ABC Films prexy Henry Plitt regarding a projected new telefilm series "The Peacemakers," a western.

"Peacemakers" would be shot in Phoenix, Ariz., where Hayden did "26 Men," also distributed by ABC Films. While in N.Y., Hayden also expects to complete negotiations for the release of "Sorority Mother," an independent theatrical feature.

Being 'Small' in the Telefilm Free-For-All Has Its Virtues

By HERMAN RUSH
(Pres., Flamingo Telefilm Sales)

If there is any single factor which makes the "small" film company unique on the television scene, it is the mixture of problems which size alone brings into being.

Television is BIG business—an industry of big companies—big thinking—big investments—and big risks. There is no "small" way to do business in an industry which stretches from coast-to-coast and requires an investment of many hundreds of thousands of dollars for every project.

As a result, there really are no "small" companies in tv today. There are, however, young companies, devoid of the mammoth resources available to tv film concerns which are subsidiaries of movie giants, mammoth booking agencies, or gigantic networks. As the president of such a young company, I am acutely aware of the advantages and luxuries in which my bigger competitors can relax. At times I even envy them and their tremendous reserve energy through the cash, catalog and power of their parent companies.

Yet, I am equally aware that there are distinct advantages to "smallness" — advantages which outweigh those enjoyed by the film subsidiaries of show business giants.

What they have—we can get. What we have, they would be hard put to duplicate!

The "small" film company is limited in the degree of risk it can undertake. In protecting its own limited funds, it protects those of the purchaser of its films. The small company has less product to offer each season—but it is carefully selected product.

It is moreover, "freely chosen" product. There is no necessity for the small, independent, company to try to profitably utilize old, unprofitable, product from the parent company's vaults.

Moreover, the "small" film company must be carefully attuned to the needs and problems of the "small" station and the regional advertiser. Such a company cannot afford to "throw into syndication" programs designed for, but unsuccessful in achieving, network status.

Benefits of Merger

Fortunately, this is an era when diversification is recognized as an excellent business practise. The healthy, aggressive film company today can, through mergers, consolidations or amalgamations take advantage of resources otherwise unavailable. Moreover, under the aegis of diversification, a fortunate concern like Flamingo can become a closely knit partner of superb production, including commercial and industrial production sources (in our case, Pyramid Productions and Transfilm).

Having recently achieved precisely this arrangement—through the merger of Flamingo, Pyramid and Transfilm into the Buckeye Corp.—we are now in a unique position to enjoy the unusual and rich advantages of our corporate youth and comparative smallness.

Our distributing arm is blessed with a voice in program development and production. This enables us, on the one hand, to see to it that the needs and wishes of stations and sponsors are satisfied with products tailor-made and, on the other hand, to counsel our production associates regarding current market trends.

Our relationship with Pyramid, too, frees us from the curse of so many small concerns—the necessity to rush helter-skelter, every few months, in search of product to maintain a constant flow of sales. The need for regularity of sales is a vital one, for overhead is fixed and constant. But the quality of available product is not at all constant. With our production partner to provide our own material we are free to pick and choose, accepting only the cream from the open market.

In short, we feel healthy with the blessings of combined production, distribution and financing—the great necessities of this big business of tv—and, at the same time, fortunate in being a "small" young concern.

We see distinct advantages, which we would enjoy, in being a "big" company. But we see equally distinct advantages in being a "small" company. For, this is an era when only the "middle-sized" company—too big to give proper attention to customers' needs and too small to be able to employ the risky "sawed off shotgun spray" approach—is at a disadvantage.

But, in the long run, the unique advantage which any film company—big or small—enjoys over its competition is its personnel. Where there is creativity, aggressiveness, eagerness, and a wealth of coast-to-coast contact and friendship, a company is in a unique and wonderful position. Where these elements are lacking, a company doesn't stand a chance.

REP'S FULL HOUSE; FILMASTER SHIFTS

Hollywood, July 7.

Filmaster Inc., for the past four years a tenant at Gross-Krasne's California Studios, has moved to Republic. Move gives Rep a full house, with Four Star Films, Jack Webb and Filmaster as tenants.

Principal reason for the move, according to Filmaster prexy Bob Stabler, is for expansion purposes. Company, which lost the production assignments on "Gunsmoke" and "Have Gun, Will Travel," at the same time has picked up "Death Valley Days" from McCann-Erickson and "Trouble shooters" from Meridian as below-the-line duties.

Moreover, ABC Films has an option on its own "Carter's Eye" series, and Filmaster, with Nat Perrin as v.p. in charge of production, will also undertake several pilots of its own.

signed for network broadcast, our primary interest remains in syndication at the regional and local levels. To meet the demands of our clients for additional programming and services from networks, stations and advertisers, we have undertaken expansions in our product availabilities, promotion, press and merchandising, along with our selling forces in the NBC Television Films and Victory Program Sales divisions.

Currently before the CNP cameras on the MGM lot in Culver City is "Not For Hire," an action-drama series starring Ralph Meeker, and "Philip Marlowe," starring Philip Carey. With the tentative title of "Pony Express," an adult-quality western is in shooting now on location near Phoenix. More series are in the advanced planning stage for projected total of six new CNP entries this year. As the competition gets hotter and, admittedly, it's torrid enough at the moment, our standards go higher.

Coincident with the new availabilities is an augmented sales forces. Since Jan. 1, we have hired four new sales representatives and are in the process of assigning another four to marketing areas. To implement our policy of providing clients with research, promotion, advertising and publicity ideas and aids, our salesmen have become expert in performing these liaison duties "on scene," in addition to selling film programs.

While attention naturally is drawn to new product and additional services, there is no eclipse of the continuing interest in reruns of established series. Ratings of off-the-network shows and multiple runs are equalling and often surpassing those of the original airings, and they frequently compare favorably with network and first-run opposition.

Excluding our network entries, CNP is now represented on stations throughout the country with 31 different syndicated film series on the air. Of this total, 24 are rerun properties handled by our Victory Program Sales division. Due to their excellent quality, which can never wear out, and to the expert marketing and merchandising techniques built in to their packaging, many of them look like personnial favorites.

A programming technique that is enjoying a favorable reception is the stripping of series into time slots across the board. Series such as CNP's "Hopalong Cassidy" and "The Life of Riley" are winning consistently good ratings on the five-times-a-week basis.

Perhaps 1959 will be known to syndicators as the "Year of the Big Break-Through." Having long since won the confidence of viewers, station-buyers and advertisers, syndicators are now approaching the "apple of the network eyes" status. A glimpse at the program listings this fall will reveal an impressive number of new shows, syndicator-produced, which have been selected for television web fare, among them CNP's "The Lawless Years" (NBC-TV) and "Philip Marlowe" (ABC-TV).

Some of the reasons for this network interest in syndication product are: survey findings that viewers generally are not concerned with whether a program is live or on film, as long as the entertainment value is there for them; the sound economics for mutual benefit of filming a series; the complete abolition by viewers, sponsors, and ratings of the myth that "network quality" and "syndication quality" were on two different levels; the proved "professionalism" of syndicators whose specialization is filmed series — and, finally, the CNP maxim that quality programs produced by qualified people will succeed, regardless of the means of distribution.

The successes of our network sales, our reruns, the improvement and augmenting of our sales operations, the scope and quality of our current new productions schedule, and the unequalled good health of the general economy combine to make that top tally for '59 a very safe bet.

Keeping Brit. TV 'Clean' Via FIDO

Keeping features off the British tv market has been a stimulant to live tv there, according to Cecil Bernstein, managing director of the Granada Group, British organization which encompasses a theatre chain, the commercial Granada TV outlet in northern England, and other enterprises.

Bernstein was the father of the Film Industry Defense Organization, the outfit composed of motion picture interests which buys up tv rights to features and thus prevents tv exposure of such pix. FIDO was formed last January and currently has a fund of about 300,000 pounds for the purchase of tv rights of cinematics. He said while visiting New York that American feature distributors in England are cooperating wholeheartedly with FIDO, aware of possible sanctions by British exhibitors.

Operation Of Quotas

According to Bernstein, what worried British motion picture interests wasn't the Hollywood pix which might be sold to British tv outlets, but native product getting to tv. The unofficial British quota that no more than 13% of the total programming schedule of a station can be devoted to foreign fare would operate to confine the telecasting of American pix. But no such quota applied to British pix which, if it were not for FIDO, could inundate British tv.

British networking of commercial programmers is a cooperative affair, with the individual commercial programmers occasionally putting on network shows. Bernstein, speaking of the upcoming fall schedule of Independent Tele-Vision (ITV), said that the Monday-through-Friday schedule calls for only one-and-a-half hours on film in the prime evening hours of 7:30 to 10:30. The rest consists of live shows.

Off-Hours For U.S. TV

Most of the American telefilm series are telecast during the off-hours, from 6 to 7:30 p.m. or after 11 p.m., by the individual British outlets.

Bernstein visited the U.S. recently to scout possible co-production deals on filmed series but said before departing that no agreements had been entered into.

Only major American series shown during prime ITV network time—and which consistently rates among the Top 10 in Britain—is the one-hour "Wagon Train," Bernstein stated.

The Granada managing director was very high on vidtape, claiming Granada TV has developed the only successful technique of converting a British taped show for vidtape telecasting in the U.S. The conversion was done with the coronation of the Pope, vidtaped by Granada TV and telecast by CBS-TV. He said Granada TV has eight Ampex recorders.

At this stage, English tv interests cannot go into telefilm production without the U.S. market, he stated. The Commonwealth markets of Canada and Australia could not support such an endeavor without sales in the U.S.

'Live TV' Giant

As a matter of honest fact, because of the Internal Revenue Department's current attitude toward film depreciation, the film packager may be required to make an additional tax investment in his already successful first run show in order to gamble on profits from residuals at some future date. Of course, if the film packager is also a syndicator or has been able to retain syndication rights and he doesn't have a network as a partner, his films may have a very valuable profit-making potential. This combination of circumstances is an ideal arrangement which is certainly not typical.

In the live field, the packager with a very successful show which has managed to avoid network involvement may also have a very valuable capital gains potential in addition to his weekly profit. We must also be aware of the fact, however, that the live packages is usually only successful as a first run vehicle (unless it is a taped show), whereas films may continue to earn revenue long after the creative production activities have ceased. It will be interesting to examine these two areas in greater detail as our experience in the film field continues to grow.

Mort Lewis Preps Civil War Series

Hollywood, July 7.

Mort Lewis, who recently resigned from the writing staff of "This Is Your Life," is developing a civil war series in collaboration with Harry Ackerman, production head at Screen Gems. It would be an SG release for the 1960-'61 season to coincide with the centennial observance of the war between the states.

Series would have a civil war backdrop with a running character based on historical incidents. Both Lewis and Ackerman are officers of the Lincoln Sesquicentennial Assn. and Lewis is a recognized authority of that period. Another series in the Lewis hopper is a revival of "Stroke of Fate," which he created and produced for radio. Stories deal with world figures and projects what might have happened if their hopes and ambitions were realized.

Strip 'People's Choice'

ABC Films' "The People's Choice," starring Jackie Cooper and featuring talking hound Cleo, has been resold to WCBS-TV New York and KTTV Los Angeles on a five-day a week strip basis.

New pacts were signed prior to expiration of current contract with Nucoa in N.Y. and L.A. Show is sold in several other markets, including the top five.

"CUT!"

Too often in commercial movie-making today, the word "Cut!" refers only to price instead of a director's command to stop the action so that the scene can be shot again in a better way.

For years we have proved that, by careful Pre-Production Planning, rather than price cutting, the highest standards of technical excellence and dramatic impact can be maintained within the limits of any film budget.

Next time you need a film, call for a Fiore representative to explain our BP-1, BP-2 and BP-3 plans.

French TV Just Can't Be Bothered About Yank Vidpix

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris.

Consensus of Yank vidfilm packaging companies in France is that the possibilities of American vidpic series for the existing French one-channel, state subsidized tv are practically nil. Actual series in use are running out and new ones are almost at a standstill.

This is due to the fact that the administrative aspect of the tv controlling setup, the Radiodiffusion-Television Francaise, has not been too receptive to U.S. vidfilms of late. They feel that they are made for mass consumption and do not quite fit with the more selective, smaller-scale French needs.

The emphasis on culture educational aspects, and more specialized beamings by the RTF, under the new governmental prerogatives, also tend to eliminate the more entertainment-minded and slanted Yank vidpix.

Another problem is the low payments for dubbed half-hour series pix, which is only about $800 per episode. It costs about that to dub and even the use in Belgium and Switzerland usually cannot lead to enough profit to bother with.

The only plus factor is the possibility of bigger playoffs with French versions in Canada. It is this that has primarily kept some series on French tv. Now running in the French speaking areas (France, Monaco, Belgium, Luxembourg and Algeria) are Ziv's "Science Fiction Theatre," "Cisco Kid," and "Yesterday's Newsreels," and Screen Gem's "Rin Tin Tin," "Circus Boy," "Ivanhoe" and cartoons, with others also in the act.

Look To 2d Channel

Yanks are counting on the second channel due in France in early '60. Though it is to be primarily cultural, with programs to come from the state theatres, it is felt by many that the expense of operating it may force the government to allow some commercialization. Even if it is only commercial spots for ads this might lead to a demand for more entertainment facets which could mean a need for Yank vidfilms.

Sources feel that the majority of set owners want entertainment as well as culture on their sets, and this should eventually tell. It is also thought that if the second channel hits French film boxoffice further the loss in taxes might make the government try for a balance with more outrightly commercial tv. All this is conjecture however.

The Federation of International Film Producers Assn. is also aware of the impending competition of tv to films on the Continent and has taken steps to set up a means of co-existence with tv to avoid it. They feel that now is the time to act before tv does on the Continent what it did in the U.S., Great Britain and now West Germany to unwary filmmakers.

Main FIFPA points were that tv is not taxed while films are overtaxed and that films should get a substantial detaxation as soon as possible; films always get good technical showings in theatres but suffer on tv, and FIFPA feels that care should be taken on cessation of rights to tv on newer films with the eventual refusal of the use of pix on video with filmites making special pix for tv and keeping their regular features only for theatres.

So the vidfilms problem is acute on the Continent, and in France, and the coming tv developments and second channels should help clarify whether Yank vidpix will eventually make big inroads on tv here. RTF has tried to produce its own vid series but has discontinued it as too expensive a proposition. This could be another plus for Yank packagers if the burgeoning webs find a need for series entries.

French entertainment tv programs are usually quiz and variety shows, and a greater variety will be needed eventually.

Price Tags on TV Features O'seas

Here is a price rundown of Hollywood features in the foreign tv market, country by country. The figures cited are average prices for "A" labelled product, the "average" figure pertaining in many cases to one run. Basis of the compilation was secured from a variety of sources and in a few instances, in the higher priced markets, there may be a range of $1,500 away from the average price, but in most cases, the disparity doesn't run proportionately that great. "B" labelled pix do not command the same prices in the world tv market and are price-scaled accordingly. The quoted prices are not meant to be absolute figures. In each market, there's a good deal of bargaining, as to runs, whether the feature is an "A" or "B" pic, etc., and the final price is dependent on the settlement of these factors. The following reflect the prices for "A" pix.

COUNTRY	AVERAGE PRICE	TOTALS

An Open Letter To My Old Buddies In Motion Picture Biz

By HENRY G. PLITT

(Pres., ABC Films)

What does a man with only six months of experience in a new field say to his peers in a VARIETY issue such as this? If he attempts to say something profound he may be accused of trying to be a 90 day wonder. If he goes to the other extreme and says nothing he may be accused of being stupid. Since neither extreme is particularly appealing I would like to get into an area with which I am familiar and that is to brief other theatre men who may make the move to tv. This article, therefore, is an open letter to my old motion picture buddies which will illustrate to old hands in tv some of the problems of a neophyte.

At this very moment you are occupying a comfortable niche in the motion picture industry probably with a good theatre chain. Maybe you're the top dog in the shop, maybe you're the guy who does the top dog's work and you don't get the credit. Wherever you are, whatever you are doing, the provocative finger of television may point in your direction (as it did in mine six months ago) and say "I want you!"

If your answer is, "Okay, I want you, too" then you're off on what you think is a new job but will turn out to be a new way of life with a new language and new definitions for old terms.

Glossary For Neophytes

Being brand conscious is just a small part of the change-over. The biggest problem is learning a new language. If I can be of any help to you at all, it will be in this area so for your information here is some of the terminology you'll encounter.

13 over 26, this is not a problem in arithmetic which your kid brings home from school. This means that an advertiser has contracted to buy 13 programs to be played every other week for 26 weeks. Your problem is to find another advertiser to buy the alternate weeks or to find another program and another advertiser to take the remaining 13 or to con a network or local station into solving the problem for you.

Mix, this is not Tom Mix or Pillsbury's Mix although it does have something to do with ingredients. Mix, in network terminology, refers to the number of first-runs and the number of repeats (reissues in your book) in a contract.

39-13, Dad, this is not the beginning of somebody's social security number. While we are on the subject of repeats I have to tell you about 39-13 which is the magic formula that enables the producer or distributor of a tv film series to emerge with a reasonable profit, if he's lucky. He signs up an advertiser for 52 weeks. He promises to give the advertiser 39 new programs and repeats of 13 of these for the remaining 13 weeks. Sometimes the 13 are selected by the distributor, sometimes the advertiser picks them. In any case this is a great formula for both parties.

Cut-out. Be careful of this term. It has nothing to do with a party you don't like from which you cut-out. In telelanguage this refers to that portion of time between segments of the program when the guy who is footing the bill, the sponsor, has a chance to tell viewers why they should buy his product and they should. If they don't, the program won't stay on the air and a lot of nice people will be out of work.

Like A Siesta

Hiatus is a tv word which is sort of like a siesta. The sponsor may decide that at a certain time of the year he doesn't want to spend any money in television. Maybe it's the time of year when he doesn't do much business or he thinks that the people who can buy aren't watching television or maybe his advertising has been so effective that his orders may exceed his production output and he doesn't want to stimulate any new business. Well, whatever the reason, he pulls out for a while with a promise to return at a later date. Of course, your payroll continues during this hiatus and the reason you can meet it is because not everybody takes a hiatus at the same time. To be absolutely truthful not everybody takes a hiatus because most advertisers have learned that punching home the message week in and week out pays off. Some of them have learned, the hard way, that when they stop punching, sales fall off.

Tape. Not scotch or adhesive. I'm referring to video tape. This is like spotting a million bucks at the top of a tall tree. There aren't any low-slung branches and the guy who has promised to bring you a ladder hasn't shown yet. You know that the loot is there but you're not quite sure how to get it.

V.P.S., this can be confused with v.i.p. because v.p.s. stands for viewers per set and these are very important people. If you don't have enough of them your tv program isn't going to be on the air for very long.

S.I.U.; C.P.M./P.C.M.; A.R.B.; O. & O.'s; and D.B.'s stand for other terms of interest but I won't tell you about them now because I'm still working them out myself.

Strip. The tv definition of this is still a big disappointment. It has nothing to do with Lois, The Gypsy of the old days or Lili. A tv stripper is a show which is scheduled across the board or six or seven days a week at the same time.

Sustainer. This is like playing to an empty house with the doors wide open hoping that the sound of the dialog and whatever can be seen from the street will be sufficiently interesting to entice the paying customers. It might also be compared to the day when you turn your house and all your receipts over to your favorite charity.

Option. A mutual promise which prevents you from selling and assures the customer that if he can't find a better deal he can take yours.

International Flow of TV Can Run in Both Directions

By ALFRED R. STERN

(Director, NBC International Operations)

The biggest boom in television today is outside the borders of the U.S. American tv, of course, was never more vigorous and it is assured of continued steady growth. But the period of spectacular mushrooming has just begun to sweep the rest of the world. At the present rate, what has always struck some American tv men as a remote foreign hinterland—a sort of global stix—is going to be bigger than we are within three years.

The foreign boom spells greater marketing opportunities for American television—and bigger problems, such as keener competition and the rise of quotas and other import restrictions. It also poses a major challenge: opening American tv channels to foreign product and personalities so the international flow in television can run in both directions.

Already, even excluding those in the Communist countries, which boast 141 stations, there are more stations operating abroad—714 of them—than the 560-odd listed in the U.S., counting the UHF and non-commercial stations. The latest estimates on foreign sets show a total of 25.6 million, reflecting a growth of about 50% in the two years since NBC launched its international operations. That is just about half the number of sets in American homes, and the gap is closing rapidly.

In terms of the American growth pattern in television, Britain, Germany, Italy, and France are already in the midst of the boom. TV is also skyrocketing in Japan, which next fall will join the roster of 16 foreign countries where NBC's "Perry Como Show" is now televised. (But with an impressive difference: Tokyo's NTV will present Perry on tape and in color). The Japanese are strongly color-conscious, and next fall one of their stations will be color programming on a regular daily basis.

Another group of countries — Australia, Argentina, Belgium, the Netherlands and the Scandinavian nations among them—is now crossing the threshold that American tv vaulted in 1946-47. Still other countries—such places as New Zealand, Singapore, Hong Kong, South Africa, Eire and India—have not yet entered the television age, but they are ripe for it.

Everywhere outside the Communist orbit that a tv image can reach, U.S. shows exert a special appeal to viewers. This holds true not only for programs like "Life of Riley" and "Danger Is My Business" but for the "Wisdom" series, the NBC Operas and "Project 20." When Anastas Mikoyan, the Soviet Deputy Premier, appeared on Sunday's "Meet the Press," a print of the show was seen in London on Monday, in Germany on Tuesday and in Australia on Wednesday. NBC's totality concept, programming for the whole range of tastes and interests, is operating in its foreign activities as well as its own tv network.

Cross-Fertilization

A new wrinkle made possible by the boom abroad is the opportunity for American companies with global representation to distribute foreign tv shows with good market possibilities in different countries, for example, Portuguese programs in Brazil, Japanese shows in the Philippines or Italian product in Argentina. Latin America offers good possibilities for distribution on this kind of cross-fertilization basis.

Some wishful thinkers among us regard the expanding tv foreign market as potentially the kind of key factor that the world market has traditionally been for Hollywood, which has been getting some 50% of its gross from foreign tills. In my opinion, that is a delusion; the parallel just doesn't exist.

By the very nature of the tv medium, because so much of it is essentially national and even local in character and because of its insatiable demand for material, television everywhere develops its own local programming operations to a degree far surpassing foreign movie production. Another factor is that the major U.S. film distributors who have carved up the world movie market among them are far outnumbered by the swarm of highly competitive American tv outfits now selling abroad.

The main factor putting a ceiling on the foreign market, however, is the specialized needs that each country can best meet itself, and is already meeting in growing volume. To help foreign stations technically to meet those needs, incidentally, is the object of NBC International's management service, which has already put American experience and assistance to work in Britain, Portugal, Yugoslavia, Germany, Sweden, Peru, Mexico and Saudi Arabia.

Instead of looking to the foreign market as an endless bonanza, it is time to develop the possibilities that the rest of the world offers for our own program schedules. If England's Dave King can be a hit on NBC-TV and if Canada's Wayne and Shuster can put a feather into Ed Sullivan's cap, it stands to reason that there is other foreign talent waiting for American discovery—and not only English-speaking comedians.

Apart from individual entertainers and specialty acts, foreign countries present full programs and series, especially in drama and the documentary field, that warrant serious consideration for American use. Getting such programs on the air here means some missionary work, not abroad but on Madison Ave.; it means trying to show advertisers the light. As a matter of fact, the foreign producers need encouragement, too. Many of them take a defeatist attitude about selling to the U.S., and except for a very few such as the BBC, they have no sales offices here.

To encourage some influx of foreign programs and personalities is, of course, sound business practice; international television should not be a one-way street. It is also a way of enriching American television fare and helping to use the miracle of television for a purpose second to none: the stimulation of international understanding.

VARIETY -ARB FEATURE CHART

VARIETY's weekly feature chart, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, covers two markets. Each week the 10 top rated features for the two markets will be listed.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature and audience composition, i.e., a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained.

STEPPIN' OUT

With Kaye Ballard, Jac Olton, Deidre O'Callaghan, Rolly Rolls, Monica Roe, John Russell, TV Toppers, Eric Robinson orch
Director: Richard Afton
45 Mins., Sat. 8 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Kaye Ballard, back in U.K. after several years, made a boffo impression in her tv debut in the latest of this BBC skein of vaude shows. The zany comedienne and torch singer has the sort of personality that would add zing to the dullest show and, frankly, this one needed a little pepping up. Miss Ballard was in specially good form with her impressions of Bette Davis as she might appear in Italian films, and she sang "You Made Me Love You" and "Rose Of Washington Square" (with the Toppers) splendidly.

Previously the lithe, dancing Toppers had set the show going with a bang, but of the other acts only a smooth magician, Jac Olton, and the somewhat familiar, but diverting, act of Rolly Rolls had really scored. Deidre O'Callaghan, Irish chanteuse, and Monica Roc, a femme protean act, were adequate but hardly sensational. The 45 minutes was emceed by newcomer John Russell, who turned out to be the publicity-minded Duke of Bedford. Whilst admiring the way the Duke is prepared to have a go at anything, emcee Russell has much to learn in the art of skilfully holding a show together.

Richard Afton's direction was pleasantly effective and the professional work of choreographer Jack Billings and orchestra leader Eric Robinson was, as usual, dependable.

JOHNNIE RAY SINGS

With Shani Wallis, Jack Parnell and orch
Director: Colin Clews
30 Mins., Mon., 10.15 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

Johnnie Ray recorded a lineup of six programs on his last trip Englandside: here, in No. 1, he went through numbers, old and new, aided and abetted occasionally by Shani Wallis. Result was a fairly entertaining show, though much of that frenetic Ray quality was lost in transit from stage to small screen, together with some of that alternating attribute of apparent sincerity.

Miss Wallis was adequate, but it was an error to have her emote to her own soundtrack rendering of "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes." She may be a cookie, but she's no Duse. Productionwise the job was competent, though the design department threw in some queer bits and pieces. With Jack Parnell and orch giving slick backing, the skein looks like doing well enough at the allotted hour.

SUMMER PAVILION

With Mary Ellis, Margaret Vines, Redmond Phillips, John Bown, Patricia English, David Graham, John Bloomfield, Nicholas Grimshaw, Brenda Dunrich
Director: Cyril Coke
Writer: Gore Vidal
60 Mins., Fri., 9.0 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

Emerging as a kind of hybrid derived from "The Silver Cord" and something out of Tennessee Williams, this play by U.S. telewriter Gore Vidal didn't impress. Nobody involved in the production seemed entirely happy, and in the final scenes the whole affair crumbled into a near-parody of its genre. That's the part where the dominant mother watches the gazebo, that symbolizes her clinging to the ol' South go up in the flames started by her daughter.

This summer pavilion—to recap the plot—stands in the grounds of the New Orleans house owned by the Durand family and is threatened by the new building project that's being undertaken. Theresa Durand (Mary Ellis) hates the contractor man Ned Welch (John Bown) for what he's doing and is horrified when her daughter Helen (Patricia English) falls in love with him. But facing the inevitable she agrees to the match and exerts her charm on Ned to bring him, too, under her dominance—only for Helen to break the cord in the aforesaid firebug fashion.

Mary Ellis fought hard with the role of the matriarch, but the passion and pathos didn't come through. More successful was Patricia English, with the simpler chore of the rebellious daughter, while Margaret Vines and Redmond Phillips added some effective color as members of the bygone Durand era who yet had adjusted themselves to the present. John Bown made a competent Ned and David Graham an amusingly weak member of a neighboring Southern household. The atmosphere was adequately captured.

BATTLEGROUND

With Alan Taylor, Ted Allan, Lord Attlee, Lord Strang, others
Director: Geoffrey Hughes
Writer: Elkan Allan
Film Editor: Charles Squires
90 Mins., Thurs., 8.30 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

On all counts, this documentary feature on the Spanish Civil War was standout. Explicit in its recap of the political background and military pattern, it was also a moving record of the tragedy of war. And its integrity was notable: having established its sympathy with the Republic it refused to compromise by offering any currently politic tributes to Franco. Franco, it said, was a Fascist, and the program was anti-Fascist.

Bulk of the material was newsreel footage, admirably chosen and edited and oft-times ironically counterpointed by guitar music. Highlights included a survivor's account of the siege of the Toledo Alcazar, the defence of Madrid (with Ernest Hemingway's voice on the track) and the bombing of Guernica. Alan Taylor and Canadian playwright Ted Allan made firstrate commentators who couldn't keep the passion from their voices, while interviews with Lord Atlee and Lord Strang who were closely involved with British policies in the stormy '30s elicited some fascinating stuff. Strang in particular was hypnotizing with his bland assertion that morality doesn't always matter in politics and that it certainly didn't count when the Government of the day decided on non-intervention in Spain.

Though the program will doubtless be counted as "cultural" when the British commerical webs recap on such contributions, its appeal can't be confined to the narrow limits the word suggests. This was outstanding television for all.

ROMEO UND JULIA IN BERLIN
(Romeo and Juliet In Berlin)

With Reinhold Bernt, Ilse Fuerstenberg, Marion Degler, Herbert Weissbach, Marianne Mueller, Herbert Strass others Producer: NWRV, Hamburg
Director: Hanns Korngiebel
Writer: Gerd Oelschlegel
90 Mins.; Wed.; 5 p.m.
W-German TV, from Hamburg

Although the outcome of "Romeo and Juliet in Berlin" is not fully praiseworthy, it has a number of assets which could classify this for U. S. release. It's both humanly and politically interesting due to its locale (it plays in divided Berlin), once again the centrepoint of world interest, and also a shocking item as it spotlights a particularly depressive chapter of European postwar misery.

It tells the story of two young East (Soviet) Berlin people whose parents are all but in the same political boat: The parents of the boy belong to what the Communists call "the bourgeoisie," while the father (his wife is more indifferent) of the girl represents the stubborn Commie who just can't change his outlook upon life. He has been a follower of the Red flag for many years and suffered under the Nazi regime which even persecuted him. The father of the boy can't put up with the fact that the Nazi regime, which he also disliked has merely been substituted by another dictatorship, that of the Commies. So there's constant hostility between the two men who live in the same house. The Commie aims at chasing this "enemy of the working class" out of the house.

The above mentioned boy, who has a job in an East German mine, suddenly returns. He's chased by the Communist State Security Service. A fatal accident had taken place in the mine, the Commies call it sabotage and now look for the usual scapegoats. So the innocent young man flees via his parents to West Berlin which is just a few metres off. The daughter of the Communist helps him escape his prosecutors.

The two young people, who have fallen in love, then meet in West Berlin, marry in a refugee camp, and decide to start a new life in West Germany. Before leaving town, the girl returns to her par-

ATTITUDE: ASIA—PART I

With Jack Latham
Producer-writer: Fred Rheinstein
Director: Marc Breslow
Photographer: Dexter Alley
30 Mins., Thurs. (2), 7:30 p.m.
KRCA, Los Angeles

KRCA-NBC newsman Jack Latham, who recently made a swing through Japan and Korea, kicked off a three-part special on the two countries with an analysis of the U.S. stake in Japan. The half-hour was somewhat confusing, due to Latham's apparent inability to detach himself sufficiently from his material.

It's one thing to present conflicting points of view, but Latham made the mistake of seemingly identifying himself with each viewpoint. He'd present one line of reasoning, then interpose with "but," or "however," and present an opposite line to which he also seemed to subscribe. It was extremely difficult to find one's way through the maze to grasp what Latham himself was driving at.

Generally, he seemed to feel that America must soon make a decision regarding stationing of troops in Japan, that public opinion is rising against the presence of our forces. But he seemed to resent this—to resent the fact that the U.S. is now on the spot with a former aggressor.

At the same time, he made a plea against additional trade barriers against American imports of Japanese goods, reporting that despite the flow of Japanese goods into the U.S., we send them more than we receive in dollar volume. He also made the point that Communist China is beginning to be a forceful competitor against Japan in its prime market of Southeast Asia as Japanese labor costs rise, and if Japan does not have the U.S. market, it could develop serious economic trouble.

Through the entire show, however, Latham intruded a note of petulance. Talking about Japan's gains in economic strength during the Korean War, he seemed to blame the country for not having been a participant. He emphasized the fact that the small Japanese neighborhood bars, the equivalent of the English pubs, don't want American patrons. Apart from the matter of troops, he seemed to indicate but would not state a rising feeling of anti-Americanism in Japan. Above all, he emphasized the Japanese "bend a branch" approach to their post-war political-economic situation, and intimated but again could not pin down a feeling that they'd soon assert themselves again.

21 BEACON STREET
('The Rub Out')

With Dennis Morgan, Joanna Barnes, Brian Kelly, James Maloney, Whit Bissell, Gene Coogan, Paul Bryar, others Producer: Al Simon
Director: Maurice Geraghty
Writer: Robert C. Dennis
30 Mins., Thurs., 9:30 p.m.
FORD
NBC-TV (film)
(J. Walter Thompson)

For the summer rerun period, "Tennessee Ernie Ford" has been replaced by the "21 Beacon Street" skein on NBC-TV. The McCadden Productions 13-week entry does have the fresh entry label running for it, representing an island in the sea of dog day reruns. But other than that, judging from the opener, the series looks like a weak outing for Dennis Morgan, for the first time starring in his own series.

Preem show concerned itself with foiling attempts to kill a state witness. Morgan, playing a private eye, residing at 21 Beacon Street (hence the series' title), was called in by the police to help. Mastermind Morgan, aided by his special staff, cooked up an idea to stage a hoax murder of the would-be victim in order to fool the underworld. The Robert C. Dennis script is plotted in order to let the viewer in on the solution of the posed problem. There was some blackboard work, the use of truth serum, and other abacadbra of detection. But all the hocus-pocus did not add up to an absorbing half-hour.

Joanna Barnes, as one of Morgan's assistants, stood out in a real cool cookie role. Others in the cast were competent.

THE SHOW THAT JACK BUILT

With Jack Shapira & Orch, Shirley Shaw, Stu Davis, Selkirk Septet, Myron Cohen, guest
Producer: Ernie Mutimer
30 Mins.; Tues.; 10:30 p.m.
CBC-TV, from Winnipeg

"The Show That Jack Built" is one of the summer replacements on the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s television network and preem stanza indicates it should be one of the brightest. Cast showed signs of opener tension but production was socko from all standpoints.

Teeoff session was bolstered by the appearance of Myron Cohen as guester. Comic, currently in a Winnipeg nitery, delivered a string of dialect stories weakened somewhat by his persistence in telling Canadians how much he loved

WHO PAYS?

With Mike Wallace, emcee; Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Celeste Holm, Gene Klavan, panelists
Producer-Director: Jerome Schnur
30 Mins., Thurs.; 8 p.m.
PUREX CORP.
NBC-TV, from New York
(Edward H. Weiss Co.)

A dullish variation of "What's My Line?" is "Who Pays?", a panel quiz show which preemed Thurs. (2) on NBC-TV. Format of the half-hour entry calls for the panelists to identify a celebrity through cross-examining two of his (or her) employees. Viewers are aware of the celeb's identity since the guest is seated within camera range, but not in sight of the panel.

On hand for the inaugural were Red Buttons and Carol Channing. Repping Buttons were his clothier and an actor while Miss Channing's employees were a costume jeweler and an errand boy. There was some occasional levity as panelists Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Celeste Holm and disk jockey Gene Klavan quizzed the "witnesses." But it was all too evident that the probers wouldn't have too much difficulty in determining the employer's identity.

Hence suspense, as far as viewers were concerned, was little and a sample of the humor was Klavan's query of the clothier, "Do you give credit?" Emcee Mike Wallace seemed rather subdued on the kickoff. But then no one really had any material to work with—including the panel. Purez Corp. picked up the tab on this Lester Lewis production in behalf of its Trend detergent, Sweetheart Soap and Dutch cleanser.

On the whole, "Who Pays?" is mild summer fare which will do well to last through the hot weather months. Live show, incidentally, moved into the 8 p.m. spot of the filmed "The Lawless Years," which in turn switched to 8:30 to replace "Too Young to Go Steady."

SOUTH SEAS ADVENTURE

With George Grim, Others Producer: Ken Barry
Director: Bob Sears
30 Mins., Wed. (1), 11 p.m.
STANLEY-WARNER
KSTP-TV, Minneapolis

KSTP-TV and its ace personality, breezy and suave George Grim, have had much experience in bringing to public attention via the airlane the opening hulabaloos attendant upon important pictures' local firstnights, and they unfailingly have done good such jobs—narratively, photographically and what-have-you. The televising and performance for "South Seas Adventure's" preem proved one of their best efforts in this line.

The film's firstnight honored local Community Chest volunteer workers and its officials who were the management's guests. This was in appreciation of these citizens' important contributions to the city.

The telecast effectively caught the preliminary and after-show doings in the Klieg-lighted street and on the sidewalk in the theatre's front. There were Hawaiian dancing girls, a band and a U.S. Marines' honor guard to attract a large crowd and generate excitement while guests entered the showhouse. Interspered with the aforegoing's camera presentation were interesting brief shots from "South Seas Adventure." All had the benefit of Grim's glib and colorful narration.

Then, after the picture broke and the guests were departing. Grim brought to the mike and before the camera such important personages as the Minneapolis mayor, chamber of commerce and newspapers' head, legislature members, Community Fund officials and just plain people who had been in the audience. Interviewed by him, they told how much they enjoyed the picture and what parts of it they liked best.

Grim elicited nothing but high praises for the picture and also inserted plenty of his own plugs and pitches. Good direction and skillful presentation helped to hold the interest well. As intended, of course, everything was calculated to publicize effectively and make dialers eager to see "South Seas Adventure" which marks the start of Cinerama's sixth year in Minneapolis.

'Rawhide's' SRO

The SRO sign was hung out this week on CBS-TV's 60-minute telefilm "Rawhide," with Nabisco buying the last available third in the Friday night series.

Cracker company joins Lever Bros., Parliament, Peter Paul and Vicks, latter two coming in less than two weeks ago. Stanza is set for the Friday 7:30-8:30 slot.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

U.S. Steel Hour

Can a middle-aged widower, a grandfather-to-be and a respected pillar of the community, be happy with a 19-year-old servant girl, against the wishes of his family and friends?

If the premise sounds slightly soap-opera-ish, the execution of "Apple of His Eye," a Helene Hanff adaptation of a 1946 Kenyon Nicholson-Charles Robinson play was even more so. The stock cast of characters was present—the jealous housekeeper, the attractive widow, the jocular hired hand and the shiftless father of the girl.

This is the sort of pap that Broadway gave up years ago—so did television, with even its daytime offerings usually above this level. But the Theatre Guild, which manages to stay up to date on Broadway, somehow manages to come up with this antiquated stuff as a matter of habit on television.

Show's only redeeming features were in the performances by Eddie Albert, Carol Lawrence and Frank McHugh. Albert, even in as shallow a role as this, brought more conviction to the role than the script warranted. Miss Lawrence, in a completely ludicrous part, nonetheless made her characterization believable at times and lent a quiet charm. McHugh, in one of his warm roles, brought a little life and animation to the otherwise dull proceedings.

The usually reliable Polly Rowles was somewhat shaky as the widow; John Shellie was okay as the girl's scheming father; Ruth White was good as the housekeeper and Arlene Golonka and Arnold Merritt okay as Albert's son and daughter-in-law. Don Richardson's direction of this George Kondolf-Bill Nichols production was rather static.

Hy Gardner

Hy Gardner picked himself quite a handful on his taped interviews on WNEW-TV Saturday (4). Gardner got together an interesting collection of citizens, but seemed to try to do too much for one sitting. It was a difficult session to handle flawlessly.

Gardner's major opus was a tandem talking to a pair of mothers, that of the tempestuous Maria Meneghini Callas, who was exorcised out of the Met sometime ago, and the other having spawned the noted Gabor Sisters. These were far too contrasting to achieve any degree of harmony. Mme. Callas was quite reserved, austere and troubled, and Mrs. Gabor seemed not to have a care in the world, even to the extent to horning in on the time allotted Mme. Callas. In common only were the fact that both women were in the process of writing books.

The mother of the diva revealed that she hasn't been on speaking terms with her daughter for a number of years. Whatever the cause of the estrangement, Gardner didn't get at it successfully. Perhaps, had she occupied the mike by herself, he might have obtained a more revealing and more intimate looksee into the character of this highly interesting woman, who seems to have been grievously buffetted by the same forces that have rocked the musical greats of this era. La Gabor, the elder, also said she has a story to tell, and of course she doesn't mean to infringe on the territory of her daughter, Zsa Zsa, who is also engaged in a tome.

In the singles, Gardner started with Sam Levene and wound up with Johnnie Ray. In both instances, he showed a tendency to put words in his subjects' mouths. Levene didn't particularly relish the outspoken liberal label Gardner gave him, and in Ray's case, Gardner insisted that Ray wears breakaway clothes for publicity shots. Ray merely said that he hadn't discovered double stitching when a photo in question was taken.

Here are five important reasons why:

campaign strategy—Today the campaign is all. No individual show can do the complete job. The advertiser's ultimate goal is the total audience, all prospects - not just isolated groups. And this year NBC Radio continues to deliver more of the top campaign audiences than any other network.

pure economics—With NBC Radio you can make more advertising impressions for less cost. Further, NBC Radio can add more to an existing campaign than can any other medium. For example, an advertiser with a 90-minute TV Special can increase his reach by 28% for an 8% additional investment on NBC Radio.

program dispersion—NBC Radio gives advertisers more opportunities to reach more diversified audiences with: 44 hours of network programming per week; 14 hours of weekend Monitor; 10 hours of weeknight Monitor; 10 hours of morning dramatic programs weekly; 10 hours of afternoon variety programs weekly; Hot-Line Service; Monday-through-Friday News on the Hour; and Stardust—supplying top star identification 85 times weekly.

flexibility—Announcements are available in ninety, sixty, thirty and six second lengths. They can be ordered in the afternoon and on the air the same evening. Weekly plans begin for as little as $300 and range to $30,000. Advertisers may purchase entire programs, star vignettes, or a pure frequency schedule.

extra services—NBC Radio has pioneered the development of new links with both the consumer and the dealer. Among the most significant; NBC Radio's National-Local Plan with the advertiser's network commercial tailored for local dealer cut-in; editorial support such as the current "Summertime Is Outdoor Eating Time"; closed circuit dealer meetings; and a long list of inventive plans that add both reach and return for the advertiser.

These are the reasons so many advertisers are attracted to NBC Radio and why 52.1% of all reported sponsored hours in network radio are on the leadership network, the . . .

WNYC ('Mirror for Gotham') In 35th Anni as 'Alumni' Gather

By JO RANSON

Gotham's municipal radio outlet, WNYC, is celebrating its 35th anni today (Wed.) with a band concert at Battery Park conducted by Henry Neuman, the station's first and only music supervisor, and emceed by Thomas H. Cowan, its first announcer and a legendary figure among the "we pause" boys.

For the "Voice of New York City" to broadcast a concert is hardly news among the town's devotees of decent music, but to grace such a concert with several of the station's more distinguished graduates (summa cum laude) is of interest to WNYC's minority audience ("If 350.000 people who tune to its wavelength every day might be termed a minority," remarks Seymour N. Siegel, director of radio communications) and a nostalgic note to both station personnel and listeners.

Siegel has invited such former toilers from the municipal transmitting establishment as Tony Marvin, Dennis Day, Richard Pack, Ted Cott, Elaine Malbin and Dan Enright to appear on the "most literate, adult and mature" radio program source in the nation.

The anni program, fittingly enough, will be presented under the auspices of the Downtown Manhattan Assn. Vincent Lopez, who batoned one of the first remotes over the station, also will be on the scene.

In fact, the next few weeks will see a number of specials celebrating the anni of the "Mirror for Gotham," among them a large symphony orchestra concert in Washington Square Park with trumpeters atop the Arch. The performance will be given Sunday, August 3, and will be conducted by Neuman.

Since its inception by Grover Whalen, when he was Commissioner of Plant and Structures, the city station has invariably surrounded itself with a restless band of imaginative individuals, many of whom worked for free or, at best, received a few rupees and peanuts, meanwhile keeping a navigator's eye open for wider horizons and a chance to earn a few more kopeks. At no time has the station diminished its interest in good music and good drama.

In a message to subscribers of the "Masterwork Bulletin," the station's bi-monthly publication, Siegel observed that in its 35 years of metropolitan broadcasting, it has presented "more public health information, more consumer information and more serious American music than any other station in the country."

Started With 47G Budget

No one, save a handful of penny-pinching Philistines who regard culture as a wanton waste and consequently should be stricken from the city budget, disapprove of the municipal station which was originally started with a $47,000 budget and a staff of 18. Today it is budget at $485.000 for municipal broadcasting, a public address service for city-wide functions, a motion picture unit and all two-way communication systems with the exception of police and fire departments. There are presently 82 workers on WNYC's payroll.

Its list of arresting programs, including numerous firsts, are looked upon as crackerjack electronic memorabilia: the Morro Castle hearings in 1935, the first quasi-judicial proceedings to be broadcast; the UN session when Russian delegate Gromyko walked out and announced he was going to listen to the rest of the proceedings over WNYC; the City Council goings-on during a four-year period starting in 1938 with the voices of Mike Quill, B. Charney Vladeck and Anthony Di Giovanna; Mayor LaGuardia's Sunday "sermons" and his reading of the newspaper comics; the annual art book, great opera and music festivals (latter a brainchild of Pack when he served as publicity man for the station); science seminars; the Brooklyn Eagle's current events bees (reportedly the first quiz shows on the air) with H. V. Kaltenborn and Cleveland Rodgers as interrogators and a raft of other shows, all original and tantilizing.

How the station managed to get its "Masterwork Hour" program on the air is a tale of tall accomplishment. Since the station had no money allocated for the purchase of recordings, it began the "Masterwork Hour" with the assistance of a music-loving Brooklyn barrister who had his secretary deliver a daily parcel of albums. Meanwhile, the secretary picked up the records played the previous morning while the lawyer listened in on his office radio. Eventually the lawyer's albums were replaced by borrowings from the Gramophone Shop in Manhattan. The station would dispatch a city car to the record shop for its daily quota of disks but one day, as was inevitable, a borrowed Red Seal record, valued at $1.25 broke as it was about to be put on the turntable—and since there was no provision in the budget for records, broken or otherwise—an enormous financial crisis developed.

At this point, Siegel went to David Sarnoff, then prexy of RCA, and asked him to donate some records, as a philanthropic gesture, to the library of the city station. Within a few days WNYC was the recipient of some 4,000 records, compliments of RCA-Victor. A similar mission to Frank Stanton at CBS also brought quick results and soon WNYC had a respectable "Masterwork Hour" library.

What's ahead for the station? Recently, it completed lengthy hearings and legal arguments to carry on nighttime operations and Siegel is working on plans for an FM Radio Relay Network of educational stations from Montreal to Washington with a potential of 40.000.000 listeners with WNYC serving as the feeder outlet.

Despite constant threats to its existence, broadcasting elders in Gotham agree that New York City's municipal broadcasting system has more than justified its existence and predict that its mikes will be down front and center at City Hall when the first American astronauts return from their maiden voyage to the moon to receive the Mayor's blessings. They say that the city could no more exist without WNYC than it could without Coney Island, Locality Mayors and the Automat.

B&W Prez, Others Seek L'ville Grant

Louisville, July 7.

Local television situation has become active lately, with a group of five Louisville and two Evansville (Ind.) execs seeking FCC nod to establish a third commercial television station in Louisville.

This is the second group to apply to the FCC for UHF Channel 51 in Louisville. United Electronic Laboratories, Shively, Ky. (a Louisville suburb) had filed its application previously. Backers of the radio school group have plans to air educational programs now carried by WAVE-TV from their studios, which will be relayed to the tower of the Louisville Public Library.

Besides the Louisville business men, Archibald P. Cochran, prez of Anaconda Aluminum Co.; William S. Cutchins, prez of Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp.; Dillman A. Rash, prez of the Louisville Title Co., and Holman A. Wilson, prez of the Kentucky Co., two Evansville broadcast execs, Ferris E. Traylor, prez of WTVW-TV in Evansville, and Richard Shively, g.m. of the station, are included among the incorporators.

WJAR-TV's Big Parade

Providence, July 7.

Finale of WJAR-TV's 10th anni will be a big parade, with Bill Wendell as grand marshal. (Wendell emcees NBC's "Tic Tac Dough."

Parade, slated for Friday, will feature elephants, outstanding bands, military and veterans groups, station personalities, civic groups, etc. It will be telecast the same night by the pioneer Rhode Island outlet.

ANDY GRIFFITH SHOW
With George Bryant, announcer
Director: Dick Stenta
Writer: Bill Gammie
5 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 7:35 p.m.
R. J. REYNOLDS (co-sponsor)
CBS Radio, from New York

For the summer, CBS Radio has itself a nice comedy block in three programs—Andy Griffith, in five minutes of homely monolog, Burns & Allen, in five minutes of homey dialog (taken directly from the sound track of their old tv film shows) and 15 minutes of hokum by Bob & Ray. Nightly strip, heard between 7:35 and 8 p.m., follows five minutes of CBS news and 25 minutes of "Amos & Andy." All three began last week on Monday (29).

BURNS & ALLEN SHOW
Producer: Jack Cleary
5 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 7:40 p.m.
Sustaining
CBS Radio, from Hollywood (tape)

Griffith utilized his deep-fried twang to poke fun Thursday (2) last at CBS executives including radio program veepee "Howie Barnes." It wasn't at all inside. Instead, Griffith offered up a funny play on words, to whomever among the listeners prefers humor to early evening radio news.

Network made good use of vaude skits taken from the onetime George Burns-Gracie Allen tv show. It's worthwhile, even in this abbreviated form.

BOB & RAY SHOW
Producer: Graybar Theatrical Productions
Director: Vic Cowan
15 Mins., Mon.-thru-Fri., 7:45 p.m.
Sustaining
CBS Radio, from New York

And as the nightly anchor team, Bob Elliot and Ray Goulding, the night heard, spoofed radio in one of their typical takeoffs, this time for such things as sports interviews, answer-man-type programs and historical coverage on a public affairs stanza.

On each of the three programs, the material was clever, distinctively delivered, and, in the final analysis, pleasant summertime listening. Art.

NEWPORT JAZZ FESTIVAL
With Mitch Miller, host
Producer-Director: Dick Stenta
55 Mins.; Thurs. thru Sun. (2-5) 9:05 p.m.
STUDEBAKER
CBS Radio, from Newport, R.I.
(D'Arcy)

The big annual jazz blowout at Newport was given firstrate radio coverage over the festival's four-day spread via these one-hour CBS stanzas. The heavyweight names of jazz playing before vast crowds at Freebody Park gave these shows the excitement of radio at its livest and liveliest.

Mitch Miller, as host, virtually let the performers speak for themselves. He limited his commentary to the briefest of intros, although enough to communicate some of the atmosphere at the festival itself. Studebaker, which picked up the tab for this event, did itself plenty of good. Its plugs for its compact car, the Lark, had a swinging flavor, using a hep jargon in amusing style but without laying it on too thick. The plugs were in perfect tempo with the jazz beat.

On each of the four nights, Miller spotlighted a handful of those performing that day at the festival. On Thursday night (2), The Newport All-Stars, the Four Freshmen and George Shearing's new big band added up to a snappy hour. On Friday (3), the British Johnny Dankworth orch with its big band swing, blues singer Dakota Staton, Oscar Peterson and Gene Krupa's combo took over.

The peak of the series was hit Saturday night with Count Basie's orch and singer Joe Williams in a red hot jazz display. The crowd was so insistent for more that Basie and Williams had to do an unscheduled number which cut down on the time for the Lambert-Hendricks & Ross vocal trio. On Sunday night, Stan Kenton's orch was featured along with songstress Pat Suzuki and the Dave Brubeck combo. Herm.

Hunefeld is an ex-KLK, ex-KSFO, ex-KPIX salesman and succeeds Larry Fraiberg, "who has left KPIX's employ," the station says. Shift is indicative of the heat which independent, 16-month-old KTVU, Frisco area's fourth tv outlet, and ABC's o-and-o KGO-TV are putting on the area's onetime tv kingpins, CBS outlet KPIX and NBC outlet KRON. In case of KTVU it's a lower rate structure; in case of KGO-TV it's the power of resurgent network programming, with ABC's "77 Sunset Strip" just having climbed into top Frisco area spot on the basis of ARB's June ratings. KPIX's Paramount package, in addition, has not provided the station the lift it thought it would get six months ago—KRON's canny stockpiling of feature films, especially post-'48's, has enabled it to remain dominant in this phase . . . New sales manager of ABC's o-and- KGO-AM is Jack W. gram is sufficient proof that the program has an educational validity because it probes with the "problems of life itself." Among the mediators on the panel are Pearl Buck, Fannie Hurst, Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick and James Farley. "These people are on the show because they consider it of high standards," the show's creator, producer and moderator insisted.

Alexander said the sentinels of the press who lambasted the show had criticized the case but what they should have done was analyze the intent on the program series and that the critics failed to understand the premise of the show.

He reiterated that the "Court of Human Relations" is not an advice program, not a Dorothy Dix type of show nor is it a John J. Anthony production. Alexander felt the critics had mounted their guns to strike down the program long before it went on the air and had not given the series a decent chance to display its merits in attempting to solve family squabbles and other day-by-day human irritations.

"There is far more significance in the 'Court of Human Relations' than in the soap operas on the air," Alexander said. "NBC so far as I know is sticking with this program and so are the distinguished mediators. Audience reaction was wonderful and I maintain that this series of mine is a demonstration of method in the science of mediation."

Carl Lindemann Jr., veep of NBC daytime programs, said there was no present thought of yanking the series despite the continuous adjectival gunfire from critics on the press.

Plenty. At left is a fistful of evidence: Variety's reports on the success of "The Horse Soldiers" in cities from coast to coast... after the movie spent most of its advertising budget on ABC Radio's exclusive broadcast of the Johansson-Patterson fight.

We're told the fight pulled the highest National Pulse ever – over 20,000,000 listeners. Apparently most of them made rapid tracks to "The Horse Soldiers."

Of course, no network delivers this kind of performance every day... probably won't again, in fact, until the return bout.

But it's comforting to know that, over a short period of time, ABC can promise you just as many unduplicated impressions as the fight delivered – for less money than the fight cost!

There's no more effective selling combination in network radio, for example, than Don McNeill, Howard Cosell (who did the commentary on Ingo's shining quarter hour) and John Daly's newscasters – all everyday regulars on ABC.

It's a sure-fire way to put your product in the heavyweight class.

ents' home where she falls sick. The frightened man, not knowing what has happened to his young wife, sneaks over to East Berlin and is caught by the East police. He flees and is shot. Dies just at the border line.

"Romeo and Juliet" makes an attempt to show the gruesome fate of young German people and also families who could live happily together but who are torn by the two political blocs with often tragical consequences. Unfortunately, part of this offering's impact and realism gets lost via a treatment that smacks a bit too much of cliche. That concerns direction, acting as well as the script. Latter could have been more refined. Direction is somewhat uneven. It's straightforward in many sequences but occasionally lacks pace which leads to a number of dull spots in the middle. Moreover, the handling of the players doesn't seem to be adroit enough. Some of the performances are too much on the conventional side.

Best performance is turned in by Reinhold Bernt who enacts the Communist. Although he leaves much to mere routine, he's still believable and convincing. Same goes for his wife played by Ilse Fuerstenberg. Herbert Weissbach and Marianne Mueller portray the other couple in an okay manner. The important parts of the two young people are played by Herbert Strass and Marion Degler. Their acting jobs are generally satisfactory but not too impressive, partly a fault of overly conventional direction. Technical credits come up to good standards. The authentic Berlin background gives the whole thing an interesting documentary touch. Hans.

GUEST APPEARANCE
With Joyce Heron, Charles Gray, Paul Whitsun-Jones, Susannah York, David Saire, Mark Burns
Director: Philip Saville
Writer: Lester Powell
60 Mins., Sun., 10:30 p.m.
ABC-TV, from Manchester

A Grade A performance from Charles Gray in the deliberately hammed-up style gave this comedy-melodrama the benefit of the doubt. That doubt: whether it was supposed to be comedy or melodrama in the main. Certainly when Gray wasn't on-scene the situations took on an edge of seriousness they rarely had otherwise, and they suffered. For, taken straight, the plot was almost silent-movie stuff.

The thesp aforementioned played one Stuart Marlowe, an actor always living a part whether on stage or off. Needing $8,400 to get himself a role in a new production, he blackmails an old flame, Grace (Joyce Heron), by charming her teenage daughter. But the latter falls in love with him, which fact precipitates a mother-daughter scene involving the former's confession that she is still fond of the rotter. All is resolved, however, by Stuart's announcing that he has got his role by other means and by his tearing up Grace's cheque—with the payoff revealing further that he hasn't actually gained the part but has for once been acting the hero.

The tour-de-force was aided by direction that made full and effective use of close shots and filmic angles. In the femme department, Joyce Heron gave a nicely controlled performance as Grace, while Susannah York as the daughter came over with considerable charm and winsomeness. As the only other cast member who really mattered, Paul Whitsun-Jones scored in the good-line-endowed part of Marlowe's agent. Erni.

WEDNESDAY MAGAZINE
With Lady Fleming, Andre Maurois, Eva Bartok, John Berger, Sam Wanamaker, Marghanita Laski, Duff Newton, John Witty, Trumpeters of the Royal Military School of Music, Derek Bond
Producer: Lorna Pegram
Director: Richard Gilbert
45 Mins., Wed., 2:45 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Also billed under the title "Mainly For Women," this last in a series of programs that's now resting till the fall claimed attention through the personalities it introduced. Approach throughout was conditioned, it seemed, by the accepted theory that women want to get a rose-spectacled view of life in their reading and viewing; certainly there was little contact with any of the harshnesses of reality.

Hence a chat with Eva Bartok, for a start, evoked no fireworks or jolting revelations about her much-publicized love life: the lady emerged as a warmly sympathetic personality guided by a cosy philosophy and sweet sentiment. Lady Fleming, interviewed in company with Andre Maurois by Marghanita Laski, profferred a few gentle tributes to her late husband, Sir Alexander Fleming discoverer of penicillin. John Berger talked about art, making out a phony case that many great painters were guided by a hyped-up esthetic appreciation of food; Derek Bond figured in a take-it-or-leave-it diversion in the shape of a three-minute tour of a seaside town; and Sam Wanamaker read Damon Runyon's "Butch Minds The Baby" amusingly.

All of which, supplemented by a pre-filmed tour of an agricultural college, was acceptable if not world-shattering. Production throughout was workmanlike. Erni.

them. Cohen is w.k. here via the Ed Sullivan Show and his acceptance in Canada needs no bolstering.

The "Jack" of the title is Jack Shapira, billed "and his orchestra," a 14-man big-sound group that gets most of the show to make it practically a miniature of CBC-TV's successful Jack Kane show, "Music Makers," out of Toronto. The Kane show preemed as a summer replacement and garnered such an audience it was kept on and built into one of the web's top items. Ernie Mutimer, producer of the new Winnipeg musical, may have a similar project in mind.

Format resembles the "Music Makers," using canary Shirley Shaw, a femme capable with the pipes as well as a neat looker. She was on twice, chirping ballad and boogie and doing nicely with both. Another guest was cowpoke-chanter Stu Davis, due for his own tv show later this season. The Selkirk Septet (with eight men) is a Dixieland combo from the Shapira band.

Shapira emulates Jack Kane, emceeing the show, fronting the band, clowning modestly here and there and generally tying everything together. This resemblance to the established "Music Makers," while slightly disconcerting at first, isn't a serious fault. In fact, if the Shapira stint gains strength as it progresses in its weekly orbit, it could also collect a permanent spot on the web, plus a sponsor. Gorm.

Hawaii Plays 2-Legged Musical Chairs in Flock Of Radio Exec Shiftings

Honolulu, July 7.

You can't keep track of the players without a program these days.

M. Franklyn Warren, general manager of KPOA, succeeds J. Howard Worrall as general manager of the Hawaiian Broadcasting System, which includes KGMB-TV and KGMB. Melvin B. Wright, KGMB manager, resigned to join Skyline TV network in Idaho. Robert Costa, veteran KGMB exec, quit to join Lund & Heitman advertising agency. Bob Sevey leaves Holst and Male ad agency to become KGMB-TV sales manager; Dan Hunter, KGMB chief engineer; Dean Buchanan KGMB news director, and Bob Moore, KGMB studio supervisor, shift to KHVH radio. Ron Miyahira, KHVH's chief engineer, moves to KGMB. Torkel Westly, KGMB controller, is out.

Meanwhile, new manager for KPOA to succeed Warren, is Perry Carle, upped from sales manager, and appointed by David Mendelsohn, president of Radio Hawaii. And tradesters insist Fin Hollinger, former KPOA chief, will take over as manager of KPOI (formerly KOHN) in September.

Flurry is attributed in part to "restlessness" resulting from ownership changes, most notably involving Hawaiian Broadcasting System operations.

Announcers are chronic station-to-station shiftees here but this is the first time so many execs have had to play two-legged musical chairs on this tight little isle.

PACT GAZZARA FOR 'CRIME CLUB' SERIES

London, July 7.

Ben Gazzara has been signed to star in the first episode of a series called "Crime Club," to be produced by Towers of London, Ltd., in conjunction with National Telefilm Associates.

Producer Harry Alan Towers said that all rights for the "Crime Club" title have been cleared. He explained that through agreements with Derel Producing Associates, "we have secured the U. S. rights from Doubleday. This, added to the British rights which we already held, through Collins Publishers, gives us world-wide rights to the 'Crime Club' title," as well as its source material.

Cornell Woolrich, scripter of "Rear Window" has been hired to do the first episode. Ted Post will direct. Series will feature a continuing host, not yet signed.

dressed a public letter to leading film syndicators and producers on the trade organization matter. What prompted his letter was the need for qualitative research needed to advise his clients seeking a syndication program buy. Dunier said he received responses and most syndicators acknowledged it was a good idea, but blamed it on the 'other fellow'' whose competitive spirit prevents the formation of an organization. Only SG and National Telefilm Associates sent representatives to see him and explore the matter further.

But that's where the situation rests at this stage.

In the foreign field, syndicators have had a number of meetings under the chairmanship of Merle Jones of CBS, but nothing solid has come of it. The Motion Picture Export Assn. also has stepped in, with member motion picture companies beginning to form a nucleus telefilm export group. Betting is that ultimately some foreign telefilm organization will be formed, either in or out of the MPEA. But that will take some time yet. For a trade organization on the domestic front, the outlook is dim indeed.

releasing oldies to tv. That threat is rather meaningless if the distributor is solely engaged in handling oldies for tv. But if the distributor in question handles both theatrical and tv pix, it spells trouble. The revenues from pix tv distribution is small potatoes compared to the boxoffice of theatres.

Associated Artists Productions, before it was absorbed by United Artists Associates, was very active in the foreign tv field with its Warner features. Now with United Artists at the helm, UAA is expected to adopt a more careful attitude on selling off its cinematic backlog to tv. Metro, to date, has stayed clear of distributing its pre-'49 backlog to foreign tv. Dickering has been going on in Canada, the only foreign market opened for negotiations by Loew's to date. Columbia's Screen Gems has been active in the foreign features-to-tv field, but there, too, SG is guided by the wishes of its parent theatrical company.

Company is bullish on the coming year, anticipating a 44.3% overall increase in production at its three studios. It expects to film for itself, for rental tenants and for producers using its below-line cost-plus-fee services a total of 854 half-hours, compared with 592 in the past fiscal year.

On the breakdown, estimated production of series in which it has ownership in 1959-60 will total 384 half-hours, compared with 251 in the past year, a 53% increase. On below-line production service, Desilu will film an anticipated 327 half-hours, compared with 302 in 1958-59, an 8% hike. On a straight rental basis, 143 half-hours are anticipated as against 39 in the past year.

Report added that the company's present stockpile of telefilm from which profits will be derived through residual usage, totaling 560 half-hours, will be increased in the current fiscal year by 69% to an aggregate of 944 half-hours.

Allen & Rossi's Local TV Specs Break-In Plan

Hollywood, July 7.

Creation of touring units to play local television station "spectaculars" and use the appearances as an opportunity to break in new material and routines was proposed last week by the comedy team of Marty Allen and Steve Rossi, current at the Cocoanut Grove here.

Allen & Rossi, like other comics, complain there's no longer any place where they can try out new material. But they propose a concrete plan for "local tv spectaculars" as one means of solving the problem.

Allen puts it this way: "In the old days, an act played an entire circuit and could try out new material along the way. By the time he got to the Palace, he knew he was ready and whether his material is right or wrong. Today, there just isn't any place. The only possibility is the Catskills, and that's no good either because the audiences there are too sharp. You could go over great there, but in other parts of the country you'd be dead."

Local tv appearances could be the answer as far as material for television is concerned, the team points out. "If we could try out new material on local stations in Pittsburgh, or Cleveland or Buffalo, before a live studio audience, we'd have a pretty good idea whether the routine could work or not. Then, if we did a Sullivan guest shot, we'd be able to come on with fresh stuff."

Pair point out that a touring unit—a comic or comedy team, a couple of singers and maybe a novelty act—could be offered locally as a tv spectacular for a prestige local sponsor, a bank for example. They point to a bank's buy of a one-man show by Andre Previn as an hour special in San Diego as an example. They also point out that for the prices stations pay for feature films, they could buy such a unit on a one-night basis. Acts wouldn't demand too much because of the opportunities offered to test new material.

They also suggest that such appearances could coincide with their nitery dates in the city involved. No conflict would exist between tv and the nitery date, in that they'd use their standard turn in the bistro while testing new stuff on the air. Moreover, they believe such a tv shot would have enormous promotional value in boosting business at their local nitery stand.

Rossi, the straightman and singer of the team, also points out that such units would provide a fine source of experience and exposure for singers. Pointing to the situation among vocalists today—the kids who have big disclicks but can't draw nitery business because their records are aimed at teenagers, he adds there's no place for a singer to break in. Years ago, it was with the bands, but today a singer who wants to learn his trade has nowhere to do it. Such local specs would be an invaluable source of experience for vocalists too, he states.

CANADA B'CAST FEATHERS FLYING ON ALL SIDES IN SUCCESSION OF BLOWUPS

By PAUL GORMLEY

Ottawa, July 7.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corp., owned by the public and reporting to Parliament through a federal cabinet minister, has been taken over the jumps this year. It's been pounded by the newspapers, Parliament, the public, a government committee and its own employees. There is little wonder that it begins to show signs of wear, evident when a newspaper (Ottawa Citizen) reported the corporation's acting president, E. L. Bushell, in charge while the president, Alphonse Ouimet, is ill, intends to resign, although it's been denied by the government.

Bushnell, one of the veterans of broadcasting in Canada and a strong backbone of CBC in both its roles as radio and combined AM-tv airer of the nation, as they occurred, has had to stand the force of a string of blasts and shakeups that would have sent most private corporations tumbling.

First serious upset came with a strike of CBC producers at the end of last winter, disrupting air schedules out of Montreal chiefly. Then came the government committee on broadcasting which dove immediately into the costs, to CBC, of its sponsored shows and demanded CBC provide details of what it paid and what the sponsors paid for each commercial airer. Under an order from the committee, it is making up this gigantic report.

Dovetailing into this was a sudden blasting from Roman Catholics, mainly in Quebec, about a drama aired on the CBC's French-language web to mark the beatification of Mother d'Youville, founder of the Grey Nuns. The indignation of the Catholics brought a humble apology from the corporation. The parliamentary committee continued with its appointed needling and quizzing.

Also Takes a 'Frosting'

Next whiplashing came from Ontario's premier, Hon. Leslie Frost, who complained in loud, clear noise that CBC had mishandled its broadcasts of the Ontario election. What got this fanfare more attention than usual was the fact that Frost and his party had won the election yet blamed CBC for strong and large partisanship.

CBC had scarcely wiped off the ointment from these scars when the Canadian public reared up against a statement made by Joyce Davidson, one of the featured performers on CBC's evening gag show, "Tabloid," during her guesting on Dave Garroway's "Today" out of New York. Miss Davidson, flabbergasted at the furore her remark had created, stood firm on her voiced belief that she, "like most Canadians, was indifferent to the visit of Queen Elizabeth to Canada." This was a controversy that had plenty support on both sides, brought unwanted notoriety to Miss Davidson which continued, after her return to Toronto, and included some stone throwing at her home. Currently, she's "taking a vacation" from her CBC video chores but is retiring.

Naturally, every one of these items had repercussions in the federal parliament, in various ways, and was discussed on the floor of the House of Commons in Ottawa. The last (at the moment) roaring sound being beamed at the CBC, the one that has resulted in the reported (though denied) pending resignation of Bushnell, comes from the offered—resignations of 37 key CBC officials, most of them from the corporation's public affairs offices, based on alleged political meddling in CBC operations.

The resignations were cued by the withdrawal of a CBC morning gab stanza on radio called "Preview Commentary," which used reporters from the parliamentary press gallery to give breakfast-time dialers a picture of happenings on Parliament Hill. The feathers were flying on all sides. Newspaper editorials asked, "Who is the boss of CBC?" when Bushnell made the announcement that "Preview Commentary" would go back on the air in its former slot and all but three of the officials who resigned were back at work again. The corporation has not accepted any of the resignations, but three of the top resigners are waiting until they conclude their scheduled appearance before the parliamentary committee.

The last blowup, the resignations and their consequences, was believed to be the most serious occurrence in CBC's 23 years of existence. It seems calmed now, but the committee is still meeting in Ottawa to continue its probing and all concerned seem to be on the edges of their chairs waiting for the next one.

grosser represents a combination of sponsor coin stemming from "Talent Scouts," his Wednesday night full hour "Godfrey & Friends" and his 60-minute daytime entry. Most of the billings over the past 10 years came from Lipton Tea ("Talent Scouts"), Toni and Chesterfield.

The Sullivan $80,000,000 windfall was mostly Lincoln-Mercury coin, although in the past couple of seasons Eastman Kodak had been riding with the Sunday night entry. Mercury will be out completely next season with Kodak and Colgate picking up the tab. Today the Sullivan hour show represents a $12,000,000 program-time entry.

Como's $65,000,000 dates back to his Chesterfield allegiance when the singer had his early evening 15-minute showcase on CBS. Since '55 he's been embraced by a flock of participating sponsors on NBC and starting in the fall he begins a two-year stint for Kraft in the Wednesday 8 to 9 hour in a record-breaking $25,000,000 time-program deal.

Major chunk of Garroway's $60,000,000 billings stems from his eight-year helming of the "Today" show (over the years it's averaged out at $6,000,000 in billings each semester) plus his onetime Pontiac half-hour on NBC and his "Wide Wide World" showcase.

Garry Moore's been pulling them in ever since '52 when he started his full hour daytime show on CBS-TV, posting virtual SRO in sponsors almost from the start. Along with that are the meaty chunk of "I've Got a Secret" billings. He's been working steady and is now sold out to the tune of $6,000,000 annual billings on his Tuesday night 10 to 11 CBS-TV variety entry.

Linkletter's $57,000,000 billings are divided between two highly successful weekly entries, his daytime "House Party" (since '51) and his nighttime "People Are Funny" ('54).

Berle and Desi & Lucy square off at $46,000,000 each. The six-year Texaco-Buick ride accounts for the major chunk of Berle biz. Philip Morris, Procter & Gamble and General Foods on the half-hour "I Love Lucy" entry and Westinghouse on the full hour showcase contribute largely to the Desi & Lucy gross. (By present day rate card standards, Berle would be near the top of the heap, but it must be recalled that in the early days of Texaco sponsorship the client bought in comparatively cheap.)

Like Linkletter, Ralph Edwards hit the Top 10 on grosses through a two-show combination ("This Is Your Life," with Hazel Bishop and later Procter & Gamble as the underwriters, and "Truth Or Consequences", latter both as a nighttime and daytime entry.)

Groucho Marx has been pulling in the sponsorship loot since '51, ranging from a variety of clients spanning Elgin American, Lever Bros., Toni, DeSoto and Pharmaceuticals.

"What's My Line?," out of the Goodson-Todman shop, has been a sponsor windfall since its bow in '50. It made a bundle of loot for Stopette (just as Ralph Edwards' "This Is Your Life" made Raymond Spector and Hazel Bishop a prosperous enterprise).

These 10, all told, made big clients bigger and small clients (Stopette, Hazel Bishop, etc.) little giants. Not all of them were converted into sponsor success stories The Philip Morris-"I Love Lucy" walkaway is a classic example. DeSoto tried hard but couldn't make it with Groucho. Mercury was forced to pull out of Sullivan. But these are the 10 who led the parade as the networks' cash registers made with the happy noise.

Walter Disney, by virtue of his three-ply entries ("Disneyland," "Mickey Mouse Club," "Zorro") hits the Top 10 figures on the ABC billings, but this must be regarded as a package operation, as distinct from a personality or a show, as in the case of Godfrey, Sullivan, Como, et al.

ATV's Snazzy Layout

London, July 7.

Associated Television, the commercial web operating in the Midlands weekdays and in London at weekends, is laying a new floor at its Television Theatre, Wood Green, London. Maybe "has laid" is the correct tensing: the whole kingsize job was skedded for 18 days maximum, with workmen operating continuously in day and night shifts. Uptodate equipment is being installed on the reinforced concrete floor, which covers what was the old legit house stage and the orchestra pit.

Work continues meantime on ATV's new hq at ATV House, near Marble Arch, due to be completed in March, 1960. Phase one of the project was finalized last Monday (29), on which day directors, execs and about 250 staff shifted there from Television House, Kingsway.

for the debt-ridden operation. Financial backers for the Hurleigh-helmed operation are Albert G. McCarthy, real-estate developer and builder with extensive holdings, and Chester H. Ferguson, a Tampa, Fla., attorney and associate of McCarthy. Their commitment could be well over $1,500,000 before the operation could be put on a more solid foundation and back-debts settled.

Ferguson now is chairman of the MBS board. He replaced Malcolm E. Smith, whose group had to bow out because of their inability to meet current debts. Web currently is losing about $50,000 a month, about 50% less than the level of last March, when the Smith group took over. Richard H. Davimos, a Smith associate, resigned the presidency.

In court, Mutual's assets were put at $579,607. Web's 10 largest creditors, as listed in the petition, are American Telephone and Telegraph, $508,000; RKO Teleradio, $128,000; Milwaukee Braves National League ball club, $49,000; A. C. Nielsen, $45,916; River Operating Co., $40,750; Chicago White Sox, $35,000; Chicago Cubs, $30,000; Detroit Tigers, $30,000; ASCAP, $24,000; Boston Red Sox, $20,000.

RKO Teleradio stations, as forecast, are leaving the Mutual fold as of Aug. 19. Probable N.Y. affiliate for MBS will be WINS, replacing WOR. Web says it has lined up new affiliate in Boston, San Francisco and other RKO markets in preparation for the August bowout.

MBS' court petition listed the salaries for the next 30 days of the following web officers: Hurleigh, $1,000 per month, plus salary earned as a performer under a union contract; Sidney P. Allen, v.p. in charge of sales, $2,083 per month; Charles Godwin, v.p. in charge of station relations, $1,667 per month; and James Z. Gladstone, assistant treasurer and comptroller, $1,250 per month.

Vt.) and Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.). The Senators have worked out a harmonious arrangement whereby the choice of format is shifted from one program to the next.

The Scott-Clark program has not attracted much attention outside Pennsylvania, but colleagues from states with divided representation are becoming interested in the idea, and it might well be emulated.

Of the two, Clark has the most grounding in broadcasting having made extensive use of the media while Mayor of Philadelphia beginning in 1952. According to Clark's assistant, however, it was Scott who initially conceived the idea of a joint show early this year. Both Senators are pleased with its success so far and the general harmony of the arrangement.

The program is available to Pennsylvania stations on a cost basis—about $45 for the filmed version and $8.50 for the radio tape. It's made in the Senate radio-tv studios.

Viewers Pass Up Bonn For Red TV

Bonn, July 7.

Every fourth West German teleset owner is now able to receive East German television, and most W. Germans who view Red video regularly say it is better than the Bonn product.

This information is contained in a 32-page report just handed the Bonn All-German Affairs Ministry by Infratest, a Munich public opinion poll. The Munich poll was hired by the Ministry to survey W. German viewing of Red tv.

Infratest reports that the E. Germans are operating nine tv stations strategically placed along the 850 miles of German Iron Curtain frontier, from the Baltic to the Danube.

E. Germany's Curtain telecasting setup is being expanded rapidly. By 1964, the E. Germans will have no fewer that 61 Curtain transmitters beaming Red tv to W. Germany around the clock.

At present, E. German tv is received clearly in Hamburg, in the Ruhr and in Bavaria. Along most of the Curtain, it is the only tv available to W. German border dwellers.

Bonn government is worried about the inroads of Communist video. Out of 1,000 W. Germans polled on Red tv viewing, 62% said they preferred East to West video.

Ernst Lemmer, Bonn All-German Affairs Minister, admits: "We're taking a licking from Red tv. It's better, technically and artistically, than ours. But that's not strange. We started later, and the Communists have all the advantages."

What Lemmer means was explained by Horst Burmeister, E. German Minister of Posts who masterminds E. German tv. Said Burmeister:

"We have the pick of material for tv in East Germany. There is no competition between video and boxoffice. We show new films on tv first and then release them to our cinemas. We automatically televise theatre premieres, sporting events and cultural attractions."

E. German tv headquarters is at Adlershof, an East Berlin suburb, in a pre-war film studio. Burmeister reports that E. German propaganda to W. Germany is being concentrated in video:

"We want to show the West German worker what Socialism is doing for East Germany. The best way is to let him see for himself, and we are doing just this—with television."

In Berlin, there is hot competition between East and West for video viewers. E. German tv blankets West Berlin, and vice versa.

Rivalry is hot, too, in Geneva. W. German tv tied up all the circuits between Geneva and Germany, stranding E. German tv. For first three weeks of conference, East Germans chartered a plane daily to transport film from Geneva to East Berlin. Now they have circuits via Austria and Czechoslovakia.

GE's Same Show, New Title Poser

There's no telling whether General Electric next season will be sponsor of a program called "Mike Kovak" or another called "Man With a Camera" or still another called "Mike Kovak, Man With a Camera." Whatever it's to be called, the half-hour action-adventure stanza is targeted for a Monday night slot on ABC-TV for the '59-'60 semester.

Program last season was seen Thursdays on ABC-TV as "Man With a Camera." Ratings were bad, and it didn't look as if the telepic, featuring Charles Bronson, was going to get a renewal. When, surprisingly to many, it did, everybody involved took extreme care to disguise the fact that the new "Mike Kovak" was ever the old "Man With a Camera." For the past several days, however, all official ABC communiques refer to it once again as "Man With a Camera." There was a report that the "Mike Kovak" title was being legally contested. This may account for the decision to revert to "Man With a Camera," however odious the name may once have seemed.

To prove "confusion" is the answer to the famous question, "What's in a name?" GE, once any legalistics are cleared away, might actually call the thing, "Mike Kovak, Man With a Camera."

(GE is slated to sign officially for the program after July 10, at which time ABC said it will have cleared the stations GE requires.)

Show Biz & 'Blue Fairy' Go Steady

By LES BROWN

Chicago, July 7.

WGN-TV's "Blue Fairy" has evolved into a real life fantasy for its 15-year-old star, Brigid Bazlen, who now ranks with her three accomplished aunts, the Daly sisters—Maureen, Kay and Sheila—for precocity. What has happened and been offered to the youngster over the past 12 weeks reads like a bad scenario for a "B" film about a show biz career.

The chain of events began in April when the WGN show copped a Peabody Award. This led to a Time mag feature on the kidstar; and David Susskind, then casting the new NBC show, "Too Young To Go Steady," responded to the Time yarn by offering her an audition. She got the part and, with permission for WGN to do it, began commuting back and forth between Chi and New York for her two shows.

Next, Paddy Chayefsky asked her to take a principal role in his upcoming Broadway play, "The Dybbuk of Woodlawn." Her mother nixed it. Otto Preminger said he wanted Brigid for the part of Karen in his filmization of "Exodus." The Rodgers & Hammerstein office broached her re their new Mary Martin-starrer, "The Sound of the Bells." Somewhere in between all this she was mentioned as likely star for the film adaptation of her aunt Maureen's novel, "Seventeenth Summer."

'Gigi,' 'Go' and Ghost

A New York summer theatre wants her for the lead in "Gigi"; a record company asked her to etch the song, "Too Young To Go Steady"; and a book publisher is willing to byline her on a ghost-written book on teenage life.

So far she's accepted none of the definite offers, and it should be said that most of the proposals had not progressed beyond the "perhaps" stage. They represent, nevertheless, the vibrations that occur at a takeoff.

Her mother, Maggie Daly, insists that Brigid has never expressed a desire to become an actress, nor has she, as parent, been ambitious for her daughter. All Brigid's offers, she said, were made without their seeking them. The teener has neither a personal manager nor pressagent.

She has never had any formal dramatic training. Seven years ago, when she was 8, with no theatrical background whatever, she landed a child's role in the NBC soaper, "Hawkins Falls." It happened, allegedly, because a producer who met her in a drugstore thought she'd be ideal for the part. When it went off the air two years later, she went into two-year retirement until WGN paged her for "Blue Fairy."

Brigid-on-a-Jet

For the duration of "Too Young, "Miss Bazlen resided in New York and jet-planed to Chi once a week to tape her "Blue Fairy" show. Meanwhile, Gene Gelly gave her free dance lessons during the breaks in her rehearsal schedule.

In Gotham she stays with her aunt, Sheila John, who writes a syndicated column for 52 papers on teenage problems. Aunt Sheila was herself precocious, having her first short story published in Vogue at age 11 and becoming the Chicago Tribune's teenage editor at 15. Aunt Maureen Daly, now wed to mystery writer Bill Mc Givern, penned her bestselling opus, "Seventeenth Summer," at age 17.

Aunt Kay is exec veepee of the Norman, Craig & Kummel agency in New York, one of the top women in the Madison Ave. league; and Brigid's mother, Maggie, has long been a fashion show producer in Chi and frequent lecturer on the art of dress.

6G VIDTAPE BUDGET ON 'NIGHT COURT'

Hollywood, July 7.

"Night Court," Banner Production's syndication entry, is a filmed show brought in on a vidtape budget. Cost of the show, for which 78 half-hour episodes were filmed, is $6,000 per episode. The $6,000 includes everything, both above and below the line.

"Night Court" was created by Sandy Howard and is produced and directed by Sandy Spillman. Jay Jostyn is featured as the judge, with a number of other regulars, and the remainder of the cast virtually unknowns. Other regulars include Barney Biro, as public defender; Phil Tully as court clerk, and Ed Faulkner, as bailiff.

Credit for keeping budget down to $6,000 per episode level was attributed to pre-planning and the vet motion picture-telefilm technicians employed on the series.

WFAA-TV's 'Wanted'

Dallas, July 7.

A new program has made its bow on WFAA-TV to be seen at 10:30 p.m. and will be telecast for five minutes as a public service program, presented by WFAA-TV and Chevrolet, and designed to track down the nation's most wanted persons at large nationally and locally.

Series will be titled "Wanted" and besides a description and picture of the wanted criminal, information will be given as to the nature of the crime, and when feasible, viewers will be instructed as to how they can protect themselves and their families against that particular type of crime.

Show is produced by Andy Sidaris, who was director of the "Confession" series carried by the ABC-TV network and WFAA-TV, and Lloyd Cynningham, former Armv counter-intelligence officer. Both have had experience in the law enforcement field and television production.

'HOUSE ON K STREET' GETS A GO-AHEAD

CBS Films is shooting two more episodes on "House on K Street," the Dean Jagger starrer, on which a pilot already has been lensed.

Greenlight for another two was given by CBS Films production v.p. Leslie Harris on the basis of interest engendered by the pilot. The Sam Gallu project was brought in quite late for this early selling season. Reason for the go-ahead on another two, and six additional scripts, is the wish to be ready to accept an order quickly and get into production on the remaining episodes without adopting a "crash" program.

An order coming in September for a January start could be readily filled, for example, with three episodes in the can and six scripts on file. Series deals with a scientific criminologist.

'Tape Is What You Make It'

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Herbert Brodkin's remarks on tape in VARIETY June 24 deserve some comment.

Tape is what you make it. Sour grapes from some tape users stem from their premature attempts to make tape the wand which, in one pass, dispels all the limitations of electronic tv production.

Some of these complaints are the same as those which were directed at television itself in 1948 because live production then was awkward and immature. Little has happened since then, except that we've learned what to do with cameras, lights, and the people who perform before them.

Specifically, Mr. Brodkin made these comments: that the tapes had to be done 10 days before air time because mobile equipment was not available; that the actors did not know their lines because they did not have time for rehearsal; that exterior shooting involving more than one camera with different camera angles poses problems because of changes in light levels. Obviously, the first two "criticisms" have nothing to do with tape's magic ability to record what the camera sees.

As far as changing light values are concerned, producers and directors have had to cope with this on film since the most primitive days of the motion picture business, and they still are coping with variations in light. Tape can really perform miracles—but one miracle it will never perform is to change, control or affect the weather. This is really asking too much.

Only after we recognize and understand tape's present limitations can we begin to develop its potential. And this potential is enormous.

At NTA Telestudios, no day passes without a half dozen predictions by new users of tape that "tape is the future of the industry." And it is. At this stage, anyone who doesn't fully understand this is either unaware or misinformed.

The more I work with tape, the more I love it, because each week broadens the scope of what my staff is able to deliver to our clients on Living Tape.

A creative commercial producer finds a wealth of new tools in his ability to pre-edit and post-edit; his ability to develop exquisite lighting and composition by working with a monitor on set; his ability to mix and alter voice, music, sound effects, on the spot, with the final "print" available at the push of a button; his ability to perfect difficult product demonstrations by watching the actual picture as it will appear on home screens; his ability to integrate numerous electronic wipes and mats with effectiveness and ease; and, importantly, his ability to secure final approval from account people, and even from clients, before the sets are struck.

This is what tape can do now. It will deliver tomorrow exactly what our skill and ingenuity will put into it.

ACLU's Equal Time Stand

Congress was urged this week by American Civil Liberties Union to enact legislation "making clear beyond doubt" that bona fide radio-tv news broadcasts do not fall under the "equal time" requirements of the communications law.

ACLU's sentiments were expressed in a statement filed with the Senate and House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committees' Subcommittees on Communications currently studying proposals to change Section 315 of the 1934 Communications Act.

While endorsing legislation to exempt legit newscasts from Section 315's requirement, ACLU advised congressional subcommittees that other more sweeping revisions of Section 315, covering candidates' outright speeches, needed more careful study and should not be acted on at this time.

"These changes in the law would not only affect the radio-tv industry but would also have a sharp impact on our political party structure and our system of political campaigning," ACLU declared. "The issue should not be treated lightly, but should receive the most careful consideration through deep fact-finding, perhaps through study by a Presidential Commission."

Civil liberties group also took issue with FCC decision in Lar Daly case that tv newscasts are covered by the Section 315 "equal time" provision. "It is our view that Section 315 . . . does not require—in regard to newscasts strictly defined—the absolute decision recently made by the FCC . . . We welcome legislation making that clear beyond doubt," ACLU said.

Plough Stations In Exec Shuffle

Memphis, July 7.

In step with its recent purchase of WAGA in Atlanta, the Plough Broadcasting group of stations headed by Harold Krelstein, has reshuffled its operation with a number of promotions and streamline expansion program.

Krelstein, who directs operations of Memphis' WMPS, the flagship station of the five AMer's as well as WJJD, Chicago; WCAO, Baltimore, and WCOP, Boston, appointed three new veepees and made several other promotions. Rodger May, WMPS sales manager, moves up to v.p. in charge of the five veepees in charge of programming; Joe Deaderick, engineering coordinator, is now veepee in charge of engineering, and Volney Edwards, former WMPS auditor, is the new assistant-secretary-treasurer of the group.

Krelstein, who has skippered WMPS for more than 15 years, also named Ed Crump to director of production and special features from his post as WMPS program chief, while Don Stevens, WMPS deejay, moves in as head of the Memphis program staff; Gordon Simmons, WMPS studio supervisor, was pushed up to director of recording for the Plough Stations and Allan Avery, sales exec, replaces May as WMPS sales manager.

The call letters of the Atlanta operation were changed to WPLO-AM and FM due to the Storer ownership of Atlanta's WAGA-TV.

Brit. ABC-TV Alter O'seas Distribution

London, July 7.

Major changes in the overseas distribution of vidpix and tv programs controlled by ABC-TV (of Britain) were set forth by C. J. Latta, managing director of the parent company, Associated British Picture Corp.

R. A. (Tony) Morris, who transferred from the Corporation's distribution arm, Associated British-Pathe, some 18 months ago, to initiate and develop international distribution for ABC-TV, is relinquishing his position and the responsibility for foreign sales is being assumed by AB-Pathe.

Morris, who recently returned to London from a three months' tour of the Far and Middle East, has been with the Corporation for 11 years and for several years was in charge of AB-P's overseas sales. In that capacity he made several round-the-world journies, including many visits to the U.S. One of his first assignments for ABC-TV was to sell a vintage package of feature pix to the U.S. and the deal was finally closed with NTA.

Clifton Fadiman Helms New Educ'l Vidpix With Ford Foundation Coin

Fund for the Advancement of Education, a part of the Ford Foundation, donated three grants worth a total of $366,000 to stimulate a series of half-hour telepic programs for highschool and educational station consumption. Money was given to the Boston-based Council for a TV Course in the Humanities, and so far 12 half-hour films have been produced under the guidance of Clifton Fadiman, who also appears on some of the stanzas.

In all, 120 such humanities shows are to be made. In addition to Fadiman, some Yale U. profs. and the actors of the Stratford, Ont., Shakespeare players will appear in the series. It's likely that Encyclopaedia Britannica Films will distribute the finished product, which will be color.

Several thousands of dollars more are reportedly needed to complete the project. Some of the films have already been shown on a "trial basis" as part of high school humanities courses.

ABC on Equal Time

never indulged to any marked degree in forums, debates, etc., and for that web to now embrace the same proposals for sweeping alterations, as have NBC and CBS, would mean perhaps that if the necessary legislation were affected before the Presidential campaign, ABC would feel morally obligated to air extensive public affairs programming when it doesn't seem to have the budgetary wherewithal of CBS and NBC.

CBS has been pitching that a revocation of the disputed section would enable the networks to air "Lincoln-Douglas" type debates by the principal Presidential candidates without having to worry about giving equal time to perhaps two dozen other presidential candidates. CBS feels that the public must be informed in detail about the character and platform of the main candidates next year, particularly since there's a good chance that neither the chosen Democrat or his Republican opponent are likely to have national reputations, and if they do have national reputations perhaps their opinions don't. Consequently, the only way to transmit fully and fairly the makeup of the candidates is by staging on radio and especially on tv debates, forums, etc., and that mere news coverage won't suffice.

Kansas City — Two newsmen have recently been added to the staff of KCMO and KCMO-TV, it was announced by E. K. Hartenbower, general manager. Richard Jamison, former news director of KWOS, Jefferson City, Mo., and Dean Humphrey, formerly with KXXX, Colby, Kans., have joined the staff, working under Jim Monroe, news director.

Asked to identify the channel most likely to broadcast commercials for the following advertiser: "Company D has been slipping in sales lately and is desperately trying to regain its position by loud, big promises," only 6% selected channel 2, 6% channel 4, 11% channel 7 and 77% named the combined independents.

Study, said Jones, proves for the first time what until now timebuyers may have sensed but could not document: that a timebuying decision cannot be based only on rate cards and ratings but must also consider the intangible but very real and important factor of the "personality or image of a television station in the eyes of the community it serves."

Jones, together with o&o v.p. Craig Lawrence, CBS-TV Spot Sales research director Bob Davis and v.p.'s-general managers Frank Shakespeare (WCBS-TV, N.Y.) and Clark George (KNXT, L.A.) toured the presentation through the country last week, hitting L.A. with an agency-press luncheon and then moving up to San Francisco to wrap it up after earlier appearances in New York, Chicago and Detroit.

air here regularly came when KMBC preempted the time for newscasts and other programming. It likewise took off the Peter Lind Hayes show, and between the two brought some sharp reaction from listeners.

If there is any net result from the strike experience, it served to introduce a lot of newcomers to broadcasting and in considerable volume. A number of large stores and retail establishments, theatres and shopping centers found they could continue to operate satisfactorily without a daily newspaper, but that sales emphasis was changed in many respects.

Yet when the strike was over, advertising generally settled back into its old tracks, probably proving that basic values and needs do more to dictate the media used than other considerations.

The KMBC organization put out its own mimeographed condensed news sheet daily during the strike, circulating as much as 30,000 per edition, and especially covering large gatherings such as the Starlight Theatre, American League baseball games, and others. Credit for this was charged to "public service," and expense to the station promotion budget.

the best available producer talent for "Playhouse 90" and other house-built entries.

Today, with the desperate need for producers who know their stuff, CBS is in a fairly comfortable position. They're not letting any of them get away. (When it was discovered last week that Gordon Duff's contract was up they immediately negotiated a newer and more attractive one).

A producer with a rep and with his own independent operation can reap a harvest. There's the case of Dave Susskind, who will bring in no less than 35 specials next season. Then there's Bob Saudek. Over and above "Omnibus" he'll produce four specials for NBC, along with the Leonard Bernstein series and a new series for children.

Smith Goes to Washington" scoring a 15.5 to 9.7 for Paar.

This, according to WCBS-TV programmers, should be the case hereafter particularly on Friday nights when the station runs such film magnets as "Mr. Smith" or not. It contends that when Paar begins his repeats on Fridays starting this week (10) he is going to lose most of his audience.

At least, that's what WCBS-TV programmers anticipate.

Seattle AFTRA Elects

Seattle, July 7.

Bill Schonely, KOMO-TV announcer, has been reelected president of the Seattle local of American Federation of Television & Radio Artists.

Other officers chosen for 1959-60 terms were Lou Gillette, KJR news director, first vice president; Mike Rhodes, KING-TV and radio announcer, second v.p.; Beatrice Johnson, freelance vocalist, recording secretary, and Wesley Eby, freelance singer, treasurer. George Peckham continues as executive secretary for the local.

Houston—Jack Sharp and Bill Scott have joined the staff of KILT here.

Mestre-Azcarraga In Latino Swap on Telepix, Live Talent

Mexico City, July 7.

Goar Mestre, Cuban radio and television magnate, is negotiating a longterm tv interchange pact with Emilio Azcarraga. Deal being work out involves reciprocal exchange of best filmed programs of both nations. In Cuba, release will be over facilities of CMQ-TV, Channel 6, and Cuban programs will be released here over channels of the Mexican television system.

Another point is that both executives will work for an interchange of talent for appearances on live radio and television programs. It's expected that the contracting of entertainers will be sizable.

This is the first major pact being readied between two governments in entertainment industry since the Castro revolutionaries forcibly wrested power from the Batista regime.

Amarillo, Tex.—Tom Shaw has been promoted to sales manager at KIXZ here.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Gary Stites (Carlton): "A GIRL LIKE YOU" (Jones†) is another solid rocking ballad entry which should further this young singer's impact. "HEY LITTLE GIRL" (Jones†) is a neat rhythm side.

Billy Eckstine - Count Basie (Roulette): "I WANT A LITTLE GIRL" (Shapiro-Bernstein*) is a fine ballad showcase for this parlay of talent. It could bring Billy Eckstine back into the hit lists. "LONESOME LOVER BLUES" (St. Louis†) is a nifty swinging side due for juke play.

Vince Maloy (Felsted): "DRAGGIN' ALL NIGHT" (Combine†) is another saga of hot-rodders that races furiously without going very far. "SODA POP" (Burlington*) is a somewhat noisy item.

Little Laurie Jay (World): "RAINBARREL" (Republic†) bows this moppet vocalist in a pleasant side which the subteens may go for. "THE JAZZ ORGAN" (Republic†) is a routine rocking instrumental done Morty Jay's combo.

Chet Elliott (Seeco): "HOMEWORK" (Brgihton*) is an okay rocking ballad handled in the unpolished style which the kids go for. "ANYWHERE YOU GO" (Brgihton*) is a typical big ballad in the rocking genre.

Randy Sparks (Verve): "CRACKERJACK RING" (Sheldon), a charming number, is expertly handled by this fine folksinger, "MAKE HER MINE" (BVC*), a class ballad, also gets a good workover.

June Valli (Mercury): "I LOVE YOU TRULY" (Pure†), the traditional wedding song, gets a lush new arrangement and excellent vocal by this fine songstress. "YOU WERE MEANT FOR ME" (Robbins*) is another oldie updated with a beat.

Bill Haley & His Comets (Decca): "CALDONIA" (Cherio†), the Louis Prima hit of a few years back, returns in a bouncing slice by this rocking combo. "SHAKY" (Seabreeze) is an interesting instrumental.

Bob McFadden (Brunswick): "THE BEAT GENERATION" (Northern*) is a clever spoof of the beatniks but the theme seems a bit esoteric for the pop market. "THE MUMMY" (Northern*) is another humorous entry neatly performed.

Elaine Dunn (RCA Victor): "TOUCH ME" (Sapphire*) is a standout class ballad that should stick around for some time even if it doesn't stir a lot of immediate noise. This songstress projects in a savvy, thoroughly pro style. "FAR AWAY PLACES" (Laurel*), the standard, also gets a fine workover.

Douglassaires (Todd): "BEER AND SKITTLES" (Amber*) is an attractive uptempo number with a catching marching tempo and a beer-promoting lyric. "WITH YOU" (Cornell*) is an okay ballad entry.

Tony Bennett (Columbia): "SMILE" (Bourne*), based on the theme of Chaplain's "Modern Times," is shaped into a fine ballad side that will be helped by the film's current circulation. "YOU CAN'T LOVE 'EM ALL" (Feist*), another pic tune from the "Say One For Me" score, is a solid swinging item.

Deane Hawley (Dore): "NEW FAD" (Hillary-Ultra-Hermosa) is a clever rocking novelty incorporating the names of the current juve idols. It'll draw spins. "PRETTY LITTLE MARY" (Hillary-Ultra) is familar stuff.

Best Bets

SONNY CAMPBELL .... THE ONE IN THE MIDDLE
(APT) .... Wicked Love

Sonny Campbell's "The One In The Middle" (Saxon†), a sharp rhythm number with a nifty lyric tailored for juve tastes, is brightly belted for his impact. "Wicked Love" (Saxon†) is an okay slow ballad.

BILL DARNEL .... PASSION FLOWER
(Paris) .... Ka-Ding-Dong

Bill Darnel's "Passion Flower" (Longridge) has an offbeat sound with an exotic flavor over a firm beat due for strong returns. "Ka-Ding-Dong" (Greta†) is a snappy uptempo entry.*

JOHNNY CASH .... FIVE FEET HIGH AND RISING
(Columbia) .... I Got Stripes

Johnny Cash's "Five Feet High and Rising" (Cash†), is a standout number in the country genre which has come back big in the pop market. "I Got Stripes (Cash†) is another good number in the same groove.

JOHNNY HORTON .... PLAID AND CALICO
(Dot) .... Shadows On The Old Bayou

Johnny Horton's "Plaid and Calico" (Meridian†) is a brught, country-styled ballad due for hefty spins as a followup to this singer's current "Battle of New Orleans" click. "Shadows On The Old Bayou" (American†) is a solid country rhythm tune also due for plays.

CLYDE McPHATTER .... TWICE AS NICE
(MGM) .... Where Did I Make My Mistake

Clyde McPhatter's "Twice As Nice" (Roosevelt†) is a first-rate rocking ballad belted by one of the best practitioners of this idiom. "Where Did I Make My Mistake" (Siras†) is a torchy ballad also delivered very effectively.

FRANK POURCEL ORCH .... TANGO MILITAIRE
(Capitol) .... Everytime

Frank Pourcel's "Tango Militaire" (Francis. Day & Hunter) is a sparkling instrumental slice due to continue this French orch's standing in the U.S. pop lists. "Everytime" (Hill & Range†), a Gallic tune, is a pretty waltz due to get a big share of the spins.*

BILL COURTNEY .... WITHOUT HER LOVE
(RCA Victor) .... Judy Is

Bill Courtney's "Without Her Love" (Arch) is a rocking ballad angled strictly for the teenagers by this young vocalist. "Judy Is" (Arch*) is an okay ballad in a somewhat more pretentious vein.*

LEWISOHN STADIUM'S SATCHMO SURPRISE

Louis Armstrong made a "surprise" appearance at the Lewisohn Stadium, N. Y., Saturday (4) and proved to the assemblage that he wasn't sick at all. He gave a 15 minute concert in which a jazz fest was being staged with Johnny Dankworth's band from Britain, Jack Teagarden, Gene Krupa, Carmen McRae and Wild Bill Davison.

Armstrong, who came in from Spoleto, Italy, the day before, had come up to the concert with his manager, Joe Glaser, president of Associated Booking Corp. Following one of Dankworth's numbers, he stepped onstage, and received a standup ovation from the 8,000 gathered there. Some in the audience sang "Happy Birthday," and the Negro trumpeter started a concert which began with "Sleepy Time Down South" and continued with some of his faves.

Armstrong had been taken ill with penumonia while playing the Spoleto Festival. He recovered sufficiently to fly in on the day previous to the appearance, and came over to assure the jazz public that he was still solvent physically. At the conclusion of his stint, the audience kept on cheering. The management had to empty the stage before the audience would start to leave.

Album Reviews

Glenn Miller Orch: "For The Very First Time" (RCA Victor). The vast recorded repertoire of swing music which Glenn Miller left behind as his heritage has again been tapped for another standout packaged production. This de luxe three-platter set, taken from the late bandleader's remotes over the CBS network in the 1940-42 period, resurrects some of the best work done by this band. The sound is rich and the beat is confident in this collection of over 50 numbers, most being standards. Ray Eberle, Marion Hutton, Tex Beneke and The Modernaires are featured on the vocals. The technical quality of these air checks is highgrade. Extensive notes and the inclusion of a couple of paintings make this a highly attractive offering.

Johnny Mathis: "More Johnny's Greatest Hits" (Columbia). One of the hottest album sellers around, Johnny Mathis follows the click formula of his previous set, "Johnny's Greatest Hits," with another roundup of his more recent single offerings. Mathis' flexible pipes work out on sumbers like "A Certain Smile," "Teacher, Teacher," "Stairway To The Sea," "Call Me," "Very Much In Love," "Small World" and others. Not all have been smashes as singles, but they add up to an attractive songalog.

"Carol Channing" (Vanguard). As part of its "Theatre Showcase" series, this label has put Carol Channing's nitery routine into the groove for a sophisticated parlay of song and comedy. In the latter department are the clever takeoffs on Sophie Tucker and Tallulah Bankhead, the Palace Theatre routine, "Somewhere There's A Little Bluebird," "The Cecilia Sisson Story," her "Report on Las Vegas' Opening" and "Carol Apologizes To Washington, D.C., Audiences," all of them done with a stilleto wit. In addition to her trademarked "Diamonds Are A Girl's Best Friend," Miss Channing also clicks with her vocal of "Little Girl From Little Rock," also from "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," and such material numbers as "Calypso Pete" and "The Old Yahoo Step." Musical backgrounds under Robert Hunter's baton are excellent.

Ira Ironstrings: "Charleston In Hi-Fi" (Warner Bros.). The jazzy rhythms of the 1920s are given a crackerjack period-style workover by this band. With banjo leads and a dixieland flavoring, Ira Ironstrings (a phony name which this label is using as a running gag), and large crew come up with a set of swinging oldies like "Charleston," "Varsity Drag," "Black Bottom," "Ain't She Sweet," "The Sheik of Araby" and other relics of that dancing epoch.

"Sounds Like Gene Vincent" (Capitol). This is authentic rockabilly with a driving beat and some earthy vocals by Gene Vincent and his foursome, the Blue Caps. A savvy performer with an expressive set of blues pipes, Vincent jumps through a book of teenage-slanter tunes such as "I Might Have Known," "In Love Again," "Reddy Teddy," "I Got To Get To You Yet," "My Heart" and "Maybelline," among others.

"Les Ballets Africains" (Coral). Tying into the U.S. tour of this troupe, this arresting LP is based on the native folksongs and chants from various areas of Africa. This is much more sophisticated music than what is usually associated with tribal Africa and the performers have obviously been influenced by the European tradition, particularly in a song like "Minko Sodia." The blend of the exotic and the familiar adds up to a fascinating program.

Jane Harvey: "Leave It To Jane" (Dot). A onetime Benny Goodman band vocalist who later worked as a single on the nitery and tv circuit, Jane Harvey has been inactive for the past few years but still impresses as a highly stylish thrush in this comeback package. Miss Harvey has a wide range, firm control and a warm projection that give this collection a big kick. She ranges from jump tunes like "I Sent For You Yesterday and Here You Come Today" to soft ballads like "Misty."

"Jesse Crawford Plays Richard Rodgers" (Decca). Richard Rodgers' music, one of the most important staples in the album market, gets another melodic display via Jesse Crawford's workout on a fullscale pipe organ. Crawford achieves colorful, and sometimes powerful, organ effects on a group of familiar numbers like "People Will Say We're In Love," "Hello, Young Lovers," "Lover," "Blue Moon," "My Heart Stood Still" and others.

Jacques Belasco: "S.O.S." (Urania). "S.O.S.," standing for "serenade our sweethearts," spotlights pianist-conductor Jacques Belasco and his orch in an attractive set of instrumentals titled after girl's names. The set includes a variety of dance tempos, including south-of-the-border rhythms, waltzes and fox-trots, all done in good taste. Except for one tune, "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," it's all fresh material.

Russ Garcia: "Half Time" (Liberty). Russ Garcia takes a University Brass Band through a jaunty march across 25 university campuses with a rundown of their energetic marching songs. It's a set that's better suited to the football season and it's worth keeping in mind.

"Our Common Heritage" (Decca). Another facet of the "spoken word" on LP is presented in this recitation of patriotic American poetry by a group of topflight actors. The late Walter Huston recites numerous pieces including, "Abraham Lincoln Walks At Midnight" and "O Captain, My Captain"; Bing Crosby reads "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "Old Ironsides"; Agnes Moorehead recites "Barbara Fritchie" and "Nancy Hanks"; Pat O'Brien does "Sheridan's Ride"; Brian Donlevy reads "The American Flag" and "Columbus" and Fredric March recites "Paul Revere's Ride."

London Sets $1.98 Tag For Telefunken in U.S.; More Dealer Incentives

In another facet of its "Operation Dealer Support" program, London Records will release the German Telefunken line in the U.S. at $1.98. (The Telefunken disks sell for $6 in Germany.) In addition, London is applying special dealer incentives to get the Telefunken line rolling here as well as the Richmond label, London's low-price subsid.

The theory behind the Telefunken-Richmond program, according to Lee Hartstone, London's sales veepee, is pegged on shorter markups, more protection for dealer and consumer, greater dating and more realistic consumer pricing. Program has a delayed payment until November, December and January on immediate purchases; 100% return privilege on the prepack program expiring Jan. 31, 1960, at which time such records will be exchangeable under the general Richmond-Telefunken exchange privilege which allows dealers to exchange any Richmond and Telefunken LPs on a cost-for-cost basis.

Wrather Deal to Buy Mills Music Looks Cold as Coin Hurdles Build Up

Looks like the Jack Wrather $5,000,000 buyout of Mills Music is cold.

Bill Quinlan, who heads Muzak and other allied subsidiaries for the Wrather organization, is a little more sanguine but prexy Jack Mills, of the publishing house bearing his and Irving Mills' name, thinks there are too many insurmountable hurdles.

These are essentially of an economic nature embracing (1) two quarter-year periods of ASCAP income (almost $250,000); (2) sundry commission claims from divers sources; (3) other commitments which could water-down the $5,000,000 figure.

Mills flew back three days in advance of the June 22 date when he and his wife sentimentally spent her birthday and their anniversary in Paris—leaving her in the French capital—in the belief Wrather had come east from Hollywood to sign the papers. Instead he found more lawyer palaver. He flew back to Europe, returning this past weekend.

Quinlan, on the other hand, says Wrather "could sign the papers tomorrow" but for certain hitches advanced by the Mills interests. Among these, for example, is to withhold this quarter's ASCAP income plus an ensuing quarter, on the theory that the Society's accountings are "six months behind actuality." Since Mills' ASCAP income is near the $500,000 per annum mark, half of that is a sizable sum.

Then there are sundry claimants for commissions. Mills' understanding was $500,000 net, sans any strings, according to the publisher's viewpoint.

Alan Freed Trial Cancelled in Hub

Boston, July 7.

The on-again-off-again trial of disk jockey Alan Freed, on charges of inciting to riot as the result of his rock 'n' roll show at Boston Arena on May 3, 1958, following which 15 persons were stabbed, slugged and robbed, is off again—this time indefinitely. A motion filed by his defense attorney, Paul Smith, to have the case stricken from the Suffolk Superior Court trial list was granted by Judge Eugene A. Hudson last week.

Freed was indicted 13 months ago by the Suffolk grand jury on a charge of inciting a riot.

Freed pleaded innocent to two indictments charging inciting to riot and inciting unlawful destruction of real and personal property in Suffolk County Court and was released on $2,500 bail on May 16, 1958. Motions to quash indictments against Freed were filed by his attorney last June and he also asked for a bill of particulars on each indictment.

A second charge of inciting to riot under the anti-anarchy law was dropped against Freed. On Nov. 3, 1958, Superior Court Judge Charles Fairhurst refused to quash the indictment filed against Freed. Trial was postponed on Nov. 18 in Suffolk Superior Court to January.

O'Mahoney Stroke Cues Senate Delay On Jukebox Bill

Washington, July 7.

Stroke suffered by Sen. Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D-Wyo.) recently makes Senate action on jukebox royalty legislation unlikely this session.

O'Mahoney, chairman of the Senate Copyright Subcommittee and author of bill to allow performing royalties for jukebox play, was paralyzed on the left side from the stroke suffered June 19. Doctors treating him at Bethesda Naval Hospital report the 74-year-old lawmaker is responding well to treatment but do not know when he can return to his desk.

O'Mahoney steered his jukebox bill last year to approval by the Senate Judiciary Committee. Without his guidance, there appears little chance of similar committee action this session.

On the House side, where public hearings by the Copyright Subcommittee wound up two weeks ago, there's still a chance the bill will be reported to the floor this year. But action beyond that in the few remaining weeks of the session appears moot.

Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.) has invited all major parties to the royalty hassle to a closed-door session at the Capitol July 9. Meeting was called by Celler in an effort to see whether he can effect some modus vivendi between the cleffer and juke operator groups, and thus pave the way for quick action on his jukebox bill.

KAY STARR'S 5-YEAR CAP PACT AT 30G PER

Hollywood, July 7.

Kay Starr's new five-year contract with Capitol Records guarantees her approximately $30,000 per annum, making her one of the few femme chirps at label to rate a guarantee. Deal calls for a minimum of four singles and two albums yearly.

Singer returned to Cap, where she started 12 years ago, after buying up her contract at RCA Victor, still six months to go on five-year spread, for $25,000.

Hal Stanley, singer's personal manager, will supervise her new diskings.

14 ALBUMS HIGH MARK FOR SEASON

By MIKE GROSS

Record companies shelled out approximately $250,000 in the production of original cast albums during the official 1958-59 season. That represents an investment on 14 albums which is believed to be the top coverage given legit by the diskeries during one theatre season.

The '58-'59 original cast album season was also notable in the fact that it covered off-Broadway as well as Broadway entries and the drama as well as the musicomedy field. Also more diskeries got into the original cast album act than ever before.

Columbia Records paced the field with six entries ("Goldilocks," "Flower Drum Song," "First Impressions," "Juno," "The Nervous Set" and "Gypsy"). RCA Victor came up with "Redhead," Decca is running with "Destry Rides Again," MGM had "Whoop-Up," Capitol did "A Party with Betty Comden and Adolph Green," Kapp came up with its first original cast album set in the off-Broadway "Once Upon A Mattress," and the newly formed Strand label is readying a package of the current off-Broadway entry, "Leave It To Jane." In the non-musical category, Columbia released "Shakespeare's Ages of Man" with John Gielgud and Victor is preparing a full length original cast package of the Pulitzer Prizewinner "J.B."

Only four musicals, however, fall into the hit category in Broadway standards which give their disk counterparts a chance for the big payoff. They are "Destry Rides Again," "Flower Drum Song," "Gypsy" and "Redhead." "First Impressions," "Goldilocks," "Juno," "The Nervous Set" and "Whoop-Up" were fast folds and it's doubtful if the albums will mean anything on the disk counters.

Leader, thus far, among this season's original cast sets is Rodgers & Hammerstein's "Flower Drum Song" (Col) with a reported 300,000 sales. Col also expects a

James Turnbull Gets Added Chores at Col In Staffer Reshuffle

In a reshuffle of Columbia Records' sales staff, James Turnbull, field sales manager, has been given added duties of directing all sales publications. William Levy, manager of field sales publications, will work under Turnbull.

Dave Krapalik, single records merchandise manager, will now head the field promotion force with Frank Campana and Zim Zemeral, promotion managers, reporting to him. A Columbia Masterworks merchandising section, consisting of Peter Munves and Al Fishman, both will work under the direction of Bill Gallagher, Col's overall sales chief, as will Marion Tilin, merchandise manager for school and library sales.

Meantime, Gene Black has been named by the diskery to a newly created post of regional sales manager, supervising an area of 11 western states. Ted Ponseti, Col's district sales manager in that territory, will be Block's assistant.

Voting System & Payoff in ASCAP Consent Decree Draw Raps; Claim Major Pubberies Can Dominate Bd.

Although the new consent decree for the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers was designed to satisfy dissenting groups within the Society, a new barrage of squawks is being aimed at the proposed new setup. Once again, the division in the Society is defined between the haves and the have-nots with the latter still fundamentally unhappy about the revisions which the Dept. of Justice is supporting.

While at this point few in ASCAP have had the opportunity of studying the proposed consent decree, which ASCAP is mailing out shortly, the critics have learned enough to concentrate their raps against the new voting system and the payoff for themes, background music, cues, bridges, etc. Heavy concessions were made to mollify the ASCAP critics on this point, but the latter still see serious defects in the new setup.

One spokesman for the critics pointed out that the major publishers will still have a dominating influence on the ASCAP board under the consent order. The top 10 publishers, and their affiliates, are limited to 41% of the total vote, which is considerably less than present standing. The critics, however, insist that the 41% is still too high since, by alleged deals with publishers slightly below the top 10, the big firms will be able to control the majority of the publisher board members.

Angle on Secret Ballot

The provision giving of any group of publishers controlling one-twelfth of the total vote the right to elect one member to the board was also met with reservations, even though it permits smaller firms to get representation. The critics point out in order to elect a board member via this

Hollywood, July 7.

Twenty top jazz musicians have been lined up for prerecording chores on "The Gene Krupa Story," biopic of the drummer which Philip Waxman will produce for Columbia.

Jazzites include Benny Carter, Henry Beau, Eddie Miller, Dave Pell, Jerome Casper, saxes; Barney Kessell, guitar; Jor Triscari, Ray Triscan, Pete Candoli, Conrad Gozzo, Clyde Hurley, trumpets; Ed Kusby, Murray McEachern, George Roberts, Elmer Schneider, trombones; Jess Stacy, piano; Shelly Manne, John Williams and Krupa on drums. Leith Stevens is directing the sessions for the film which Don Weis begins directing July 13.

Bourne Vs. Rose Renewal Row In Court's Lap

The validity of the renewal assignment clause in the old songwriter-publisher contracts is now in the laps of N.Y. Federal Judge Edward J. Dimock who has reserved decision in the case of Bourne Music vs. Billy Rose over the renewal term of "That Old Gang of Mine." Three days of evidence and argument were concluded last week in a trial that has been pending for several years.

Rose, who was originally the plaintiff in the suit along with co-authors Ray Henderson and the late Mort Dixon in a move to get the "Gang" copyright back, is now the defendant since his original complaint was dismissed at his petition. Bourne's counter-suit against Rose, which would have the court compel the execution of the renewal assignment, was at issue before Judge Dimock.

The central argument in the case revolves around the question of whether the original renewal assignment constitutes a valid agreement. John Schulman, attorney for Rose, contended that there was no adequate consideration for the renewal right in terms of current conditions. He pointed out, for instance, that the original contract did not provide for the payment of foreign royalties, a factor which has grown immense-

ED COLE ANKLES AS MGM LONGHAIR HEAD

Ed Cole, classical artists & repertoire chief for MGM Records, is leaving that company after an 11-year association. Cole's exit reflects the deemphasis by MGM's new management, under prexy Arnold Maxin, of longhair releases. Cole had also been associate advertising and publicity manager for the label.

Among the 1,000 LPs produced by Cole for MGM was the N.Y. cast version of "The Threepenny Opera," which has been among the company's most consistent album sellers. Cole plans to do freelance album production.

Randalls' 3-Day Fest

With the summer jazz season now getting underway, New York's Randalls Island Jazz Festival has been scheduled this year as a three-day affair running from Aug. 21 to Aug. 23.

Franklin Geltman is producing the jazz bash this year.

$186,333 Net In 1st Qtr. for Tops

Hollywood, July 7.

Pacific Radiation Instruments, the legal corporate title of Top Records, the low-priced label, racked up net earnings of $186,333 for the three-month period ending April 30. This compares with earnings of $81,872 during the previous quarter.

Sales for the period, according to the report of prexy Carl Doshay, totalled $1,400,000. Doshay stated that the company was prepping an expanded promotional program for the future and disclosed that George Sherlock has been added to handle disk jockey promotion. Prior to now, Tops has not serviced radio stations, having concentrated on the supermarket and chain store selling outlets.

Name Linkletter, Mayfair, Guedel in 'Darndest' Suit

Los Angeles, July 7.

Damages of $40,000 are demanded from Art Linkletter, John Guedel, John Guedel Productions and Mayfair Music, in an invasion of privacy suit filed in Superior Court by Mrs. Mae Colburn, San Diego.

Latter claims that defendants used a photograph of her 10-year-old twin sons on front of sheet music, "Kids Say the Darndest Things," a song inspired by Linkletter's book of same name. Photo, which is alleged to have been unauthorized, was used twice, in June, 1956, and September, 1957, according to complaint.

British Muzak, called Planned Music, tees in London, early August, with Encyclopedia Britannica one of first in office installations.

ASCAP Divvy to Writers Averaged $2,321 in '58—Jukers Grabbed $5,871

Washington, July 7.

ASCAP reports that in 1958 it distributed an average $2,321.25 in royalty payments to 4,614 writer-members and an average $9,815.79 to 1,109 music publishers.

Data was given the House Copyright Subcommittee by ASCAP attorney Herman Finkelstein over the weekend in response to questions during the recently concluded hearings on the Celler jukebox bill.

Finkelstein reported that of the writers, 88%, or 4,060, received less than $5,000 from ASCAP. Only 244 writer members, or 5%, received between $5,000 and $10,000 and only 310, or 7% got more than $10,000.

As for the publisher members, 948, or 85% received less than $5,000; 95, or 9%, received between $5,000 and $25,000, and 66, or 6%, received $25,000 or more.

In comparison the recent Price Waterhouse survey for Music Operators of America showed an average $5,871 profit margin for jukebox operators.

In this connection, Finkelstein submitted the covering letter MOA used in sending out the Price Waterhouse questionnaires, and declared that the data so gathered are "necessarily unreliable." The letter, from MOA prexy George A. Miller, began with the explanation: "Enclosed is a questionnaire to help us defeat the copyright legislation."

At the same time, Finkelstein supplied the subcommittee with information on royalties paid in nine foreign countries for jukebox performances. In every case, the rates charged by the foreign royalty societies are substantially higher than the $15-$25 per-year scale regarded as acceptable by ASCAP.

The annual rates per jukebox were reported as follows: Belgium, $30-$48; Brazil, $24-$30; Denmark, $60; France, $65-$75; Holland, $9-$135; Italy, 4% of jukebox receipts with a minimum ranging from $15-$36; Spain, $30-$90; Sweden, $20.40-$198; and United Kingdom, $30.

WBR Readies Line Of Sets 'n' Singles For Sales Meets

Hollywood, July 7.

James B. Conkling, prexy of Warner Bros. Records, will introduce company's new fall line of albums and singles at two national sales conventions next month. One will be held July 17 at company's Burbank quarters, the other July 20 in N.Y. Those distributors in the western half of the U.S. will attend the July 17 meeting and their eastern counterparts are scheduled for the July 20 session.

Conkling, who of course will attend both gatherings, also plans to unveil a new merchandising and sales program. A special slide film prepared by the merchandising department will intro the fall program.

In addition to Conkling, other diskery toppers to be on tap for both sessions include Hal Cook, veepee and national sales director; George Avakian, a&r director, and department head Joel Friedman. Lowell Frank, David Rose and Norman Goodwin. Approximately 75 are expected for the Burbank session, and 150 at the Gotham meet. Several WB personalities are scheduled to entertain the Burbank group at a cocktail party and dinner.

A Buddha Label, Too

A new diskery, Buddha Records, has been launched in St. Petersburg, Fla. The company, which will produce monaural and stereo disks and tapes, is headed by Richard C. Harris and Paul T. Hayes.

Buddha will equip its own studios in St. Petersburg and is currently organizing a national distributor setup. First two releases on the Buddha schedule are sides by Bobby Steger & The IV Holidays and Lindsey Meehan.

$1,500,0000 Suit Filed By Estate of Richard Valens

Des Moines, July 7.

The estate of Richard Valens, one of three rock 'n' rollers killed in a plane crash near Mason City, Ia., last Feb. 3, has filed a $1,500,000 damage suit in district court against the Dwyer Flying Service of Mason City.

Other victims of the crash were singers Buddy Holly and J. P. Richardson and the pilot who was an employee of the flying service. The singers were flying to Fargo, N. D., after an appearance at Clear Lake, near Mason City. The crash occurred five miles north of Clear Lake.

Valens was born Richard Valenzuela and the petition was filed by Conception Valenzuela, administrator of his estate. The petition said Valens was an able-bodied young man of 17 and "a nationally-known and accepted singer," having published a number of records that sold more than 1,500,000 copies, and that "in event he had lived his normal lifetime his earnings would have been in the millions of dollars."

The petition charges the flying service should not have permitted the flight in unsafe weather. The Civil Aeronautics Board has not yet announced a conclusion as to the probable cause of the accident.

Verve Claims $1,000,000 On 2-Month 99er Plan

Hollywood, July 7.

Norman Granz's Verve Records disclosed that during the past two months of its 99er Plan, extended to distributors throughout the country, the diskery has already grossed over $1,000,000 in sales.

Bernie Silverman, sales manager, reported that the big sellers were the "Porgy and Bess" album and "Inside Shelly Berman," both of which sold over 100,000.

The upbeat in business has cued Verve to expand its pop department roster. Russ Garcia has been hired to head the pop singles and albums; Jimmy Giuffre will ditto on jazz singles and albums, and Granz will continue to rule over both jazz and pop albums. The added personnel will increase recording dates both here and abroad for the diskery.

Miss Fenzl Exits Austin

Austin, Tex., July 7.

Audrey Fenzl, business manager of the Austin Symphony Orchestra during the last five years of growth and progress, is leaving the symphony management. Board will reveal her successor imminently.

Among the highlights of Miss Fenzl's association with the Austin Symphony are the paying of the orchestra's long term indebtedness, the increase of the orchestra from 60 to 75 musicians and the doubling of the number of season ticket holders.

Inside Stuff—Music

By revamping a line in Al Stillman's lyric to Robert Stolz's waltz theme to Marcello Girosi's production for Paramount, starring Maurice Chevalier and Sophia Loren, the song, "A Breath of Scandal," is matching the film title. Originally titled "That Was The Old Vienna," Chevalier, Girosi and director Michael Curtiz found that, in the body of the lyric, it could be switched so that the title song and the firm title coincided. Film, produced entirely in Vienna, has already had its soundtrack and theme song recorded by Chevalier for MGM Records, even though it's a Paramount picture and Par has its wholly owned Dot Records subsidiary.

Norman Rosemont, g.m. for Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe, "agented" the Stillman-Stolz remote-control collaboration as a friendly gesture to Stillman after Lerner told Stolz he couldn't tackle the lyric because of his lifetime exclusivity with Loewe as a business and professional collaborator. "Scandal" is based on an old Ferenc Molnar play, "Olympia," and in like manner Stolz is working on a musicalization of Terence Rattigan's "French Without Tears," which H. M. Tennent (Hugh Beaumont) will produce in London in the fall, with an eye to a Broadway followup.

Live jazz is getting a big boost in New Mexico currently through the efforts of Club 7, a nonprofit incorporated society made up of pro musicians and jazz devotees. A crowd of over 1,000 attended a free jam session held recently (Sun.) in Albuquerque's big Roosevelt Park. More than 25 local jazzsters performed in the evening session, lighted by torches. Local sound engineering firm donated stereo equipment for the event. The group also sponsored a live jazz concert Sunday night (5) at Town House in Santa Fe. Group was organized in April and previously had been holding sessions in Albuquerque Hilton. Enthusiasm for the events is helped greatly by the fact that New Mexico has Sunday blue laws and all niteries are locked up then.

Till recently a copy boy at the Toronto Telegram, Glenn Smith now heads the Fables, a combo currently at Toronto's Brown Derby club, after two weeks at Pagoda Club in Montreal. Then they have a Boston date. Smith plays piano, with Jim Fraser doubling on guitar and sax, George Griffith bass and guitar and Jim Seed on drums. They do their own arranging, write most of the music, and cut six indie disks while in Montreal.

The Robert Stolz waltz for the Michael Curtiz (Paramount) film being shot in Austria, with Maurice Chevalier and Gina Lollobrigida starred, has been retitled "That Was The Old Vienna." The composer's working title was "One Hour With You." Famous Music will publish.

ASCAP Consent Decree

route, the publishers would have to give up their secret ballot, since an open petition would have to be presented. Rumors of "retaliation" against dissident publishers, even if totally unfounded, are enough to deter some from signing such petitions.

On themes, cues, etc., the critics recognize that the proposed decree has made an important advance in cutting the spread of performance credits from 100 to 1 to 10 to 1. They are, however, still plumbing for the principle that all works of music should be treated equally. One leading dissident stated: "Let's cut down the performance value of all theme music, but let's treat every one alike." Under the present and proposed setup, plug values depend upon the prior stature of the songs.

Penalty for Inactivity

Generally recognized in ASCAP is the fact that the proposed decree will not change the basic facts of life. The writers with current activity and with substantial catalogs of standards will still continue to be the top earners in the society. The inactive writers, however, stand to be hurt more severely under the proposed amendments, since the speed of demotions has been greatly acceleratedcelarated.

One ASCAP songsmith, with heavy current activity, was opposed to the cutback in the votes for the top earners in the society. The limitation of 100 votes on any writer, he said, may permit the non-talent elements to get too much voice. "I never knew a successful writer," this songsmith said, "who was unhappy over the way ASCAP was being run."

There's a strong likelihood that ASCAP will be entering a new stage of operation with this consent order. If the current amendments don't work, a whole series of new experiments may be tested until a satisfactory modus operandi is developed.

RCA A&R Staffers Hit The Coast for Sessions

Hollywood, July 7.

In a move designed to upbeat its recording sessions on the Coast and to build up its album backlog, RCA Victor is sending out two N.Y. a&r men for diskery sessions.

Due in from Gotham this week is a&r man John Camacho who will be followed by Herman Diaz next week. Camacho will cut shellac with Esquivel who is currently making a stand at the Melody Room.

Also planing in this week is arranger-conductor Sid Ramin. He'll remain here for two weeks to make the deejay rounds plugging his RCA platters. Ramin, who orchestrated the Broadway staging, "Gypsy," will do "Saturday Night" for Jule Styne, a new Broadway musical, upon his return to N.Y. His latest album is "Love Without Tears," a collection of showtunes.

Artist-Disk Deals

Design: Knight, Heatherton

Felix Knight and Ray Heatherton have been inked by the Pickwick combine subsid, Design Records, a low-priced LP. Knight will be teamed shortly with Mimi Benzell, another Design pactee, on a series of musical comedy LPs.

Carlton: Bobby Brookes

Bobby Brookes, former RCA Victor singer, has been added to Carlton Records' roster. His initial release is "The Greatest Adventure of All" and "Looka, Looka, Looka."

Brunswick: Linda Fields

Linda Fields, who has been working in the commercial jingle field, will become Brunswick Records' first femme vocalist. Her kickoff disk backs "Mama's Boy" with "When Will You Fall In Love With Me."

Hanover: Crystal Joy

Crystal Joy, a young thrush, has been signed by Hanover Records and will kick off that label's package series next month. She's due for a guest shot on the Steve Allen show in the fall. Allen is co-owner of Hanover with Bob Thiele.

Knox: Mike Harwood

The indie Knox label will bow with folk and blues singer Mike Harwood. Harwood, a 24-year-old from Boston, was signed to a two-year deal.

Stacy: Tony Amaro

The indie Stacy label has added Tony Amaro to its roster. Crooner, a winner of WLRB's (N. Y.) talent search contest, will hit the market around the first of September.

Beer, Beatniks & Boffo 61,000 As 'Big Bands' Cop Newport Laurels; Fest's Non-Jazz Acts for B.O. Hypo

Meadowbrook Bought By N.J. Corp. (John Thumann)

Frank Dailey's Meadowbrook in Cedar Grove, N. J., a band biz landmark of the 1930s, has been sold to a Hackettstown, N. J., corporation headed by John Thumann. Since Dailey's death three years ago, controlling interest in the Meadowbrook had been held by the Marr Realty Co. of Bloomfield.

Clifford Dailey, brother of the late owner, will continue as manager of the spot. Thumann said he planned no change in Meadowbrook's entertainment policy. Financial terms of the sale were not disclosed. Property has an assessed value of $136,360.

French Lick's Additions

French Lick, Ind., July 7.

George Wein, producer, has announced the addition of several musicians who will appear at the four-day French Lick Jazz Festival, July 30-Aug. 2.

Added to the program for July 31 were Cannonball Adderly, Chico Hamilton, Roy Eldridge and Coleman Hawkins, while Jack Teagarden and Bud Freeman will be added to the performers for Aug. 2.

By DAVID B. BITTAN

Newport, R. I., July 7.

The sixth annual edition of the Newport Jazz Festival has passed into history with the four-day jazzorama firmly in the hands of the fetishists and beer-guzzlers.

Some jazz enthusiasts, unfortunately, think they must have a funny hat on their head and a beer in their hand to enjoy the music which has been called America's lone original contribution to the arts.

While these cultists are in the minority, they dominated the atmosphere of this normally staid New England town last Thursday through Sunday (2-5).

Better than 61,000 persons—a record—attended the festival this year.

The crowds ranged from 9,500 Thursday (2) to 15,000-plus Saturday (4). Hundreds milled in the streets around Freebody Park Saturday in the vain hope of getting tickets. Scalpers were reported to be operating.

Attendance at the afternoon concerts was much better this year, with 5,000 at the Saturday afternoon bash at $2 a head, compared with $3, $4 and $5 a ticket at the evening concerts.

Louis Armstrong, recovering from his illness, was unable to appear. But he sent a wire saying he was "feeling fine" and that he hopes to be here next year. A tribute to Armstrong played by Bobby Hackett, Jack Teagarden and other favorites closed the festival.

Producer George Wein and the directors of the festival put much thought into the programming of the event. But they seem powerless to control the behavior of the young college punks and other rowdies who stream into Newport every year at festival time for a drinking holiday.

Top Star: Schizoid

The jazztravaganza has taken on a schizoid character. The festival is divided into three segments—evening concerts featuring the big names, afternoon bashes with modern and experimental artists, and morning seminars in which professors lead serious discussions on jazz.

The crashing success of no less than seven big bands featured some 30 hours of concertizing during the four-day spectacle.

The astonishing professionalism of the Newport Youth Band (average age, 17); the excitement generated by the colorful Duke Ellington orchestra (average age, over 40); the happy swinging quality of the Count Basie group; the brilliance of Stan Kenton's organization; the shouting exuberance of Maynard Ferguson's unit and the disciplined competence of the new George Shearing band and Johnny Dankworth's English musicians made this a true festival of the big band.

Ellington, joined by blues singer Jimmy Rushing, whipped an overflow crowd of 15,000 into a frenzy Saturday night. Not since the Duke broke it up at Newport at an historic 1956 concert has the festival had such a night. Hundreds were dancing in the aisles and only the Duke's urbane handling of the crowd prevented what could have been a riot.

There were other memorable moments. The first performance of a new jazz ballet; the singing of the Lambert-Hendricks-Ross group with Basie; the remarkable virtuosity of Erroll Garner in a two-hour stint without intermission (but he should stop his grunting); the hard swinging by modern groups at the afternoon sessions, featuring young musicians like Johnny Griffin, Kenny Burrell and Herbie Mann, and the sentimental triumph of veteran Phil Napoleon.

A Different Beat

There also were some unexplained bookings and some disappointments. The Four Freshmen didn't quite measure up to concert standards, nor did Ahmad Jamal. The absence of a singer of the stature of Ella Fitzgerald, Sarah Vaughan or Carmen McRae was felt.

Pat Suzuki, never considered a jazz singer, contributed little, musically, to the event. Dakota Staton, whose showoff vocalizing hampers her performances, was ineffective. And the Kingston Trio, for some unknown reason, appeared, not as jazz artists (which they are not) but as folk singers.

Newport Festival Boffo

There is only one valid reason for booking such artists. And that is because of their b.o. appeal. Since the Newport Jazz Festival is supposed to be nonprofit, it is questionable why such performers were needed when dozens of top jazz artists were left out.

But the festival does contribute to its aim of furthering the cause of jazz by reaching, through its widespread coverage, entire new audiences.

More than 700 press and radio representatives, from obscure stations and publications to the world's largest, covered the proceedings. Granted that many are merely freeloading, the coverage given the festival has given it worldwide stature.

'Olympic Drinking Team'

The big problem facing the festival directors is controlling the behavior of the excitement-hunting youngsters who are turning the event into a carnival.

The rowdies are conspicuous by their absence at the morning and afternoon sessions. (They're usually sleeping it off in their rented rooms, on the beach or on the seat of their car, usually of a foreign or sports car variety.) But come the evening, they appear from everywhere. On their heads are boaters or derbies. Their backs are covered with sweatshirts carrying the printing: "U.S. Olympic Drinking Team." To make the message true, they clutch a quart bottle of beer—or even cheap wine. Their legs, or part of them, are covered by Bermuda shorts, their feet by dirty sneakers.

These are the pseudo-beatniks who wander—or stagger—around the stadium during the evening concerts. They respond only to the kick of the alcohol and the wild sounds of the most primitive forms of jazz. They annoy the serious music fans (who actually are in the majority) and harass and insult the dozens of local gendarmes and Pinkerton men assigned to keep the peace. Dozens had to be hauled away to the local lock-up.

'Jazz Ballet No. 1'

Artistic highspot of the entire concert took place, not in the stadium, but several miles away in the auditorium of a high school. This was the premiere performance Saturday afternoon of "Jazz Ballet No. 1," based on the ancient comedia dell'arte.

Dr. Marshall Stearns, professor who helped set up the ballet, explains it is the first ballet to use authentic jazz steps.

Stearns used Al Minns and Leon James, hoofers he employs to demonstrate the history of jazz dance, as the nucleus of the jazz ballet group. He added ballet dancer Willy Sandberg and Jacqueline Walcott, formerly with Katherine Dunham.

Portraying four hitchhikers waiting for a ride, the dancers performed to the music of the Modern Jazz Quartet's "Fontessa."

Minns (Perrot) dances the blues; James (Pantalon) does the bop dance; Sandberg (Harlequin) dances in the Latin-American idiom and Miss Walcott (Columbine) is a rock 'n' roller.

What evolves is a truly historic dance worthy of presentation to a bigger audience than the 700 who witnessed it at Newport. The ballet demonstrates the puckish humor of jazz and gives vivid framing to the gusty passions of the music.

Stearns, a festival director who has battled for a more serious approach to the goings-on at Newport, deserves much credit for his campaign. And he also should be applauded for setting up the three seminars. They included an exposition by him on "The Roots of Jazz," a talk by Prof. Sterling Brown of Howard U. on "The Social Background of Jazz" and a discussion led by magazine editor Eric Larabee on "The Role of Jazz in American Culture."

Anti-Jazz Negroes

Brown noted that it is a mistake to think that all Negroes approve of jazz. He said there is strong opposition to jazz among some religious and also middle-class Negroes.

Thursday's opener got off to a rousing start with the Newport All-Stars, including Buck Clayton, Pee Wee Russell, Bud Freeman, Vic Dickenson, Ruby Braff and a veteran rhythm section. Jimmy Rushing, five-by-five blues singer, heated things up and got the crowd swinging with several blues, including "St. Louis Blues." He had to beg off.

The Four Freshmen, a capable singing group with a good voice blend, missed the boat by presenting their night club act to a concert audience. Intimate humor and satire which pleases a small crowd fell on deaf ears.

Shearing's big band, featuring a brass choir, was at its best on "I Could Write A Book." The group, spotlighting the leader's piano, is patterned after the arrangements on Shearing's "Burnished Brass" record album.

Gene Krupa followed with his trio, sparked by the leader's noisy and energetic drumming. Ahmad Jamal, a cocktail-type pianist, ran through a group of his record favorites with his trio. The crowd, unusually sedate for a Newport group, was unmoved by such pseudo-jazz but the appearance of the swinging Count Basie band got the fans rocking in their seats.

Big-voiced Joe Williams and the Lambert-Hendricks-Ross singers, along with Basie trumpeters Joe Newman and Thad Jones, provided the highlights of the Basie segment.

Friday afternoon, Ferguson's big band, pushed by the leader's soaring trumpet, showed finesse and less of its overpowering quality than usual. Veterans Roy Eldridge and Coleman Hawkins, both blowing well, were joined by blues singer Helen Humes for a traditional set highlighted by Miss Humes' shouting of "St. Louis Blues."

The Hard Swing

After the Mastersounds quartet played a subdued set of modern jazz, the hard swingers took over. The Kenny Burrell Trio, led by the leader's exciting guitar, was joined by the driving and powerful tenor saxophone of Johnny Griffin, one of the more talented youngsters.

The punching Horace Silver Quintet, featuring the leader's piano, closed out the concert with a set which never stopped moving.

By Friday evening, the college gang had arrived fullscale. They heard the well-disciplined English band of Johnny Dankworth, with the leader's alto sax the only outstanding solo voice. But the band's precision, reminiscent of the Shaw, Goodman and Dorsey bands of the late '30s, mark this group as a remarkable crew which should get a good reception on its U.S. tour.

While not highly original, the Dankworth band shows imagination in its use of a tuba and a mellophone.

Miss Staton's exhibitionist style, somewhat short on taste, was at its best on "The Party's Over," at its worst on "Cherokee." Oscar Peterson, who replaced guitarist Herb Ellis with drummer Ed Thigpen, played a little more percussive than usual with the swinging drum background. Phil Napoleon, veteran dixieland trumpeter, got the first heavy mitting of the evening with some of his formula Dixie with a capable group of younger musicians.

Thelonius & Dizzy

The always tasteful Modern Jazz Quartet was followed onstage by Thelonious Monk, the bluesy modern pianist who suddenly has become the darling of the far-out set. One of the originators of the bop form, Monk is a highly original musician with a penchant for the unexpected. Another founder of bop, Dizzy Gillespie, played the evening's final set with his quintet, which is a far cry from his swinging big band featured last year. But Dizzy's tremendous trumpeting and his unique humor made the set worthwhile.

Saturday afternoon was "miscellaneous instrument" day. Flutist Herbie Mann's group opened, followed by Jimmy Smith and his unusual organ stylings. Art Blakey & His Jazz Messengers, featuring the imaginative trumpet of young Lee Morgan and the tenor sax of Hank Mobley, scored heavily with their drive sparked by Blakey's drumming.

The avant-garde arrangements of bassman Charlie Mingus and his group pleased the way-out crowd. And devotees of the foreign jazzmen were given a treat by young Barney Wilen, a talented French saxman backed by Japanese pianist Toshiko.

But the blowoff, by the thrilling Newport Youth Band, was the biggest both for critics and fans. To see a group of kids, aged 14 to 18, produce such exciting jazz is a real musical experience.

Marshall Brown's Chores

Much credit for the band's sound must go to energetic Marshall Brown, who picks the arrangements carefully and makes sure they swing—even if he has to write some himself.

The solid tromboning of 17-year-old Harry Hall and the trumpet of 18-year-old Benny Jacobs-El provide most of the solo highlights, although the musicianship of 16-year-old Andy Marsala is outstanding.

All members of the band, subsidized by the Newport Jazz Festival, are New York area residents. But, eventually, the festival directors hope to include youngsters from all parts of the U.S.

The appreciative crowd shouted for more and Brown responded by letting the boys ad lib chorus after chorus on a Count Basie standard. The band is strictly out of the Basie mold.

Garner, whose overprotective manager, Martha Glaser, barred photographers for his Saturday night performance, really warrants such kid-glove care. His talent is enormous and he had the crowd yelling for more after some two hours of the most unique type of pianistics.

Seated with his back to the audience (and sitting on a Manhattan phone book), Garner ripped off song after song without interruption. He closed with an impish chorus of "Frenisi" and turned the stage over to Duke Ellington.

Duke presented works from every period of Ellingtonia—from "Rockin' in Rhythm" to pieces from his latest film, "Anatomy of A Murder."

Singer Ozzie Bailey, a sensitive and sincere performer, was obscured by the more raucous vocalizing of shouter Lil Greenwood, who sang her "Walkin' and Singing the Blues."

When Jimmy Rushing mounted the stand and sang with the Ellington band (he formerly sang with Basie) the crowd started to clap and soon were dancing in the aisles.

He quieted the audience by shifting into his subtle soft swinger entitled "Jones" which he stepped up into a crescendo featuring the biting five-piece trumpet section.

At 1:30 a.m., after five hours of music in which Garner and Ellington were the only groups performing, the crowd limped home. The scheduling of only two units was a departure for Newport.

Kenton, Suzuki, Brubeck

After a Sunday afternoon of stirring gospel singing, Stan Kenton's swinging crew (one of his better units) opened up the closing concert with a set of Kenton standards and new arrangements in the highly personal Kenton idiom.

Miss Suzuki, backed by an all-star group of New York studio musicians, sang standards like "Have You Met Little Jones" with much gusto but little jazz feeling. Best of her set was "Summertime."

The Dave Brubeck combo, featuring the lyrical alto sax of Paul Desmond, provided its own peculiar type of excitement. And the Kingston Trio, who are the features of next week's Newport Folk Festival, were well received considering they are not a jazz group.

A tribute to Louis Armstrong, featuring Jack Teagarden, Bobby Hackett, Red Allen, J. C. Higginbotham, Buster Bailey, Claude Hopkins and others ended the festival.

An hour of each evening concert was sponsored this year by Studebaker-Lark over CBS Radio, emceed by Mitch Miller, who becomes a jazz expert once a year. The master of ceremonies for the entire concert was Willis Conover, Voice of America d. j.

Wrather-Mills

growing disinclination by the Mills freres to sell out even though prexy Jack Mills would be retained on a consultative contract and both have been assured of "keeping the organization intact."

A Wall St. friend of the pubbery effected the Wrather contact. Meantime, the William Morris agency had gotten into the act when both United Artists and Columbia Pictures became interested in Mills. Both film companies offered deferred payment payoffs, to spread the income. Wrather matched them, offering an eight-year staggered payoff plus a 3% interest payment on the withheld money. Wrather got Lewis A. Dreyer into it as a legal consultant. Samuel Jesse Buzzell, a 10% partner in Mills Music and general counsel and secretary for the pubbery, in turn called in Schwartz & Frohlich to handle the legalistics.

Wrather's interest in acquiring a music catalog rich in popular and standard copyrights revolves around his ownership of Muzak; his tv holdings, in the U. S. and Great Britain; his vidpix production, also on both sides of the Atlantic (in association with ATV in England), all of which would make the utilization of music copyrights a plus factor for revolving accreditations from performing rights, synchronizations etc.

VARIETY DISK JOCKEY POLL

This compilation is designed to indicate those records rising in popularity as well as those on top. Ratings are computed on the basis of ten points for a No. 1 mention, nine for a No. 2, and so on down to one point. Wherever possible, only records with two or more mentions are listed, even though their total points are less in some cases than those which receive only one mention. Cities and jockeys will vary from week to week to present a comprehensive picture of all sectors of the country regionally.

Band Reviews

JOHNNY LONG ORCH (11)
Statler-Hilton Hotel, Dallas

It's nice to note that, with the decline of "name bands" over the years, some are remembered and continue to draw. Johnny Long's crew is one of those; over two decades the maestro has enjoyed good biz billing. Back in the days when a top band could fill a club or hotel room nightly (sans a headline act), Long had that distinction. He, as with other maestri, shot into popularity with a hot record. Since "Shanty in Old Shanty Town" clicked, the road has been easier. Of course, Long has a hotel, or commercial style, but dispenses excellent music to please the customers.

With three brass, four reeds, piano, bass and drums, the North Carolinian varies the ensemble tunes with his left-handed violin solos. Library is hefty with arrangements of evergreens and standards, and with instrumental doubling, Long assuages his audiences. He hasn't forgotten his late bandleading friend, Hal Kemp. Sax men often drop clarinet into huge megaphones to achieve the famous Kemp tone.

Solo vocals are neatly done by Tommy Hall. The "Long Shots" trio provides lyrics by Hall, Lloyd Johnston and Jack Rice.

To break the Latunes, w.k. bits, et cetera, personable maestro offers his slick dixieland quintet, the "Cotton Pickers." Able crew is comprised of Bill Gaudet, trumpet; Jack Rice, trombone; Bayes Arnow, clarinet; Clyde Newcomb, bass and Don Desrosiers, drums. Bark.

DUKES OF DIXIELAND (7)
Milburn Country Club, Kansas City

The Dukes and their dixieland are well known hereabouts from their albums, but seldom are they seen in person. A junket last January brought them into this Kansas side country club for a very successful party, and on a midwest junket in midsummer they repeated for a one-nighter June 25, just as clickily.

They play standup style for the dancers, varying the sets with several tempos, and throwing in a vocal by trumpeter Frank Assunto now and then. Mostly the stylings are dixieland of the best sort, but they switch now and then, such as to making a display piece of "76 Trombones," or other novelty number. "Darktown Strutters Ball" and "Johnson Rag" from their regular repertory are the most for the dancers.

Besides Assunto and his well-known pop, Papa Jac, crew includes brother Fred Assunto on trombone, Jerry Fuller on clarinet, Lowell Miller on string bass and tuba, Red Hawley on drums and Stan Mendlson, piano. There is a good deal of solo work, Papa Jac leading out on banjo and trombone, or any of the other sidemen taking off in his own style, all of it to the great delight of the dancers. Crew is heading back to Las Vegas and the Desert Inn.

Paramount originally would have culled an old Stolz waltz as the film's theme song but, because of the diversified copyright ownerships in various countries and territories, which could complicate the performing rights of the film's exhibition contracts, Famous Music insisted on owning the world rights of an original Stolz work for which Paramount paid a $5,000 advance royalty. Famous is Paramount's wholly owned music publishing subsidiary.

Columbia Records has revised the price structure of its stereo LP line so that the tab will be uniformly stabilized at suggested prices of $1 above regular (monophonic) counterparts. The new price lineup, which went into effect last week, will be similarly applied to Epic Records, Col's subsid label. The suggested list price of Col's pop stereo LPs, formerly $5.98, has now been reduced to $4.98. The regular, or monophonic counterparts, are priced at $3.98. Diskery's Masterworks, or classical stereo records, have carried a suggested list price of $5.98 since their introduction a year ago and will continue at that price level. Their monophonic counterparts have, since January, 1959, been priced at $4.98.

MGM's low-price Lion label got going July 3 at the Plainview Country Club, Long Island, with the first of a series of "Jazz Nights" featuring Aaron Bell's combo. Bell will feature selections from his current Lion LPs, "Peter Gunn," "77 Sunset Strip" and "Victory At Sea In Jazz." Diskery has earmarked a certain amount of albums to be presented nightly as prizes to guests of the Plainview Country Club.

A "Music In The Round" exhibit of musical instruments, early American sheet music and paintings will be held Wednesday (15) at the Suffolk Museum at Stony Brook, L.I. The paintings, which will be on loan from other museums, have musical themes.

solid rackup for Jule Styne-Stephen Sondheim "Gypsy" package starring Ethel Merman. Album has only been out several weeks but it went off to a hefty initial sales order. Decca reports good sales for "Destry," as does Victor for its "Redhead" package.

The off-Broadway packages don't have the same sales impact as the Main Stem entries but the diskers are beginning to take them into consideration because of their special appeal and comparatively low cost of production In the past only "Golden Apple" (RCA Victor) and "The Threepenny Opera" (MGM) got the disk treatment after an off-Broadway start.

Although the cost of producing an original cast album often runs as high as $25,000 (performers receive a week's salary and musicians are paid on the basis of three recording sessions), there is a continual scramble for properties because the payoff, if the musical clicks on Broadway, can be tremendous. Columbia's "My Fair Lady," for example, has already passed the 1,500,000 sales mark in the U. S. and the show is still running strong on Broadway, which means the disk's hot sales pattern can continue for some time to come. The same thing holds true for "Music Man," which has passed the 500,000 sales mark on the Capitol label.

Competition for original cast album rights has become so keen that some diskeries through their parent organizations have invested money in the musical's production. In the past season, for instance, RCA put up $75,000 for "Redhead" with NBC in for another $75,000 and CBS put up half the investment, $25,000, for "The Nervous Set" flop. CBS, however, is still ahead in the Broadway musical investment game since it has a major share of the "My Fair Lady" smash.

Bourne Vs. Rose

ly since "That Old Gang of Mine" was written in the early 1920s when sheet music was of chief importance.

Schulman argued that only the songwriter has legal ownership to the renewal term and hence Bourne could not claim ownership of the copyright renewal. The Bourne firm, represented by Walter Beck of Phillips, Nizer, Benjamin, Krim & Ballon, and Godfrey Cohen, of Gilbert & Gilbert, argued that the original renewal agreement gave them the right to assign the copyright to itself since all the terms of the original contract were lived up to.

Schulman, who is also counsel for the American Guild of Authors & Composers, became Rose's counsel for the second time in this suit. Originally, Rose brought his action against Bourne via the old firm of Hays, St. John, Schulman & Abramson. When Schulman left that firm, Rose left the case with the remaining partners. Several months ago, when Rose petitioned the court for a change of attorneys, Judge Dimock cracked: "You don't want a new lawyer, but a new judge."

Boston Niteries to Sit It Out For Summer; Resorts Taking Over

Boston, July 7.

Proposed plans of two Boston niteries to stay open all summer have come a cropper, and there will be no supper clubs running in the Hub this strawhat season. Blinstrub's 1,700-seater, which had been considering running with names in the summer months, closed its show season with the Castle Sisters last week.

The Bradford Roof, which has Jack Kelly's "Ice Frolics" current, closed down Saturday (4) for the summer. It had been planned to operate the rooftop boite all summer, but biz was reported offish. Steuben's shuttered for the summer last week also.

With all Hub clubs, except the intimers, lounges, etc., dark for the summer, entertainment seekers will have to take to the highroads and byroads around the territory. The roadside clubs are flourishing. The Monticello, in Framingham, with Jo Barnum's "Almanac On Ice" current, will run all summer with shows; Salisbury Beach Frolics, 1,200 seater, is operating at Salisbury Beach with big name sked.

The Frolics sked includes Johnny Mathis, July 5; Tommy Sands, July 12; Platters, July 19; Liberace, July 26; Erroll Garner, Aug. 9; Frankie Avalon, Aug. 16; Crosby Bros., Aug. 23.

Across the harbor from Boston, two clubs are running the summer gamut in Revere, the Revere Frolic, 450-seater, with semi-names; and the Reef, where Billy Fellows is current, has just embarked on such a format.

Alpine Village Hiatus

Cleveland, July 7.

Nitery biz is so sluggist here that Herman Pirchner and Larry Higgins shuttered their downtown Alpine Village club for the next two months. It's skedded to reopen Sept. 9 with same policy of musical revues with a line and dance music again by Dave Ennis orch. Ennis is moving it over to the Riviera Room.

Alpine's upstairs room, the Eldorado, is kept open by Joe Baldi's band.

Palace Has Eye On VIP Vaude

Apparently it's just as difficult to get big moneymaking films as it is to find personalities who will draw for protracted periods at the boxoffice. The Palace Theatre, N.Y., once the flagship of the American variety scene, is again mulling a return to the live standard.

Sol A. Schwartz, RKO Theatres prexy, would still like to get a live show to be headed by personalities such as Harry Belafonte, Burns & Allen, Fred Astaire and others. He's surveying the field and studying the situation, but has made no commitments as yet.

Theatre has oft been reported as readying to convert to a legit operation, or returning to vaude. Actually, it's one of the more fluid operations on Broadway. It has had two-a-day, continuous vaude, reserved seat films and the grind policy. Apparently, anything that will do some b.o. good is welcome at this house.

Belafonte $84,000, H'wood

Hollywood, July 7.

Harry Belafonte's one-man show at the Greek Theatre here hit a boff $84,000 for its first week. The same figure, which is capacity or close to it, is expected to be maintained during the three weeks of his engagement.

Week prior, Belafonte scored a heavy $77,000 at the San Francisco Opera House.

No Fat Tax on U.S. Acts, Say Hotels in Havana

Havana, July 7.

Havana hoteliers are countering reports of big tax bites being taken from American performers working the hotels in the Cuban capital. The innkeepers report that the nick is presently $6 per $1,000 salary or portion thereof.

Presently, the Havana hostels are operating primarily with native talent, this being the off-season. Most of the operators are hoping to be in position to buy name talent starting in October.

Lions & 'Fourth' A Dud for Cafes In N.Y.; Mts. High

Neither the Lions convention last week nor the July 4 holiday meant too much to New York niteries. The weekend found a virtually deserted town. Vacationers who came in to observe the city scarcely made up for the droves who scrammed town for the resorts.

The Lions, the nitery owners found, didn't patronize the cafes too well. There was a smattering of conventioneers in the boites, but their presence didn't contribute greatly to the overall take. The hotels, of course, hiked their business considerably.

The cafemen found that the recent Kiwanis convention, while not as large as that of the Lions, meant considerably more to the night clubs. The Kiwanis was described as a good convention. One of the reasons is ascribed to the fact that the Lions kept their members occupied a great deal of the time. They staged their own shows at Madison Square Garden.

Generally, the nitery business continues surprisingly good for this time of year, figures being up considerably over last year.

History was repeated in the Catskills resorts over the holiday. The large hotels such as Grossinger's, Ferndale, N. Y., and the Concord, at nearby Kiamesha Lake, hung out the SRO sign, with most of the other inns being filled nearly to capacity.

EXIT FROM 4A'S TO JOIN HOFFA?

By JOE COHEN

Just how long the American Guild of Variety Artists will remain within the framework of the Associated Actors and Artistes of America is currently being debated within show biz as well as labor circles. There is a growing feeling that the variety-performer union is preparing to ankle its present affiliation and probably ally itself with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, with which it has worked in the past, particularly in bringing the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus into the union-shop standard.

The possibility of the new affiliation of AGVA is supported by history as well as current events both within the union and within the realm of the labor movement. As a matter of fact, it will be repeating history.

In 1939, during a turbulent period in both Hollywood and New York, the predecessor union to AGVA, the American Federation of Actors, was being set up to walk away from the 4A's and tie in with the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees under the regime of George Browne and Willie Bioff. The 4A's seized AFA and reformed it into AGVA.

J. V. Kelly Reps AGVA in Hawaii

Honolulu, July 7.

James V. Kelly has taken over as top man with the Hawaii unit of the American Guild of Variety Artists, succeeding John Tsukano who has joined a major local travel agency as director of sales and public relations and occasional tour director.

Tsukano built AGVA membership here to about 300 in less than two years. Kelly, a former maitre d' at Don the Beachcomber's, has been working with Irvin Mazzei in the Los Angeles office for four years.

Mazzei, incidentally, looks for a merger of AGVA and the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists in Hawaii, with Kelly handling office work for both unions.

Some sources predict that with an increasing number of tv films being made in the islands, a unit of the Screen Extras Guild eventually may be warranted.

Casino, Canada's Sole Burley, Does El Foldo

Toronto, July 7.

Casino Theatre, only burlesque house in Canada, closed down July 4. This terminated the week-to-week notice posted by Lou Appleby, owner-operator, to the seven musicians and four stagehands.

It will be the first time the Casino has gone dark since it was opened in the early '30s, during which time it played the biggest names in what ultimately remained of vaudeville.

Sight 250G Take For Danny Kaye's 4 Sydney Weeks

Sydney, June 30.

Danny Kaye has set the entire Aussie show biz world afire with his terrific boxoffice take at the Empire here for J. C. Williamson Ltd. Nothing to equal the Kaye biz has ever been seen this side of the Equator.

With a sellout at every performance, comedian is giving eight shows per week over a limited four-week span. Seats are now at a premium for the next three weeks. Total yield is expected to exceed $250,000. Scalpers are already at work offering seats at five pounds (about $14) apiece. Normal admission top is slightly above $5.

Comedian is working for an undisclosed guarantee plus percentage. Understood he pays the supporting talent—Francis Brunn, juggler; Senor Wences, ventriloquist, and the Dancing Dunhills. With no restrictions now operating here on coin takeaway, Kaye should have plenty in his bag when he leaves here.

Garnet Carroll, who will handle the comedian in Melbourne at his Princess Theatre, said that the first three weeks of the Melbourne run are already SRO. The same admission rate applies at the Princess on eight shows weekly.

Because of prior contracts, Kaye will only play Sydney and Melbourne, nixing such other keys as Brisbane, Adelaide and Perth. Insofar as the Aussie public is concerned, the comedian could stop over indefinitely.

Tivoli Circuit's Top Bid for U.S. Talent to Play Aussie 'Forever'

By ABEL GREEN

Gordon C. Cooper, managing director of the Tivoli circuit of Australia, making his first talent-questing trip to America and the Continent, left for a month in London and is due back in the U.S. in September to wrap up some talent deals for his Down Under theatre chain.

A new concept may be Cooper's dealings with some of the talent direct, since he was thus encouraged by many, whom he had played in the past, and also in diversifying his agents so that talent can be culled from many sources. Heretofore General Artists Corp. in America and Lew & Leslie Grade in Europe had almost exclusivity, but Cooper saw a wealth of talent also via the Morris office, MCA and others.

Apart from accenting the increasing Aussie-U.S.A. rapport and "like tastes and attitudes," other realistic values present themselves, which Cooper is purveying to talent and agents alike. One is the ability to take out all earnings (the Australian pound is $2.24 against England's $2.80); and the second is the ability for long-run engagements to the right talent at the right price. "A normal Tivoli commitment is 20 weeks, plus options, and of course with fares from and back to the U.S. included," says Cooper. The "right prices," of course, has to do with "none of these Las Vegas false values which just are out of the question."

He recognizes, also, that the "Las Vegas type" of act—the real boffo names—couldn't afford the time out for long contracts anyway and, besides, they probably would essay auditoriums rather than theatres for quick money and percentages a la Danny Kaye (now Down Under), Sinatra, et al.

'Solid' Bookings

Cooper is talking about the solid variety act which, for beginnings, plays eight weeks at the Tivoli, Melbourne (in which city he is based), and eight weeks at the Tivoli, Sydney, and then can go on to Adelaide, Brisbane, Perth, and

Pious Ft. Wayne Discovers Sex

Ft. Wayne, Ind., July 7.

This churchgoing (heavily Catholic) burg is baring the flesh as well as the soul nowadays.

Stripper Bunny Hollis kicked off the new rage more than a month ago when owner Harold Van Orman booked her into his top midtown hotel. Reaction was so good that the Bergdorf Gardens restaurant, which normally marquees minor disk names, inked Sally Rand to start peeling next week. And a third operation, La Fiamma dinery, retaining its jazz unit, is also dealing for a name exotic.

It's additionally significant that the exotics are invading "family rooms." As a concession to "togetherness," however, they're only peeling down to bra and G-string, and are also keeping the grinds and bumps toned down. As inoffensive as possible, in short, and perhaps that explains the absence of bluenose operation, though both the News-Sentinel and Journal-Gazette have frowned in print.

Success of Miss Hollis has prompted Van Orman to sign her for his other Hoosier hotels, including the McCurdy in Evansville.

Chi Ballyhoo: From Sally Rand's Fans to the St. Lawrence Seaway

By JACK PITMAN

Chicago, July 7.

While the Soviets goggle New York with their technological and cultural expo, 65 nations are palpitating Chi and environs at the current 16-day first Chicago International Trade Fair on sprawling Navy Pier. The 65 have arrayed their most fetching industrial-commercial wares (with show biz bait) for the exhibition, which local civic and business sponsors have themed "World Peace Through World Trade," subtitled "Shop the World in Chicago."

As an overall spectacle (of which the entertainments comprise a spec within a spec), it's rated the town's top promotion since the depression-born Century of Progress. This time prosperity (albeit inflated) is the rule, and Chi sees unparalleled booms ahead as the country's prime inland seaport via the St. Lawrence Seaway. That, in fact, is the fair's reason—a pitch to foreigners that they can sell more efficiently and at less cost by routing goods straight to Chi and the middle west. Also, that plenty of customers with cash in hand await in the oft-overlooked American heartland.

Kabuki & 'Breakfast'

Century of Progress had Sally Rand and her censoring fans. This fair has no comparable excitement. The Windy City has taken on some couth over the years, and instead of pyrotechnics a la Rand, the hoi polloi are gandering Kabuki dancers from Japan, terp troupes from Ceylon, Spain and Haiti, and songsters from Hong Kong, Paris and Rome. Yank-style amusement is dominated by Don McNeill, originating his ABC Radio "Breakfast Club" from the fair, and Tommy Bartlett's water ski extravaganza. In all, it's a talent outlay of $500,000.

The performers, incidentally, aren't all genus homo. A top attraction is the balloon (yclept "La Coquette") that carried David Niven and Mexican funnyman Cantinflas "Around the World in 80 Days" for Mike Todd.

Divertissements are more or less continuous from three different stages, largest being a floating "Holiday Island" (a soil-laden lavish landscaped barge) off the pier's east end. Coordinating the shows is Mrs. Helen Tieken Geraghty, a savvy vet of pageant productions hereabouts, having mounted "Wings of the Century" for the 1933-34 clambake, and the "Wheels-a-Rolling" for the more recent Railroad Fair.

Liz Tops the Bill

Of the 750,000 persons expected to see the products from abroad (at $1.50 a head, 50c for kids), most famous is Britain's Queen Elizabeth, who toured the layout yesterday (Mon.). Chicago was the only U.S. city skedded on Her Majesty's North American swing in connection with the St. Lawrence Seaway opening. That she accepted the town's invitation is proof to provincials that Chi is truly the "fourth coast's" chief port of call.

The fair's collateral activities have been a show in themselves. For the first time in Chicago wa-

Building Service Union Sending Rep to Look Into Louisville Ushers Local

Louisville, July 7.

Building Service Employees Union is sending a rep from Chicago to investigate the union's Local 123, which represents ushers employed in Louisville. The Courier-Journal revealed Saturday (1) that the prez and business agent of the local, B. K. "Red" Brantley, also was an incorporator of the only firm with which the local has a contract.

William L. McFetridge, Chicago, prez of the BSEU, according to the Courier-Journal has made himself unavailable to calls inquiring what action his organization plans to take in the Louisville situation. His secretary believes he will probably want to investigate the matter, but didn't know if McFetridge had taken any steps toward that end.

Officials of the Ticket Sellers Union, which has been in a jurisdictional hassle with the ushers local, said they have been advised that a rep of the BSEU would be in Louisville very shortly to look into the local's affairs. Both locals are members of the international affiliated with the AFL-CIO.

Brantley, a local resident, denied owning any stock in the B. K. Red Brantley Usher Service. County records, according to the Courier-Journal, show that he was an incorporator of the firm which supplies ushers to the Jefferson County Armory, Fairgrounds, Louisville Colonels baseball team, Churchill Downs, and Iroquois Amphitheatre. The usher service is the only firm of its kind in Louisville, and the local of which Brantley is an officer is the only such firm in Louisville representing ushers.

SILVER DOLLAR STUNT AT ELITCH, DENVER

Denver, July 7.

As silver has played such an important part in shaping Colorado's history, Elitch Gardens management is taking advantage of the state's Centennial celebration to work a smart promotion gimmick.

On Sunday (28) gate admission to the 68-year old amusement park may be had by simply showing a silver dollar, likewise a free afternoon of dancing at the Trocadero Ballroom may be had. Then the silver dollar may be spent for a coupon entitling holder to double the amount of rides a dollar will ordinarily buy.

Lane's 'Whistle' Stops In Aussie, Scandinavia

Glasgow, July 7.

Desmond Lane, the "penny-whistle man" currently in vaude here, will take his musical act to Australia next winter. He is skedded to sail to Melbourne Oct. 26, opening at the Tivoli Theatre there Dec. 8.

Lane is also set for theatre dates in Scandinavia, opening at the Tivoli, Stockholm, in mid-July, and following at the Casino, Oslo, and Liseberg, Gateborg.

He plays lively rock 'n' roll act on clarinet and penny-whistle, the latter costing him only 40c in a novelty shop. He has used same whistle for a dozen years.

Bob Hope 78½G in Cleve. With Aid of TV Cowpokes

Cleveland, July 7.

Bob Hope's vaude show for hometowners in opening Cain Park Theatre's Summer Festival grossed about $78.500 in two-week run. Scaled from $2 to $5 for weekends, the 3,000-seat amphitheatre's top potential was approximately $144,000 for two-weeker but cold weather sliced attendance in first frame.

Guest appearances by Hugh (Wyatt Earp) O'Brian and James (Gunsmoke) Arness, drawing boffo crowds, helped to boost take.

Water Show

Hell'zasplashin'

George A. Hamid presentation with Olsen & Johnson, Marty May, June Johnson, Carlell & Rosa, Peggy Klein, Shorty Renna, Richard Hayman, Aquamaids, Aquamaniacs, Ben Dova, Eileen O'Dare, Nick Francis Orch; produced by Hal Sands; staging & choreography, Edith Barstow; water choreography, Norma Dean Maxwell; water & diving production, Bob Maxwell. Opened at Flushing Meadows Amphitheatre, N.Y., June 24, '59.

Olsen & Johnson, who have made a career out of zany bits of business, seem to be at sea when it comes to plotting aquatic proceedings. The vast expanse of the Flushing Meadows Amphitheatre, the original site of Billy Rose's Aquacade during the World's Fair days, is not quite intime enough to carry the O&J brand of humor. The little sight and sound bits sometimes cannot be seen even in the more expensive seats, and thus much of their effectiveness is lost.

This is in addition to the fact that much of the O&J business has been on the boards for a long time and its freshness has long been gone. The duo have to work on a ramp built near the seats. When the bits go on the large stage, much of them have to be imagined.

It is also evident that special skills are needed to put on a water show. Edith Barstow, staging the effort, has endowed the show with an excellent pace. The action frequently hides the paucity of talent and the repetition of the same faces. Miss Barstow is an ingenious stager and effectively hid many inherent blemishes in the production.

One of the great negative factors in aquaspecs is the failure to devise new entertainment gimmicks. There are the precision routines, the aquacomedics and the divers. Only departure this season is the high dive off a 72-ft. platform by James Goodhead and a torch dive by Victor Zoble. The waterwork is okay in every sector.

Of the land-based turns, Eileen O'Dare is a lithe acro dancer who appears in various sequences throughout the show, and during the pre-curtain period goes throughout the arena looking for a mythical Oscar. Peggy Klein also circulates in the crowd trying to nab a man. The roping act of Bud Carlell & Rosa goes over well, and the harmonica turn of Richard Hayman playing "Orpheus" gets ample appreciation. Marty May's act has been abbreviated too much to capture its usual effectiveness, and Ben Dova was hampered by failure to light the turn sufficiently.

Although the staging is better this year than last, the first show under the George A. Hamid aegis, the production is handicapped by the insufficiency of talent. There are moments of enjoyment, especially when it's considered that the major interrupters of the past, the low-flying planes from nearby LaGuardia Airport, seemingly have been rerouted by the Park Dept. Nick Francis cuts the show excellently, even though the over-amplification hampered his work.

Oscar Lloyd Agcy. Books Units at Nfld. Airbase

Oscar Lloyd Agency has contracted through December to supply packaged entertainment to the Pepperell Airbase at Newfoundland.

First show opened July 6 with Kaye Gorham & Her Five Manhattan Steppers, Dennis O'Neil, Edith Dahl and Viola Smith's Starlight Trio. It will also include a five-piece musical combo.

Each unit will play the base two weeks.

Inside Stuff—Vaude

Felix Adler, the buffoon with the bulbous nose, paid Greensboro, N. C., a quick visit recently. He toured for 50 years with Ringling Bros., and left the circus a couple of years ago. Adler was visiting there with his wife, Amelia, also a clown, in connection with the promotion of a new motion picture, "The Big Circus" (AA). Neil McGill, manager of the Carolina Theatre, quipped, "Of course, it's just coincidence that it opens at my theatre" (July 2).

It takes the vet rib-tickler a bit longer to put on his makeup these days. Age? No, it's due to his eyesight. "It's been bad since the fire," he explained. He was referring to the disastrous fire of July 6, 1944, which swept through the circus tent during a show in Hartford, Conn. There were 168 victims. "The tremendous brightness of the flames burned my eyes as I went in trying to help people," he said. "But those people weren't burned to death—they were trampled when they panicked," he said.

He and his wife, from Richmond, Va., are the only known husband-wife professional team of clowns. "I can say it and get away with it," he chuckled—"I married a clown."

Claude C. Phillippe, who resigned as Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, N.Y., veepee to be in charge of the forthcoming Rockefeller Center Hotel to be built by the Zeckendorf interests, has started to invite friends to the grand opening of the hotel, which he says will take place for the New Year's Eve celebration of 1961. Ground will be broken for the new inn in August.

Tradesters say neither of Hawaii's major dailies has a rigid policy of censorship when it comes to entertainment advertising. One newspaper sent back a burlesque peeler's pic for additional coverage via an artist's air-brush. But the same paper last week accepted Club Ginza's ad which describes exotic Crystal Starr as "That slow motion . . . slow torture girl."

A directive has been sent to all booking offices at General Artists Corp. asking that a clause be included in all contracts for Frankie Avalon and Fabian that a minimum of eight police be assigned them to insure the safety of the performers. Policemen have long been evident at rock 'n' roll shows both inside and outside theatres.

Rail and turnpike routes through the $100,000,000 Prudential Centre, now under construction in Boston's Back Bay, were termed "a roadblock that will have to be ironed out" by Mayor John B. Hynes, who rushed to Newark last week for a confab with Prudential officials. The proposed extension of the Massachusetts Turnpike along the Boston & Albany tracks would pass under a corner of the $3,000,000 municipal aud and convention hall. Pilings are now being driven for the 52-story Prudential building and other structures in the development. The required engineering change in construction of the civic aud will cost $150,000, Hynes said. This is $850,000 less than originally estimated. The change allows space for two railroad tracks and the Turnpike Extension under a corner of the convention hall.

How The Ringlings Grew

By TONY CONWAY

"A Ticket To The Circus," by Charles Philip Fox (Superior; $10; 184 pages, over 200 photos) answers the questions:

Who were the Ringling Bros.? What were they like? How did they get into the circus business. What did they have that literally forced them to face their big-name competitors and triumph?

This book is the story of the "five brothers from Baraboo," Wiscousin. With word and picture, author Fox traces their humble beginnings as "Yankee Robinson and Ringling Bros. Great Double Shows, Circus and Caravan" through "Ringling Bros. World's Greatest Shows" to the super-colossus of the tented world, "Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey, The Greatest Show on Earth," and the arena-stadium circus which has toured since John Ringling North sent the trains home in July 1956.

Predominantly a photo history, the volume includes such items from the first small show as a crude wooden money box, the first handmade tent, and tent poles cut from the woods near the Ringling home, as well as diesel generators, tractors and loading methods used by the giant show of the 1950s.

By 1906 the brothers owned not only their own show but Forepaugh-Sells. They had agreed to a division of the country, for routing purposes, with Barnum & Bailey. Then James A. Bailey died. Rumors rose that the "Greatest Show on Earth" would be sold to the Ringlings. VARIETY for Jan. 26, 1907, quoted a notice issued by Barnum & Bailey at its Bridgeport winterquarters: "—No final agreements would be made looking to the contracting of acts until the return of John Ringling from Europe," suggesting the management felt that the sale was a possibility. In October of 1907 the two largest circuses came under one management.

John Ringling's Modesty

In January of 1908 when John Ringling went to Europe in search of talent VARIETY interviewed him in London: "You want my history. Why, I have none. I am merely John Ringling, age 39. I am one of the five brothers Ringling, sons of a Chicago merchant—In the summer we worked a circus and did well. At the present day—well, I must not talk big — we are the Ringling Bros. who employ and control a staff of 3,500 people and own 400 railway cars."

One theme, that of teamwork, is stressed continuously. The author points out that the five brothers were co-equal at all times and in all dealings concerning their enterprises. He shows that each had his own specialized field of operations (i.e.: Al, director of performance; Charles, advertising; John, routing) and yet all five acted as a team. This team sense continued even when death began to claim the show's owners. The men who were Ringling executives are shown always to have had this sense of teamwork. Only when "modern" methods were introduced by a non-circus management in the mid-1950s did the colossus find itself in trouble.

No typical year's program is given nor is there any attempt to list the countless stars who appeared under the Ringling banner. But all-time greats such as Lillian Leitzel, aerialist; May Wirth, equestrienne; The Wallendas, high wire; Con Colleano, tight wire; Clyde Beatty and Terrell Jacobs, cat trainers; the Chistianis and the Hannefords, riding acts; and The Clarkonians, ying return act, are considered.

Publicists Accoladed

Publicists well known on Broadway and throughout the nation get a notice themselves instead of seeking one for others. Frank Braden, now touring with the undercanvas Clyde Beatty and Cole Bros. Combined Circus, and "Bev" Kelley, now manager of the St. Louis Municipal Opera, are singled out as prime examples of the art of publicity.

The men who ran the program, such as John Agee, Fred Bradna, and Pat Valdo, are here along with famed bandmasters such as the Great Liberati and Merle Evans. The days of the mounted band under Prof. Ganweiler and such

Union Protests Seizure of Emcees By Police in Hub Strip Raids

Boston, July 7.

An emcee's lot is not a happy one—in Massachusetts. It seems that whenever the gendarmes swoop down upon a boite to nab strippers, they also scoop up the master of ceremonies and haul him off to the pokey. He winds up facing the same charges as the peelers and usually pays the same penalties.

This is very unfair to emcees, says the American Guild of Variety Artists, and something should be done.

A committee, headed by Bob Haley, was appointed by the Boston branch of AGVA this week to look into the matter, draft a new state law, or amend the present one to include emcees out.

So far this year, some 20 emcees have been scooped up in raids by state and local police on clubs featuring peelers, and they have been hit with fines.

The emcees in this state are up in arms over what they contend is an unnecessary risk they are forced to take to work clubs that feature exotics. They charge that the cops always grab the emcee, the peelers, owner or manager. "They don't take the bandleader, or the headwaiter, why do they take us?" the emcees are asking.

AGVA Boston branch held a special meeting last week with a three-man committee appointed to report back to the membership on steps to be taken to protect emcees against this type of arrest. In the 20 casts in the state, emcees were nabbed in Worcester, Springfield, New Medford, Brockton and Salisbury Beach.

Army Chooses Winners For 'Rolling Along '59'; Head for TV, World Tour

Washington, July 7.

With talent particularly strong in individual vocalist and dancer entries, the Army's best entertainment has been selected for '59 after three days of competition at nearby Fort Belvoir's Wallace Theatre.

Winners will appear on the Ed Sullivan television show Aug. 30 and tour the world as the "Rolling Along '59" production.

Three vocalist toppers — Alan Colin, classical; Boyd Dounveor, semi-classical; and Darrell Porter, pop—may well have promising show biz futures. Only Porter, who placed third (they're listed in order), has professional experience, having sung with Jan Garber.

Leon Irwin, whose acrobatic dancing led his group of three performers to run away with top prize in the musical specialty group category, was starting a nitery career when Uncle Sam beckoned. Irwin has originality, skill and fine body control.

Henry Parrish, an amateur, took the non-musical specialty group by dancing an interpretation of "The Raven" while another soldier read the Poe poem. The choreography (his) hit "The Raven" on the beak and stirred a loud ovation.

Jack Larson captured the judges and the audience to take the individual specialty trophy with his singing and impersonations of Perry Como, Dean Martin, Ed Sullivan, Jerry Lewis and Elvis Presley. Larson was beginning in the niteries when he had to go into the service. He's high above average for his type of entertainer.

Fort Sheridan's brass, percussion, woodwind and string chamber quintet placed first among instrumental groups.

Although he didn't win in the specialty class, Americo Marenghi, for a young man, knows how to stage a magic act to keep audience interest high. Les.

Evans and Franklin's Widow in Agency Tie

Ray Evans, who assisted the late Cass Franklin at the Cass Franklin Agency, will now head the office. He's in partnership with Franklin's widow, Helen.

Assisting will be Patricia James who will handle tv.

Cincy's Beverly Hills Sets Names Through '59

Cincinnati, July 7.

Parade of stars as toppers at Beverly Hills, Greater Cincy's ace nitery, has been rounded out for the year by John Croft, its talent handicapper.

Lineup includes Sophie Tucker, who previously bowed out on a date offer because the spot adds a third show on Saturday. She is scheduled for the fortnight starting Dec. 18.

In ahead of Miss Tucker will be Roberta Sherwood, who is completing the current two-framer and was tentatively booked for four weeks.

Joe E. Lewis, back after six months, opened July 3. Following in order will be the Vagabonds, Mills Bros., Ames Bros., Georgia Gibbs, Ted Lewis, Spike Jones, Liberace, Frankie Laine, Jane Morgan, then Miss Sherwood and Miss Tucker.

Freddie's, Mpls., Heavy on Names

Minneapolis, July 7.

Freddie's, which inaugurated floor entertainment less than a year ago, is coming up with the strongest name lineup of any local bistro in years. It'll also be launching a new big room shortly.

Singer Dorothy Donegan is set for three weeks. George Shearing opens July 20 and he'll give way to pianist Cy Walters along with Ray Bauduc and Nappy Lamare.

Mort Sahl comes the week of Aug. 10 and Shelley Berman for a fortnight starting Nov. 23. In addition to Sahl, other August bookings include the Jonah Jones quintet and Ahmad Jamal. Ella Fitzgerald is inked for the week of Nov. 16 and Oscar Peterson returns Dec. 7 for two weeks.

Other returnees will include Teddy Wilson. There are bookings as far ahead as next February and among them are Gene Krupa, Carmen Cavallaro and the Dukes of Dixieland. Lenny Bruce and Red Nichols are being sought.

REFEREE TO SETTLE MAKSIK VS: JUDY

A referee has been appointed to adjudicate the attachment of Judy Garland's salary from her recent date at the Metropolitan Opera House, N. Y., by Justice Charles J. Beckinella of Brooklyn Supreme Court. The original attachment was obtained by Ben Maksik, operator of the Town & Country Club, Brooklyn, where Miss Garland is alleged to have breached a contract by walking out of her date at that nitery last year.

Maksik moved to attach her salary and the take of Sid Luft, Miss Garland's husband and manager. The Brooklyn court's ruling came after attorneys for Luft and Miss Garland moved to vacate the attachment. Justice Beckinella stated that claims of ownership of the monies attached will be referred to an official referee to hear and determine the matter.

Jayne & Mickey Brought Back as Hypo for Trop

Las Vegas, July 7.

Jayne Mansfield and Mickey Hargitay have been signed by Tropicana Hotel show producer Lou Walters to bolster the current show, which has been doing disappointing biz.

Miss Mansfield and Hargitay, who closed at the Trop June 23 while packing the room nightly, rejoined the show Sunday (5). Triple attraction of Jackie Mills, Phil Ford & Mimi Hines, and Arthur Lee Simpkins opened on June 24, and will remain with headliner Mansfield.

Ted Bayly will present Gene Autry at Hawkins Stadium in Menands, N.Y., Aug. 21-22.

Jack Benny's New Role

Las Vegas, July 7.

George Burns closed his Sahara stand last night (Tues.) with a reprise of some Burns & Allen standards—the vaude comedy bit about Gracie's brother and the "Tea for Two" stop-dance.

"Gracie" was played by a female impersonator named Jack Benny.

Cliff Jones Sells Vegas Holdings In Line With Nev. Law

Las Vegas, July 7.

The Nevada Gambling Control Board has disclosed that former Lt. Gov. Cliff Jones has completed numerous transactions which completely divorce him from the state gambling industry.

Jones was under fire from state gaming authorities after it was learned he was purchasing casino interests in the West Indies. A gambling regulation prohibits Nevada licensees from operating outside the state while holding interests here.

Jones chose to sell his Nevada interests and pursue gambling in the West Indies. He owns or operates casinos in Cuba and Haiti, and reportedly is contemplating the purchase of gambling concessions on other Caribbean islands.

The control board reveals that Jones transferred 12,500 shares of Golden Nugget stock to G. C. (Buck) Blaine, a present licensee in the Nugget.

Monte Bernstein, a former partner, purchased Jones' 2.3% of the Lucky Strike Club. His 16% of the Hotel Thunderbird and his interests in M. B. Hicks & Associates, operators of the Silver Palace, were sold to Joe Wells, a licensee in both the Thunderbird and Silver Palace casinos. The control board did not reveal the purchases prices.

'CAPADES' WHAM 162G IN PORT. FORTNIGHT

Portland, Ore., July 7.

"Ice Capades" wound up the second week of its 14-day run at the Arena of the Oregon Centennial Exposition with a sizzling $80,500. Total for the two weeks was just over the $162,000 mark. The 5,400-seater was scaled to $3.50. Take is even more terrific considering the show played behind the main gate with an additional tab of $1 per stub.

This is the first time in nearly 10 years that the John H. Harris outfit has played here, or since the Coliseum was condemned. New Coliseum will be completed in 1960 and "Capades" will no doubt become a regular visitor.

'Holiday on Ice' Gets Boost From USSR Mag

Washington,, July 7.

"Holiday on Ice" has a rave notice and seven photographs in new issue of "USSR," Russian monthly mag, distributed by Soviet Embassy here and sold on some newstands. Under a joint agreement, the U.S. has a similar magazine in Russia, called "America."

Of Moscow appearance of U.S. ice skating company, the mag said: "Genuine art finds its way to the heart of the people, and there is no doubt that 'Holiday on Ice' has helped to develop and strengthen the cultural relations between the Soviet Union and the U.S. The Soviet people look forward to more visits of this kind."

The article included numerous rave adjectives.

Del Ray in Havana

Havana, July 7.

Del Ray's magico act opened in the Copa Room of the Havana Riviera Hotel last week for a fortnight to head an otherwise Cuban musical revue. Musical portion of the show holds over indefinitely.

Ray, an American, breaks up the string of Latin-American performers who have played the Riviera in recent months. The holdover show comprises featured singers Maria Remola and Enrique Herrera, dancers Monica Castell and Gladys Robau, plus the Caribe Quartet. Felix Guerrero's band continues to play the show music.

AGVA's 60-40 Talent Ratio Favoring U.S. Could Bring Reprisals Abroad

The recent edict by the American Guild of Variety Artists that all cafe bills are to have a minimum of 60% American performers is likely to restrict the use of American performers abroad. Inasmuch as most rulings of this kind spawn similar ones in the affected countries, it's anticipated that unions in foreign lands will enact similar legislation.

This is seen in the case of the American Federation of Musicians which has only recently been able to get musicians to work in England. Inasmuch as the AFM prohibits the use of foreign musicians in the U.S., the British Musicians Union for example, has enacted similar legislation. Other countries also have laws restricting the use of American tooters However, only recently have promoters in the U.S. and Britain been able to work out an exchange program.

Curiously enough, the same countries which have restrictions against musicians have no such bans, as yet, on performers. Until now, acts have been able to come and go in most lands and freely obtain work permits. If unions abroad take retaliatory action, then such freedom will be gone.

The apprehension about ability of talent to work abroad has come up with the recent promulgation of an AGVA ruling that henceforth all casts shall have at least 60% American cast. The union specifically asked the U.S. Immigration Dept., to refuse visas to a cast of Japanese performers that were slated for Bill Miller's New Frontier Hotel, Las Vegas. Immigration temporarily held up the permits, but later overruled AGVA's objections and greenlighted the imported troupe.

Vegas Needs Imports

Las Vegasites have pointed out that such restriction will inhibit the growth of hotels as well as show biz in the area. The hoteliers have long gone on the assumption that there are not enough names to meet the needs of all the inns in the area. Consequently, they have to look for gimmicks and imports. If they are denied imports, it is evident that more shows such as Lido de Paris, now at the Stardust, will not be able to gain entry in this country.

The Stardust Hotel, where the Lido show is now ensconced, has a contract, approved by AGVA, which calls for four shows each to be imported six months apart. However, since the first Lido show ran nearly a year, and the new import is slated to go for about 18 months, the inn doesn't know whether AGVA would consider its contract breached because first show ran more than the stipulated six months, or whether AGVA could declare the contract carried out at the end of two years from its original inking.

There is also a third interpretation possible—the playing out of

Jerry Lewis & Revue's Port. 2-Niter (1 for Him)

Portland, Ore., July 7.

Jerry Lewis & His Hollywood Revue (45) has been signed to play two night performances at the Paramount here July 14-15. Comic will be making his debut in the Pacific Northwest under the Northwest Releasing Corp. banner.

Bossman Zolly Volchock informed his Paramount Theatre associate last week that Lewis would appear only on the 14th as he had to return to Hollywood for film work. Paramount manager Dick Newton is now scrambling to get stubholders for the second night into seats for the one performance.

Lewis will play Seattle, Vancouver, B.C., and Spokane, and wind up at the Portland Paramount. Show includes DeCastro Sisters (3), Kings (4), Amazing Mr. Ballantine, and one more act in addition to a large orch.

Desert Inn Sale, Leaseback on Tap

The Desert Inn, Las Vegas, is currently involved in a deal whereby it will be sold and then leased back for a number of years. Operators of the Desert Inn, who include Wilbur Clark, Moe Dalitz and Moe Kleinman, would then be able to convert the profits into a capital gains deal.

Practice of selling property and then having the original owners lease it back for operation is a common procedure in and out of show biz.

Details of the DI deal haven't yet been divulged. The same combination now running the inn would take over the operation on a long-term lease. Deal is expected to be completed shortly.

VEGAS MOULIN ROUGE TO REOPEN IN SEPT.

The Moulin Rouge, Las Vegas, now closed for more than three years following a shortlived operation as an interracial inn, is set to be opened again. New operator will be Bill Kozloff, formerly of the Silver Slipper, and Don Wolfstone, a Seattle insurance man. Opening is expected to be around Sept. 1.

Kozloff, a brother of Jake Kozloff, who is partnered with Clifford C. Jones in the operation of casinos in the Caribbean area, obtained the property on a lease-purchase deal. Presently, Kozloff anticipates that he'll be able to open the spot with Negro revues.

The Moulin Rouge is located away from the Strip near the county line. The location and failure to get top names were regarded as the primary reasons for its foldo at the time.

Union News in Top Bid For St. Paul Aud. Pact

St. Paul, July 7.

Influenced by a considerably larger number of attractions and the fact that total attendance undoubtedly will soar, interests bidding for the concession privilege at the local municipal auditorium for the next five years have upped their figures substantially from the previous period.

As a result, the auditorium's profit from this source will increase about 50% during the ensuing five years.

Highest bid is that of the Union News Co. of New York which has offered to pay the city $31,100 a year for a five-year contract and lease to operate the concessions. This compares with the slightly more than $20,000 per annum the city has been receiving from Bush & Laube, Kansas City.

The city has asked for flat annual figures, but also for an alternate figure on a base guarantee plus a percentage.

New Mexico State Fair's Videoater Emoters; Ink Bob Horton, Robertson

Albuquerque, July 7.

Robert Horton, of television's "Wagon Train," has been booked to open the 1959 New Mexico State Fair on Sept. 26. He is skedded to make two appearances on opening day, one at afternoon coliseum show and in the evening at the rodeo.

Dale Robertson of the "Wells Fargo" tv show is booked to follow Horton on Sept. 27-29.

Bookings are in keeping with an entire western star theme for this year's show, as against last year's show, which featured Arthur Godfrey for all nine days. Godfrey was paid $40,000.

Horton will receive $2,000 for two shows on opening day, Robertson to get $7,500 for two shows daily on three days.

Jimmy Wakely has been booked to emcee shows and sing for all nine days, plus do advance promotion work at total tab of $5,000 for nine days.

Quentin Tex Barron, fair manager, is currently working on other bookings.

AGVA—Teamsters Tie

is being prepared for the walkout. Jackie Bright, AGVA's national administrative secretary, is deemed to be so tightly in control of AGVA that he can virtually order its national board to vote any way he dictates. The only drawback to an immediate move is the fact that he has not yet succeeded in bringing the AGVA Welfare Trust Fund under his control. The national board, at its recent meeting, however, reiterated a previously passed resolution asking for the removal of the present fund attorneys, Silverstone & Rosenthal, and substituting Harold Berg, AGVA attorney. It's readily conceded that when this occurs, the fund's charter will be rewritten so that the administration could control the fund's assets.

At the same time, it is also conceded that Bright will have to act fast, probably before the 4A's can take over the union's assets, and so foil a move in this direction. It is now a question as to whether the 4A's wants to stick its neck out again, and take over the affairs of AGVA. It did so once previously when it removed Matt Shelvey as AGVA's executive secretary, and installed its own representatives until it felt that the union was cleaned up sufficiently to get back its autonomy.

There are reasons why a move to the Teamsters Union is feasible. In the first place, the personal ambitions of Bright within the 4A's have been blighted. Also prospects of his moving up within the AFL-CIO councils have been dubious since last month's convention in Washington. An AFL-CIO observer came to deliver a greeting and sat in the meeting room for four days, during which time he could have formed an opinion of the character of the present administration.

Room for Expansion

It is also argued that AGVA in its present evolution may do better with Teamster affiliation than with the 4A's. Teamsters are considerably more powerful and militant than the 4A's, as was evident during the Ringling strike. At the same time, the AGVA membership will be in no position to protest the new affiliation if it occurs. With Teamster affiliation, AGVA could more fully organize the outdoor field, and perhaps expand into models, wrestlers and professional athletes. There has long been talk of moving into those areas, and it could be done with the assistance of James R. Hoffa, present Teamster head.

Also, a potent factor in the move would be the distaste of the 4A's for the present AGVA situation. It has long been reported that the 4A's would have moved more readily for a one-card union, were it not for the fact that such a step would have to include AGVA. As it is now engaged in talks for amalgamation of AFTRA and SAG, it could leave AGVA out. Such a step would perhaps justify AGVA's breakaway from the 4A's and into Hoffa's hands.

4A's in Favor of Break?

Reportedly, the 4A's has been aware of the situation, but has been loathe to act, because it would have to administer the union in that event. With merger talks on, it doesn't want to be directly involved in the AGVA headache. With this in mind, it seems to be actually asking for the separation of AGVA.

The relationship between Bright and Hoffa has been cordial since the period of cooperation during the Ringling strike. Since Bright could not have won the Ringling strike without Hoffa's help, it is readily assumed that Bright's chances of expanded organization could more easily be realized within the Teamster fold. It is also recalled that AGVA and the Teamsters cooperated in running a circus in Boston in opposition to Ringling. In addition, Hoffa, who has long been under investigation by the Senate Rackets Committee, has left the AFL-CIO and would presumably appreciate more alliances within the house of labor. It's likely that he would welcome affiliation with Bright.

As a result, the lineup of AGVA with the Teamsters is not at all unlikely. The question remains as to when such a step would take place.

MASS. RUBBERNECKING PEGGED AT $427-MIL

Boston, July 7.

The tourist touch this summer looks to gross $427,000,000, or 16% more than was spent in Massachusetts last year, according to John T. Burke, state commerce commissioner.

"We're getting back more than $80 for every $1 we've spent for advertising," he reported. Tourists are the state's third largest industry, and to get every loose buck possible spent in the land of the bean and the cod is a tough job. The state nabbed some 3,500,000 gawkers in 1958. This year, it looks for more than 4,000,000.

No small part of the state's draw for tourists are the 26 strawhat theatres now operating; the new Pleasure Island, Disneyland type amusement park, a $4,000,000 project recently opened in Wakefield; beach amusement spots, and a new rash of roadside supper clubs with name performers.

Mick Micheyl's U.S. Cafe Debut at N.Y. Left Bank

Paris, July 7.

Mick Micheyl, pint-sized singer-cleffer here, will do her first U.S. stint at the N.Y. nitery Left Bank in October. Owner Dick Kollmar signed her this week. Miss Micheyl will sing primarily in French for the Francophilic clientele of this French-type boite in the U.S.

In spite of its name, the Left Bank comes up with its first authentic French chantoosey in Miss Micheyl. Others were Yanks who could sing in French or Italian, Kollmar told VARIETY he was planning to open two more Left Bank spots soon, one of the eastside in N.Y. and the other in New Jersey.

Darvas

Business, not the Show Business, category.

His technique in the market parallels the formula for his dancing turn with his half-sister, Julia. "In preparing the act," he says, "I may put in 10 tricks that I think are good but if I find out that the public doesn't respond to it I throw them out." He applies the same methods to his stock speculation. "No matter what I think of a stock," he points out, "If I find out that the public doesn't like it I get rid of it fast!"

He adds that he gauges the stock market the way he gauges audience reaction. "Darvas believes that performers who have learned how to judge audiences have a greater advantage in stock speculation than the ordinary businessman. He also feels that the market has a rhythmic pattern similar to a dancing turn. "There's a certain rhythm," he says, "in which the public buys and sells and the successful speculator must learn to roll with that rhythm and not be rigid."

Darvas also claims that being away from the market, necessitated by the team's global bookings, has given him an important perspective and a chance to see the day-by-day manipulations of the market that those right on top of the situation don't see. Even when he's in New York, at his Hotel Plaza digs, Darvas works out his market manipulations via telegrams as though he were in Paris or Rio.

Since his market manipulations have been so successful the dancing team is limiting its bookings to between 16 and 20 weeks work a year. Upcoming is a novel work-play blending in which Darvas will rent (or buy) a yacht for a vacation cruise with stopoffs at such ports as Barcelona, Lisbon, Cannes, Monte Carlo and Biarritz where Darvas & Julia will hit the shore for a one-night stand on certain gala nights at these posh resorts. About 15 friends will accompany the team on the cruise. The invitations, he says, are being handled by Julia. The bookings aren't set yet but he expects that they'll leave New York in about three weeks and that the cruise will last two months.

Although he believes that the market can be beat by careful study and show biz application, Darvas insists that about 98% of the people aren't suited for the role of stock speculator.

Tivoli Circuit

later to New Zealand and can stay for many months and even years. He cites Johnny Lockwood, an English music hall performer who, when he closes in Australia next weekend, will have been two years and four months in the country during which time he invested in property, including a variety stock company which he will take on tour to New Zealand.

Another is British glamourpuss Sabrina (she's to Diana Dors in Britain what Jayne Mansfield is to Marilyn Monroe) who heads her own "Pleasures of Paris" vaude-revue and will have been Down Under for over a year, when she travels on to New Zealand next October.

"The flesh and blood theatre is very virile and very alive in Australia," says Cooper, who admits an upsurge there of tv as here. Both Sydney and Melbourne each have two commercial and one state-owned station, which average 12 hours of daily operation. Brisbane, Adelaide and Perth are due to open in November. The commercial stations are dominantly newspaper-owned. His Tivoli circuit is in on the video operations but has no control. The Sydney Herald and the Sydney Telegraph have that city tied up. In Melbourne the Sun-Herald controls one of the commercial stations and Sir Arthur Warner (electronics business) has the other commercial station.

Plenty Of Outlets

Tivoli also controls legit theatres, one each in the two larger cities and houses in eight other locations which can play revues like Harold Mi--ky's "Follies," which Cooper saw and discussed with him in Las Vegas.

In Las Vegas he was impressed with acts' willingness to work in the lounges, so long as they worked, and it is this 20-weeks-add-up that he feels will appeal to Yank (and Continental and British) turns. He is setting things up with an eye to the 1960 season. Aussie taxes are under 6% before the 100% take-out salaries. Cooper accents also the higher purchasing power of the currency because of the "underdeveloped economy" in the Anzac belt.

He will have been away four and a half months before he returns to his Melbourne base early in October.

Chi Bally

ters, a flotilla of naval warships is astride, massed just off the pier. And last Saturday (4), some 1,500 marines made a mock amphibious landing on sandy beach a few miles north of the fair.

Probably no fair of any kind here since '34 has grabbed the media attention this one has. The four metro gazettes have exalted the festivities in the fashion of a Podunk primping for a locationing Hollywood film crew. In button-popping tones, the press has been playing the exhibition and Chi's elevation to world port status as a millenium of sorts. Burghers figure the town as the coming colossus of commerce. To many here, that's a better distinction than "hog butcher" to the world, which title has been relinquished, anyway, to Omaha.

And if civic pride isn't swollen enough at this point, there are the Pan-American games and concomitant Festival of the Americas still to come this summer. That crow you hear is no barnyard rooster. It's Pop Dearborn with megaphone.

Ringlings

extravaganzas as "Joan of Arc" and "Solomon and the Queen of Sheba" again come to life.

Animal attractions such as Goliath, the sea elephant, and Gargantua the Great, the gorilla with the air-conditioned cage, return again along with the Ubangi (big-lipped) Savages and the Giraffe Necked Women from Burma.

The preface is by Hester Ringling Sanford, daughter of Mr. Charles, a former member of the circus board of directors who is now fighting for a revival of the tented show. Alice Ringling Coerper, daughter of "Gus," one of the two non-owner brothers, recalls life in Baraboo, Wisconsin, from 1890 to 1919. All through the volume are recollections of bosses, performers, and workingmen who trouped with the show over the years.

All who have enjoyed the circus, all who have had a part in any phase of the entertainment world will find in this book hours of immediate pleasure and will turn back to it innumerable times to enjoy anew a greatness, a grandness that few, if any, more recent entertainment media can ever hope to approach.

Harlem Globetrotters' 1st Iron Curtain Dates

The Harlem Globetrotters, currently touring Europe, will play Iron Curtain countries for the first time following many years of negotiation between Globetrotter impresario Abe Saperstein and Russian officials. The Negro basketball group will play nine games in Moscow's Lenin Central Stadium from July 6-12.

The Russian government jetted the Globetrotter entourage from Berlin and will return them to Vienna following the games. Deal calls for Saperstein to receive the equivalent of $4,000 in rubles. Saperstein still hasn't decided how to convert and may buy Russian goods for resale in the U.S. Opposition for the Negro players will be the San Francisco Chinese All-Stars, which has been touring with the Globetrotters.

In addition there will be a variety show including Richard Bergmann & Norikazu Fujii, table tennis; unicyclist Boy Foy, balancer George Sang Lee, bicyclist Kimiko Yokoi, The Klebers, wire balancers, contortionist Paul Smoll, dancer Arturo Greco, skater Jacques Gordon, and singers Trudy Miller & Tom Hona.

Strike of Bartenders Closes Waikiki Nitery

Honolulu, July 7.

Bartenders' strike at the Waikiki Biltmore Hotel (Massaglia chain) has shuttered entertainment in the hotel's on-again, off-again Top o' the Isle roofside nitery.

"No sense having entertainers if we can't serve drinks to the customers," explains John D. Mace, hotel manager.

Show closed same night the strike began and "in all probability" won't be reopened even when the bartenders' tiff is settled. (It's a pay and contract dispute.)

With an eye on the full house count assured for the summer, Mace is figuring on converting the penthouse nitery to deluxe hotel rooms. Which, after all, is what the Sheraton chain is planning to do to its Mauna Kea Room atop the nearby Princess Kaiulani Hotel.

New Acts

BORRAH MINEVITCH HARMONICA RASCALS
Instrumental, Comedy
20 Mins,
Black Orchid, Chicago

Cafe owners and other talent buyers are apt to need a scorecard to tell 'em apart—meaning this group from Johnny Puleo & Harmonica Gang. The Minevitch Rascals, of which Puleo is an alumnus, were reconstituted recently by the late founder's daughter, Lydia. Alex Novelle, a vet of the forerunner unit, is back again as leader, and little Bobby Dimler has the Puleo role.

Act dishes up the w.k. shenanigans while the "straight" players keep up near-steady instrumentalizing per "Hold That Tiger," "Sabre Dance," etc. The high jinks, of course, run to leg-biting, nose-kissing and such with focus on the midget. Much of it appears old hat by now, with the bits of nonsense playing repetitiously so that the turn never really ignites for the big guffaw.

Only real "brawl," touched off (natch) by Dimler, comes near the getaway and stirs up okay laughs, but as a piece of horseplay it strikes as too little too late. This kind of clowning calls for some fresh slapstick slants that weren't apparent at session caught. Pit.

CHICO HOLIDAY
Songs
25 Mins.
Holiday House, Pittsburgh

Chico Holiday, 22, looks ready for anything. A few routine changes here and there and with any kind of luck, this boy has to make it big. He uses a guitar and a bongo in his act, but there is no trace of rock 'n' roll in his whole routine.

Opening with "Something's Coming" from "West Side Story," Holiday grabbed hold of a huge banquet audience and kept them right with him on his 25-minute songalog. A handsome boy with excellent taste in wardrobe, Holiday sings the song with the gusto and finesse of a young Vic Damone. Something big should happen here. Len.

IVY V (5)
Songs
25 Mins.
Black Orchid, Chicago

This is the nitery bow for this vocal quintet, vets of the Chi club date and stage scene. Group, including two femmes, is attractive and works pleasantly enough but to no effective impression audiences can carry away re either harmonics or staging.

Unit is very commercial, with a library devoted almost entirely to showtunes, including "Music Man," "My Fair Lady" and "South Pacific" medleys. Solo and ensemble, they sing with a wholesomeness that also transmits in their movements and literal gestures. Act is satisfactory for supportive slotting in tv and live media. Pit.

JOAN DIXON
Songs
25 Mins.
Cork Club, Houston

Joan Dixon, a willowy brunet in a gown as tight as a lush on the 14th day of a two-week binge, also exhibits an okay voice. While pipes weren't at best, still showing traces of hoarseness resulting from the championship fight, femme has visual and vocal showcase for her talents.

Miss Dixon opens with special material, and by the time bugging eyes are back in their sockets, moves into "Comes Love." Next is familiar "September In The Rain," then "Daddy Surprise Me," "Softly As In A Morning Sunrise," "Let's Misbehave," and the begoff, "Aren't You Kinda Glad We Did?"

While nightingale presents a variety of tunes, hint is there that her voice is better suited for the lowdown songs. Yet again that impression may have been the result of Johansson's right.

Mel Arvin orch (5) does good backing job, although this thrush would go better with a larger band. Jackie Moore is band vocalist between shows. Skip.

ESQUIVEL AND HIS TRIO
Music
30 Mins.
Melody Room, L.A.

The Mexican composer-arranger, who goes by the single name of Esquivel, has had considerable success on RCA Victor. He's trying a new field in a personal appearance here backed only by a trio. known best for his work with big bands, this small combo is a departure for him. It is an exciting, class act he's currently showcasing at the Melody Room on the Sunset Strip. The piano, played by Esquivel, is the instrument around which the arrangements are built, and the keyboard gets a dazzling workout.

Esquivel gets solid backing from Tony Reyes on bass, Augie Alvaraz on flute and bongos. and John Clauder on drums. The arrangements are original and polished. The group performs casually but is obviously highly-disciplined, a welcome relief from lesser groups that sometimes seem to be performing for their own edification rather than audience interest.

Programming covers a wide range. It touches on Latin rhythms that would be Esquivel's natural forte. It offers a pulsating "Temptation," the novelty "Foolin' Around," the lyric "All The Things You Are," and a bravura "Turkish March." Sets run about 30 minutes each although there are enough arrangements for several hours of playing without repeats.

The group is in here for six weeks, through Aug. 9. It would be a good bet for some of the lounge rooms in Las Vegas or similar clubs elsewhere, or an added starter for television guest shots. It's not certain Esquivel will pursue this facet of his career to the exclusion of future arrangements for recording, but it could be a profitable path. Powe.

House Reviews

Apollo, N. Y.

Rockets (2), Tommy Brown, Falcons (4), Frances Burnett, Coasters (4), Stump & Stumpy, Reuben Phillips Band (12); "Dino" (AA).

Standouts in this week's show at this Harlem house are vocalist Frances Burnett and the Coasters. Miss Burnett, a sharp and clear belter with high sight values, is at her best when using a little restraint, as she did in the encore rendition of "Happiness Is Thing Called Joe."

One of the most musical foursomes on the current long assembly line of rhythm-vocal groups, the Coasters do an especially enticing job with a slow-beat rhumba version of "Zing Went the Strings of My Heart." It deserves the success of their recent wax hit, "Charlie Brown."

The show's other quartet, the Falcons, are standard for the r&r vocal course, but are distinguished by some unusually hip terping.

About as hard a working act as there is around is Cryin' Tommy Brown. He plays boogie piano, drums, terps (both tap and acro) and bawls out a storm of burlesque anguish on "Please Don't Leave Me." And the latter includes a couple of incredible pratfalls off the front of the stage.

Young jitterbug team, the Rockets, work to best advantage together, lack variety in their solos.

Venerable comedy team of Stump & Stumpy round out the affair with broad humor. They do a singularly devastating job on tv oaters with a mock gun duel. A fine bit of business.

The Reuben Phillips house band backs nicely throughout and opens with a swinging instrumental on "Tequila."

Empire, Glasgow

Glasgow, July 2.

David Hughes (with Derek New), Arthur Worsley, Reg Dixon, Benson Dulay & Co. (2), Les Maxims (2), Billy (Uke) Scott, Georgette, Three Martinis, Bobby Dowds orch.

David Hughes, English ballad singer, offers satisfying headline act, but is given poor support in layout, apart from Arthur Worsley's vent offering and balancing specialty of Les Maxims. Hughes registers with "Wild Goose," "This Is My Beloved" and "Because," and rouses yocks with his travesty of Elvis Presley, to whom (with sideburns added) he bears a resemblance of sorts. Derek New tinkles the ivories capably.

Arthur Worsley throws 99% of his talk onto his w.k. dummy, Charlie Brown, and wins heavy palming for clever voice manipulation. His angle throughout is that he (Worsley) isn't doing any gabbing, and that his dummy insists he start. It registered strongly at show caught, despite small attendance.

Reg Dixon, English comedian, has too-leisurely style, and needs something more than his current mild approach. Billy (Uke) Scott warbles cheerfully while strumming on his ukulele to pleasing effect.

Benson Dulay, filling pre-interval spot, uses audience participation from teenage boys to bolster pleasing magico act, with one of the youths, a stooge, playing for yocks with his antics.

Georgette is a blonde who divests her clothes while walking on the slack wire, but act lacks shape. Three Martinis are trio of distaffers who open both segments with adequate dance bits. Les Maxims, mixed duo, are strongest of rest of support with clever balancing, the femme being a standout in poise and strength.

Bill is far from having the strength that layouts at a No. 1 vaudery should have. Summer doldrums may be faulted, but policy of weak vaude placings is one that must have detrimental effect in long run on current state of vaude in the U.K. Gord.

Opera, Buenos Aires

Buenos Aires, June 23.

Clemente Lococo S. A. with Continental Artists International and Mervin Nelson present "Cab Calloway & His Cotton Club Revue," with Leslie Scott, Norma Miller, (dance arrangements), The Chocolateers, Joel Noble, Ketty Lester & Jon Lei, Stoney & Audrey June, Lady Washington & Bobbi Parker. Chorus: Shirley Cooke, Jeannette Dubois, Barbara Taylor, Priscilla Spencer, Pat Blackman, Betty Clark, Gladys Ward, Mercedes Cruz. The Jazz Men: Small Boykins, William Dotson; montage Young, William Dotson; montage and direction: Nelson; produced by Alex Valdez; choreography, Joel Noble; musical director, Eddie Barefield, with local orch (30); 50c to $1.50.

This is a colorful, snappy show, put together especially for a Latin-American tour, and is something of a hodgepodge as a consequence. At any rate, the Lococo courage in taking on a dollar show at this time of "austerity" and depression is to be lauded. Although queues form early in front of the Opera to catch this show, booked for only 10 days (at a reputed $20,000, plus the high cost of transportation), the gallery seats are sold quicker than the 150-peso stalls.

Though a novelty amidst the sameness of local entertainment, this show is not up to the standard of Lococo's previous importations of "Las Vegas," "Lido" and Folies Bergere shows, or the Cuevas Ballet and Dunham Dancers. It lacks finish and at least on the first night, the music was over-strident, and singers had difficulty getting the local band to keep the right tempo.

Outstanding is Leslie Scott's rendering of items from "Porgy and Bess" with which audiences are already familiar from the ANTA production brought here over a year ago.

Cab Calloway does a standout job as emcee throughout the first half, and when onstage as himself, succeeds in persuading the local audience to participate in singing his choruses of hi-de-ho. This is no small achievement.

"Call of the Wild," a semi-ballet dance number, with entire cast involved, is standout for the torch dancing and fire swallowing of Joel Noble and Jon Lei's hoofing. In fact, the show is more a dance than an all-singing show, as it was originally meant to be, mainly because of Norma Miller's introduction of outstanding terp numbers, arranged by her. Her Cotton Club girls throw themselves into their routines with an elan which local chorines would do well to emulate. Emphasis on dancing may be due to lack of any other outstanding voice, beyond Leslie Scott's. Apart from excerpts from "Porgy," he sang the Toreador Song from "Carmen" and "Old Man River." Nid.

the stipulated four shows, no matter what the duration was. However, conjecture isn't possible at this point since the union hasn't indicated its viewpoint.

The Stardust, New Frontier, and the El Rancho, the latter slated to use more imported shows, are affected by the 60-40 ruling. However, once the AGVA ruling hits employment rosters in affected countries, it's anticipated that unions in those lands will make it so tough on importing American talent that U.S. performers will be virtually confined to this country.

Roy Rogers at Iowa Fair

Des Moines, July 7.

The Iowa State Fair has booked Roy Rogers to headline seven grandstand programs, with evening shows from Sept. 2 to 5 and matinees Sept. 3, 4 and 6.

Desert Inn, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, June 30.

Ed Sullivan, Benny Fields, Blossom Seeley, Arnold Stang, Dukes of Dixieland, Della Reese, Bob Lewis, Helene & Howard, Hubert Castle, La Chunga & Co. (5), Modern Jazz Dancers (4), The Shirleys, Pinky & Perky, Art Johnson, Donn Arden Dancers (16), Carlton Hayes Orch (14); produced by Ed Sullivan; choreography by Donn Arden; $3 minimum.

Ed Sullivan emcees a new variety show in the Painted Desert Room, and first-nighter Jack Benny summed it up when he told Sullivan, "Ed, you've brought back vaudeville—it's a great evening of fine entertainment."

Despite the poor reviews Benny Fields' ticker has been receiving from his doctor lately, he and Blossom Seeley sock across an act which is as nifty as anything the vet team has ever done. It's a tribute to their talent that both oldsters and youngsters cheer their version of "Birth of the Blues," Miss Seeley's "Teasin' Rag" (with Fields at the 88), her "Somebody Loves Me," and his "Melancholy Baby."

Sullivan, who sits on the steps at the side of the stage during most of the show, joins Arnold Stang in some funny dialog-swapping about gambling. The Dukes of Dixieland churn the atmosphere with their hip New Orleans music, which includes a dandy version of "Mack the Knife." Pinky & Perky present a clever puppet act, with such animals as mice, frogs and hogs performing to a tape-recorded background.

Hubert Castle gets brisk mitting with his slack wire act consisting of a yockable drunk routine plus harrowing twists and turns. La Chunga and her company of five Gypsy dancers do a fiery, exciting bit of terping, and sepia songstress Della Reese is outstanding in a brief appearance in which "Stormy Weather" is one of her zingers. Helene & Howard (billed as Sullivan's answer to Marge & Gower Champion) get hefty laughs with their comedy dance routine—he's a handsome critter and she has a great comic face which she uses to best advantage.

Bob Lewis does an amusing Will Rogers-type monolog while performing rope and handkerchief tricks. The four Modern Jazz Dancers zip some updated jitterbugging, and the Shirleys end the show with their novel act which consists of twisting toy balloons into animal shapes and sailing dozens of them into the audience.

Curtain-raiser for the show, set for four weeks, is an imaginative Donn Arden production called "Television Revue of 1960" which features the Arden Dancers (16) and the big voice of baritone Art Johnson. Duke.

International, N. Y.

Jack Silverman presentation of "Stars on Ice" with John Flanagan, Curtin & Hill, Vic Charles, Ellie Sommers, Larry Ellis, Ice Adorables (6); produced by Flanagan; choreography, Boots McKenna; Mike Durso & Charlie Palmieri Orchs; $6 minimum.

Jack Silverman is playing it cool for the summer. He's installed an icer which has the double function of entertaining the customers, providing novelty and incidentally, keeping the talent budget down during the period when business normally falls off. This layout is in for six weeks with an option for a similar period.

The International's proceedings constitute a well-constructed icer, produced by skating comic John Flanagan with choreography by Boots McKenna. At first glimpse, all the elements for summertime entertainment are present, but there's a need for some tighter editing which should boil the layout down to somewhat under an hour.

The principals constitute purely glace turns, while a couple have put skates on what is normally a floor act. In the latter category is Vic Charles, an expert marionette practitioner who gives his characters greater mobility by being on skates. He does a dancer, a trapeze artist, and a breakaway skeleton, among others, and walks off with a major share of applause. Charles gives his dolls a lot of character as well as liveliness. Larry Ellis is a singer who can also skate. He moves well, but his major strength is a good set of rhythm tunes which he delivers effectively.

The comedy is by Flanagan, who comes on stage in a WAC uniform and has a set of routines of the type that has worked in the large touring shows. Flanagan has many sight gags which give the show a strong keystone.

Other major ice principal is Ellie Somers, a lithe ballerina who gets over excellently in two numbers. The dance team is John Curtin & Patti Hill who also show up strongly in two numbers. The latter, an Apache done to "Slaughter on Tenth Ave.," is their topper. The line's routines are sprightly, and the costuming, which has seen service in prior International shows, remains appropriate. Mike Durso's band showbacks with usual efficiency and Charles Palmieri gives the Latin kick. Jose.

Shoreham Hotel, D. C.

Washington, June 30.

Johnny Puleo & Harmonica Gang, Bob Cross Orch (12); $2 cover.

It's doubtful that little Johnny Puleo could give an unsatisfactory performance, but an open-air setting like the Shoreham Hotel's beautiful Terrace robs the act of the high grade of musical quality which is in it. Somehow the tone of harmonicas is lost in the great outdoors, although after opening night Puleo is attempting several changes in the loudspeaking setup in an effort to get his music across better.

As a comedy team, the Puleo Gang is fine outside and stimulated plenty of laughs and heavy mitting from a sophisticated crowd. More than a dozen kids were in the big audience (Puleo, a local product, is a good draw here), indicating the "family night out" appeal both of Allan Bralove's Terrace and the harmonica madcaps. It's not unusual to see children on the Terrace, but this opener had considerably more than usual.

Solos played into microphones, like "I Get Ideas," "La Vie en Rose," "Diane," etc., sound fine, but group playing sends some of the music into the night air unheard. "Peg O' My Heart" is, of course, a standard with the group and an audience favorite. Puleo & Gang take a variety of music, classical, semi-classical and popular and mix it with heavy doses of slapstick, man bites man and bodies knocked to the floor. The encore medley was "Meadowland," "Dark Eyes" and "Hungarian Rhapsody, played more for music than comedy.

Customers liked what they saw—if not what they heard. Puleo and friends are here for two weeks, and Bob Cross and his topnotch musicians are on the Terrace for the summer. Carp.

Cotton Club, A. C.

Atlantic City, July 4.

Pearl Bailey Revue (50) with The Ambassadors (10), Bill Bailey, Louis Bellson Band (18); $2 admission, $5 minimum.

Pearl Bailey in her first appearance in many years in a night club here tees off summer show at Barney & Herbie Paloff's mid-city Cotton Club, bringing in her revue featuring the Ambassadors, backed by Louis Bellson's band for a 10-day engagement.

For the more than one-hour show, curtailed somewhat opening night because of failure of the airconditioning system, it's Miss Bailey all the way. Her patter, directed at club's operators, customers and waiters, registers solidly. She proves beyond question that she can bang over songs, which range from old faves to numbers from the motion picture, "Porgy and Bess" in which she appears.

Standby of sepia spots, that song with a dual meaning is not forgotten, with "She Lost It at the Astor" bringing best mittings. "My Man," sung with French horn player in band as a foil, haunting "My Man's Gone Now," "Foggy Day in Old London Town," "One of Those Things," just a few of her numbers, all draw top returns.

In many of her offerings she is backed by the Ambassadors, a choral group of four women and six men whose singing is best ever caught in a night club here in years.

Lone production number, and there should be more, is "Stranger in Paradise" featuring Miss Bailey as vocalist backed by the Ambassadors and others in the revue, including a line of five beautifully costumed girls and four boys.

Brother Bill Bailey gets top supporting spot and shows that he's a fine tapster. The drumming of Louis Bellson is a show-stopper, with his orch leading him into the solo.

Entire show is hampered by inadequacy of this club, with crowd of 500 being jammed into a long rectangular room, making it very difficult to get any kind of service and causing those in the section below the front center line to strain an eye to catch the acts. Walk.

New York's St. Regis Last Dine-&-Dancery Roof-Garden Operation

The Josef Urban-designed Hotel St. Regis Roof (originally called the Viennese Roof, and still reminiscent of that motif) is the last of the Mohicans among posh summertime dining-and-dancing Manhattan rooftop spots. One by one, for reasons of economics and, originally superinduced by airconditioning, this is the last to remain, and even this tres elegant retreat is starting to manifest a mild incursion of its former lushness since the death this year of Vincent Astor. The Astor Foundation already has seen fit to cut the operation to a five-a-week schedule, closing Mondays as well as Sunday, and also cutting the dansapation to the mainstay ole reliable Milt Shaw band who, until now, was spelled by the Ray Bari Ensemble. Instead, he alternates the "society" music with the Latin and waltz sets.

On July 1, coinciding by design or accident with the exit of Claude C. Philippe to the Zeckendorf interests, the Starlight Roof of the Waldorf-Astoria set a precedent by closing down for the first time in midsummer, with the finaleing Count Basie-Tommy Sands show (latter succeeded Ella Fitzgerald); reason given: nothing strong enough to follow.

From the Hotel Bossert in Brooklyn to the Astor Roof in Times Square (it's now a business management headquarters), from the Statler (nee Pennsylvania) Roof to the Biltmore Cascades (roof), summertime operations have constricted and become restricted to airconditioned grillrooms for the dwindling hot-weather clientele. The Rainbow Room long ago gave up; it's a pop-priced Union News Co. operation now Hoteliers discovered that the moneyed regulars segue to Long Island and Westchester oases and the summer tourists are close students of the dollar when it comes to plush hotel patronage.

And so, once again, August and his veteran staff are custodians of what's left of the class skyline restaurants and, per usual, the service and the cuisine are worthy of the tradition despite the apparent economies. The $2 cover goes into effect at 10 p.m. but does not apply to diners who might linger beyond that hour, but the 20% Federal tax is a must from the 8 p.m. dansapation teeoff. Abel.

El Rancho, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 1.

Milton Berle, Betty George, Stan Fisher, Metropolitan Sextet, George Tapps Dancers (5), Dick Rice Orch (13); produced by Tom Douglas; presented by Beldon Katleman; $3 minimum.

The versatile Milton Berle zooms back into the Opera House here, and again demonstrates his solid value as a nitery attraction.

Regulars Betty George, Stan Fisher, and the Metropolitan Sextet have returned with him, with George Tapps and his dancers replacing the Dunhills. Each of the acts is strong, and Berle's invasion into them brings booming yocks.

Bosomy Miss George belts "Let There Be Love" in a sock display of pipery, and is perfect bait for Berle's lecherous antics. Fisher shows his harmonica artistry to top effect, and is joined by colleague mouth organist Berle in a very funny version of "Night and Day." The Metropolitan Sextet, three male and three femme opera singers, click with some longhair chirping and are joined by a baggy-pants clown—Berle—for some bawdy hilarity.

George Tapps, with two girl and two boy terpers, presents a miniature production which is a fast, showy splash of precision dancing. Solos, Tapps does a highly impressive footwork recital sans music. Group is joined by hoofer Berle for a wild bowoff. Dick Rice's orch (13), with Sammy Liner at the 88, backs the package, skedded for four frames. Duke.

Downstairs at Upstairs, N. Y.

Susan Johnson, who started 10 years ago at Le Ruban Bleu, forerunner of Julius Monk's Upstairs & Downstairs boites, has auspiciously returned to the nitery fold at Downstairs at the Upstairs after making a strong impact in Broadway musicals, most notably in "Most Happy Fella."

Three times nightly Miss Johnson gives evidence of being a topnotch singer and performer. She has a rare quality that is unusual for the after-dark emporiums. She's a belter with a fine voice. Moreover, her talent is all-encompassing. She's equally at home with comedy, ballads and dramatic material. In the warbling department, Miss Johnson displays a tremendous vocal range and a technique which would lead one to belive that she's had extensive classical training. Her thespian ability provides her an opportunity to give the lyrics special meanings.

For the most part, Miss Johnson's repertoire consists of obscure showtunes. Her selection of ballads and dramatic numbers is excellent, but some of the lesser known special material type entries are not sharp enough to go with Miss Johnson's personality. With her comedic leanings, it sometimes seems a waste, but she is able generally to make more of them than they deserve.

Miss Johnson's musical accompaniment consists of two pianos, masterfully played by Carl Norman and William Roy, who occasionally provide vocalistic backing, too. The combo of Miss Johnson, Norman and Roy should ring up beaucoup minimums at the Downstairs for the next few weeks. Holl.

hungry i, Frisco

San Francisco, June 30.

Lenny Bruce, Ada Moore, Marilyn Child, Ron Crotty, Claire Willey; $2.50 admission.

Lenny Bruce, who makes a science of iconoclasm, is simply gassing 'em at this spawning ground of basement-bistro comics. A jampacked house (and there were plenty of turnaways) greets his irreverent shafts of wit with laughter, convulsions and an occasional gasp (Bruce would say these come from the "sickos" in the crowd). Indeed, his opening ranks with the return of Mort Sahl to these dingy, dimly-lit underground precincts.

Bruce's opening line sets the stage for his long (50 minutes) and unceasingly funny standup act. He comes on, looks around a moment or two and remarks, quietly: "So this is where Jonathan (Winters) flipped."

The rest is just as "sicko"—with sallies about tv, Jews, Negroes, Hawaiian and Alaskan statehood, much about mental health, on and on. All in a sort of verbal jazz shorthand. Nothing is sacred to Bruce, who must be viewed as a sort of truth-seeker.

His long set piece (in which he plays several roles) focuses on show business; specifically, about the standup comic who yearns for a "class room," finally gets a date at the London Palladium and falls flat on his face. This is surely one of the funniest "in-group" bits ever done—and the hungry i's fairly "out-group" crowd laps it up.

Bruce's material and format, of course, limit him pretty much to the broadminded basement bistros. But in this setting he is without a peer, and should represent huge business for the hungry i.

Ada Moore, a bluesy singer, and Marilyn Child, a folksinger, provide the show's other 50 minutes, accompanied by pianist Claire Willey and bassist Ron Crotty. Show runs through July 22. Stef.

Gatineau, Ottawa

Ottawa, July 3.

Bruce Stevens, Chantones (4), Barry Dale, Lee Henderson Dancers (6), Russ Thomas Orch (8); $1 admission.

Rotund comic Bruce Stevens, who sprinkles guffaw-makers through a round of musical gimmicks, is back at the Gatineau Club where he has become a fave through 16 years of regular appearances. In from Florida, his home base, Stevens has added some material and strengthened his routine to construct a clicko stanza. Spiked with gags, the act showcases his ability on trombone, trumpet, sax and 88, making fine use of the Russ Thomas house band throughout.

With him are the Chantones, one of the better male chant foursomes, new to this room but known via disks. Format is similar to most such groups but the piping has good quality and gets strong reception.

Barry Dale works chant and emcee chores and sings with the Lee Henderson Dancers who are back after a week's hiatus with three standout terp appearances, one modern, another Hawaiian using leader Mary Rose in a cute terp solo, the third an Oriental item where each girl performs a magic trick. Costuming is slick. Besides showbacking, Russ Thomas band plays for dancing. Pat Morgan and Gloria Weston appear in the lounge with chirp and music. Gorm.

Moulin Rouge, H'wood

Los Angeles, July 3.

Spike Jones Revue, Helen Grayco, Dick Stabile Orch (16); $5.50 package.

Spike Jones, attired in his customary striped suit and strawhat, picked up wife Helen Grayco and with a crew of five, barnstormed into Frank Sennes' Moulin Rouge Tuesday (30).

Jones, making his second hoedown in this big room in two years, is a welcome mat. His unsophisticated approach to music, with the assistance of little man Billy Barty, George Rock, Gil Bernal, Len Carrie and Bobby Lewis, is nonsensical but entertaining. Jones' revue has all the ingredients of Olsen & Johnson's "Hellzapoppin'" plus the added vocal talent of the vivacious Miss Grayco.

The lovely blonde singer opens the "Spiketacular of 1959" with "All of Me" and it comes over well enough for her to follow with "Come Rain or Come Shine," "Guess Who I Saw Today," "One For the Road" and "Bewitched, Bothered and Bewildered."

Jones' aggregation, tabbed as the "band that plays for fun," hammers across musical sounds from 8000 B.C. to the present and makes one wonder whether there's a difference. They cop the crowd's attention throughout a zany session of shooting off guns, firecrackers, ringing bells, horns, etc. Barty stands out as a major contributor in capturing the laughs and at times seems to tower over the big boys in performance. His comical antics and ability to sing, dance, mimic and play the drums are a show in itself.

A pun-ful takeoff on a rock 'n' roll singer enacted by Bernal, and with the aid of Rock and Barty, scores as fun for all. Bernal also lives up to his monicker of "sex-on-a-sax" by soloing on the pipe-shaped horn with a jam that leads him on and off stage. Another spot in the show is the presence of a long-legged cutie sitting on a rocker knitting away, and in spite of the World War onstage, never bats an eye.

A production closer presented in the dark with only the luminous lights of the performers costumes being visible, and aided by the addition of the Donn Arden Dancers, is impressive. Dick Stabile's house band, under the baton of brother Joe, backs up the show and lends the proper musical note where needed. Show is in for four weeks. Kafa.

Chateau Madrid, N. Y.

Pepita & Goyo Reyes, Montes De Oca, Domingos Alvarez, Ralph Font Panchito Orchs; $5-$6 minimum.

Angel Lopez is maintaining his high standard of Latin-American nitery entertainment with this new lineup to tee off the month of July. It does not have the better known names which have studied recent shows here. But for sheer enjoyment of those who appreciate Spanish terping and warbling, this measures up. And, of course, his Espanol cuisine continues at a high level.

Pepita & Goyo Reyes, who have been here before, currently have such an improved act that the duo is hardly recognizable. Aside from their superb flamenco stepping, this turn is enhanced by the vivid Spanish singing of Domingos Alvarez, who comes on first as a single. Later he joins the Reyes team by singing and clapping for their dramatic finale.

The Reyes combo, known for having been featured with Carmen Amaya's concert troupe for seven years, follows much the same pattern as on previous appearances but their terping is more letter-perfect. And the boy-girl team has developed the stronger numbers, and discarded lesser ones. Their dancing, too, goes over so well because of the superb backing by Ralph Font's compact combo, which plays the whole show.

Montes De Oca, billed as the heartthrob of Cuba, looks like a real comer. Choosing nice tunes and ones which he can put over easily, this personable, handsome young man has his audience with him from the start. Going from a typically fast Spanish song used for an opener, Oca scores with his "My Love Is Like A Star," done in Spanish. "Jealousy" is another in his repertoire which goes over well. "Babalu" is done effectively but his real hit is his singing of "Gigi" in which he quietly emulates Louis Jourdan without actually imitating him. He was forced to bow off after several encores.

Candy, per usual, makes an excellent mistress of cermonies. The Font orch does a superb job in playing the whole show which calls for many variation of tempo. Panchito's Latin combo plays for additional patron dancing. Wear.

500 Club, A. C.

Atlantic City, July 4.

Vic Damone, Joey Bishop, Wallace Bros., Lindsay Sapphire Dancers (8), Jack Curtiss, Pete Miller Orch (10) with Joe Frasetto; $2 admission, $5 minimum.

Vic Damone and Joey Bishop share top billing as Paul (Skinny) D'Amato's big Vermilion Room (750) at the 500 Club begins another season, playing the opening dinner show to a capacity Saturday night Fourth of July crowd. Business for the week looms bullish because of an estimated 40,000 Shriners in for their week-long convention, plus the crowds for the first week of the season.

In a decided improvement over last season's opener, D'Amato offers a well balanced show with a line of eight lovelies who are a decided asset.

Vic Damone in the key spot, despite minor mike trouble (it bothered the singer more than the crowd) again proves mettle with old faves and the newer pines including "Gigi," "Street Where You Live," etc.

With baby spot the only lighting, has most effective numbers are "Non Dimenticar," which he sings accompanied only by his guitarist, Chuck Wayne; and "Arrivederci Roma," sung accompanied only by his pianist, Bob Smale, and Wayne. Both Smale and Wayne came in with Damone and do topnotch backing jobs.

Damone's pleasing personality and ability to put over pops and nostalgic offerings keep the customers with him through his 40-minutes before he finally begs off.

Bishop is not a new face at the 500 and comic's rapid-fire offerings draw top response. He works on the front tablers, busboys, waiters and the band with his own unique brand of humor which keeps them howling. Best is takeoff on Ted Lewis.

Wallace Bros., pair of neat dancers, do tap and softshoe and mix patter with vocals for good returns.

Back once more after a year's absence is a line, the Lindsay Sapphire Dancers, who give with two well danced and beautifully costumed production numbers with Jack Curtiss on the vocals. Curtiss also emcees show, which is backed by Pete Miller's orch with Joe Frasetto. Walk.

Eddys', K.C.

Kansas City, June 30.

Joanne Wheatley & Hal Kanner, Tommy Hanlon Jr., Tommy Reed Orch (5); $1-$1.50 cover.

Back after a considerable absence is songstress Joanne Wheatley and partner-hubby Hal Kanner to combine with comic Tommy Hanlon Jr. for a first-rate 60-minute show.

In his first round here, young Hanlon chatters in fine style through 25 minutes of varied approaches to comedy, including a string of standup lines, a situation or two and his own brand of relaxed kidding. His session flows at good pace, sets the house for balance of the show.

Miss Wheatley and Kanner have played Eddys' a couple of times and are always well received. This time the turn has many changes, but throughout is the fine warbling of Miss Wheatley, plus Kanner's piano work and vocal chiming in. She has an especially effective opener in "Is There a Lover in the House?" and a plenitude of others, among them "Lover Come Back To Me" and "My Baby Just Cares for Me." Two are effective vocalling together "Tell Her You Love Her" in "Hymne a l'Amour" and "Unchained Melody," house staying with them throughout. They're here through July 9, followed by Johnny "Scat" Davis & Orch. Quin.

Chase Club, St. Louis

St. Louis, June 30.

Will Holt, Dolly Jonah & Co. (4), Billy Williams orch (7); $1-$1.50 cover.

Floorshow activities at the Chase Hotel, which move from the Chase Club upstairs to the Starlight Roof for the summer, got off to a dandy start with "All in Fun," an intimate revue written, produced and directed by Will Holt and Dolly Jonah. Latter also share the onstage limelight with a couple of blithe spirits named Patsy Fay and Joe Bird.

"All in Fun," a fast-paced, breezy takeoff on modern manners, morals and mores, is booked in for five weeks with options, and consensus of first-nighters is that it will settle down here for the summer with no trouble at all. The ingredients are surefire: inimitable folk balladry by Holt, husky blues chanting by Miss Jonah, an ebullient lass who somehow finds it easy to be the epitome of little girl blue one minute and a one-woman riot the next, and a fine and frisky grabbag of witty sketches and blackouts by one and all. Holt, who has an easygoing, simpatico way about him, makes the informal introductions for the engaging variety of footlight capers and manages to get everybody out front into a one-big-happy-family mood in no time.

At present they're doing three shows nightly with no repeats of material from one session to another, and will be working on new skits, songs, etc., right along to keep the doings fresh for the customers who keep coming back for more. And Holt and Miss Jonah can count on that as they have built up a sizable and devout following in St. Louis through previous appearances at the Park Plaza and Crystal Palace niteries. Bob.

Tropicana, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, June 30.

Jackie Miles, Ford & Hines, Arthur Lee Simpkins, Bob Fletcher, Beverly Szalza, Kathy Reed, Joy Blaine, Tropicana Dancers (16), Showgirls (8), Herman Kaye Orch (14); produced by Lou Walters; choreography by Kenny Davis; $3 minimum.

Jackie Miles toplines a triple-feature Lou Walters production in the theatre restaurant; his teammates being Ford & Hines and Arthur Lee Simpkins.

Miles again demonstrates that he's a pennant winner in standup comedy league. With his ingratiating low-pressure delivery, he pulled hefty yocks from first-nighters with all his material, especially the gambling gags, "J. Schwartz, New York" routine, and the classic Gene Autry spoof.

Phil Ford & Mimi Hines, in their Las Vegas debut, score with offbeat funning which is sock bistro fodder. Miss Hines has a wonderful comic buck-toothed kisser when she needs it, and her face can be very pretty when she wants it that way. She's one of the few good femme clowns in the biz; her songology and sight gags are effectively integrated, making her a neat balance for Ford's updated "songs, dances and witty sayings" approach to comedy. Team gets especially warm mitting for number called "What A Thrill We Got From Vaudeville."

Arthur Lee Simpkins, long a Vegas fave, returns to the Strip after a couple of years, and registers fully with a well balanced repertoire of songs include "I Believe," "Granada," "Autumn Leaves," "Marie," "Love Is A Many Splendored Thing" and "Enjoy Yourself," latter with audience participation.

Bob Fletcher, a handsome, virile singer, is outstanding as a strong front to the Kenny Davis production numbers, as is the femme chirper, a looker named Beverly Szalza. Kathy Reed, a pretty ingenue "femcee" bridges the elaborately-gowned pageantry of the 12 girl dancers, eight showgirls, and four boy dancers. One of the showgirls is Joy Blaine, who was recently named "Miss Nevada" for the upcoming "Miss Universe" tilt. Herman Kaye's orch (14) guides the festivities, set for a four-week run. Duke.

Chez Boyer, Paris

Paris, June 26.

Lucienne Boyer, Jacques Pills, O'Dett, Jacqueline Boyer; $3 minimum.

Nostalgic show bizzers and members of the general public will be finding their way to Lucienne Boyer's new boite in an out-of-the-way spot between Butte Montmartre and Pigalle. She has turned an old cafe also a smartly decorated nitery and also serves meals before going nitery at about 11:30.

Miss Boyer wisely sticks to her old repertoire. Times and attitudes may have changed, but her obvious sincere ditties of a simpler, all-inclusive and usually unfulfilled love come across fine and clear in her well modulated voice, dramatic stance and control. Her type of savvy songalog never ages.

Jacques Pills, Miss Boyer's ex-husband, follows with a jovial potpourri of old and new songs given edge and spirit by his projection and smart showmanship. The daughter of Pills and Miss Boyer, Jacqueline Boyer, at 18, shows that pro aplomb can be inherited. She gives out some French and American standards with a good beat and feel for musicianship. Voice is still unclear, but sweet and neatly calibred, and she looks to turn into a regular with good chances for musical shows on her zest, delivery and pert looks. Mosk.

Statler-Hilton, L. A.

Los Angeles, July 3.

Rose Marie, Birk Twins, Skinnay Ennis Orch (8); $2-$2.50 cover.

This fifth time around for Rose Marie, sans inhibitions and knowing her public, should create attraction for the downtown Terrace Room, where diners get their money's worth with her particular style. She's not for kids with some of her more gusty delivery, but what night club for the cherished darlings? Show stands up well with a pair of clever acrobats on for an opener.

Rose Marie, with her throaty tones, admits she doesn't like straight song numbers and bears this out by clowning the start of a couple of standards and relying thereafter on special material. Her confessed love of a drunk story is expanded into a repertoire, and her Uncle Charley—whom she never saw take a single drink, only doubles—provides a routine which takes with the crowd. Johnny Mercer did a show biz song for her which she whips over, and after a valiant struggle to sit on the piano she hugs the mike for an informal set-to with the audience. She's a entertainer who can deliver, and does. Buddy Freed, at the keyboard, gives her good backing.

The Birk Twins lend class with their agility and offer some rather spectacular stunting on the confined area in which they work. It's one of the better acts of this class. Back for the umpteenth time, Skinnay Ennis and his orch lend melodic flavor both to the entertainers and terping customers. Current bill is in for two weeks. Whit.

Riviera, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, June 30.

Red Skelton, Peggy Taylor, Double-Daters (4), Dorben Dancers (12), Ray Sinatra Orch (13); produced by Sammy Lewis; choreography by Dorothy Dorben; $3 minimum.

The clowning artistry of Red Skelton is magnified in his current Clover Room romp. The comic, who always pulls SRO audiences here, is repeating, because most of his six-week stint is sold out far in advance.

Skelton's opening monolog is generous with new gags, and he repeats many of his trademarked skits to maximum yocks. An effective pace-changer is his rendition of several folk songs to the accompaniment of two femme harpists, and as usual, his "Old Man Watching A Parade" is a solid bowoff.

Songstress Peggy Taylor, a brunet looker, makes her Vegas debut on the bill, registers handily with fine pipes and a pleasing personality. She clicks with such numbers as "You and the Night and the Music," "So Many Beautiful Men," "Jada—Cha Cha Cha," "Without You," and a medley of spirituals.

Curtain raiser is a nifty Dorothy Dorben production, "76 Trombones," featuring the Double-Daters and the Dorben Dancers (12). Ray Sinatra orch (13) smoothly backs the Sammy Lewis production. Duke.

Queen Elizabeth, Mont'l

Montreal, July 1.

Vivienne Allen & Bert Sheldon, Louis Bannet Orch (8); $2.50-$3 cover.

Several years ago, Vivienne Allen & Bert Sheldon played a local saloon as separate entertainers in a small nitery offering; for a finale, couple teamed up in a song-and-patter routine. Result was an immediate click and formed the basis for present act which is about as pleasant and smooth as any to play Montreal for some time.

Duo are made for each other both physically and vocally and the okay comedics of femme is a neat contrast to Sheldon's affable manner of solid piping. Material is rarely in the obvious bracket and the cornball items such as old musicomedy reprises are kept to minimum.

Their satire on a barroom girl of the Old West garners heaviest mitting and is made even more effective by a brace of revealing gowns which display Miss Allen's handsomely endowed figure to advantage. The 35-minute session has plenty of variety, excellent pacing and above all, good taste whether team is in a moonlight-and-roses mood or belting out something of a special material nature. They even make the audience participation sequences look good.

Backing the single act is the newly-formed band led by Louis Bannet. Bannet replaces Denny Vaughan who is taking the summer off and will return in September.

Allen & Sheldon are in until July 18, to be followed by dancers Alan & Blanche Lund who preem on the 20th. Newt.

Beverly Hills, Ciney

Cincinnati, July 3.

Joe E. Lewis (with Austin Mack), Cathy Carr, Moro-Landis Dancers (8), Bill Raymond, Gardner Benedict Orch (10), Jimmy Wilber Trio, Larry Vincent; $3 minimum weeknights; $4 Sat. and holiday eves, plus $1.50 cover.

Encoring after seven months, Joe E. Lewis is added gate insurance for this class Kentucky cafe's holiday stanza, which takes in the final fortnight of the River Downs racing meet. Heavy preem turnout included some of the comic's fans from Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit and other points within close flying range. Newcomer Cathy Carr, pert chirp, and the location's Moro-Landis dancing delovelies and Gardner Benedict music crew support him in a gay 70-minute session.

A Houdini of double-entendre, Lewis rings the bell with parodies, one-liners, asides and his frequent Scotch and water refills from ringside. Laughs and a greater measure of yocks are pegged on his personal social habits and likes. His standbys include Eli Basse song treatment nifties, "Suzie Wong," "Do They Have Race Tracks on the Moon?" and "76 Hormones." Begged off after 32 minutes. Austin Mack is his vet piano conductor.

Miss Carr, blonde beaut, sells a 22-minute song cycle with top results on her "Ivory Tower" recording for Roulette. Scores with a strut of "Bill Bailey," using cane and high hat and emphasizing her hourglass figure.

Moro-Landis Dancers, with Bill Raymond, singing emcee, sandwich the acts with delightful treatment of minstrel and musical routines to backing by the Benedict crew. Jimmy Wilber Trio fills in for intermission dancing and Larry Vincent reigns at the 88 in the cocktail room. Session opening July 17 has the Vagabonds as toppers. Koll.

Colony Club, Omaha

Omaha, July 4.

Jon & Sandra Steele; $1 cover.

Jon & Sandra Steele have always had a large following in this city and that helps account for the terrific biz they're racking up at this downtown nitery. And the handsome pair, possessing plenty of talent, have staged their act so well this time that they should add to that following.

Working on an elevated platform that kayoes dancing for this show, pair come on to "We're Going to Live" and segue into standards such as "Autumn Leaves." The pert redhead injects several lines that are more cute than blue, which is just right for this spot. Partner gives her several rests with torrid 88ing of "Rhapsody in Blue" and boogie and then she comes back for "Man I Love," a Rodgers & Hammerstein medley and some requests. Stirring "Saints Come Marching In" closes an entertaining 40 minutes. Trump.

Blue Note, Paris

Paris, July 7.

Jeremy Lubbock, Jimmy Guiffre Trio, Yolande; $3 minimum.

This all-night Right Bank club specializes in jazz outfits, and especially Yank and Anglo combos. It features dancing and listening and gets the jazz buffs and the young U.S. and French set.

Jeremy Lubbock is an Anglo singer-pianist who displays a sure feel for musicianship and puts over his Yank standards with style and knowhow. Lubbock feels the song content and delivers well, but has still not tried for a more individual approach. He is thinking of becoming a standup singer and displays the makings for one of good calibre. Right now he emerges a fine possibility for intime U.S. rooms on his diversity and range.

Jimmy Guiffre Trio displays cool, languid jazz somewhat lost in this club where the beat is more in demand. Clarinet, guitar and bass weave around themes but are not quite original or taking enough to overcome the nitery and terp atmosphere.

Yolande is from Ceylon and wears a sari but is strictly Western in husky-voiced interps of blues and standards. Still derivative, she too needs a more individual approach to become a more personalized entry. She has looks and a good singing base. More work and a better songalog would help. Mosk.

The Roundtable, N. Y.

Jack Teagarden Sextet, Marion McPartland Trio; $3.50 minimum.

This smart eastside spot has struck gold in the dixieland vein. Following up the recent stand of Red Nichols & His Five Pennies, another jazz veteran, Jack Teagarden, is now on the stand with a similar brand of happy music. Teagarden, now bailiwicking on the Coast, is making his first New York stand in some years.

News of Louis Armstrong's illness in Italy gave Teagarden's opening here some extra significance. Big T was a key member of Armstrong's all-star combo several years ago and they produced some standout jazz concert disks during their long association. Currently, Teagarden is backed by a relatively young crew of musicians including Don Goldie, on trumpet; Henry Cuesta, on clarinet; Stan Puls, on bass; Don Ewell, on piano; and Ronnie Greb, drums.

It's a spirited combo and they run through the whole catalog of jazz classics, from "South Rampart Street Parade" to "St. James Infirmary Blues," in colorful style. Teagarden's trombone is still a superbly expressive instrument that gives this group an extra kick in a very familiar musical groove.

Teagarden, who is also an excellent blues singer in the Satchmo genre, is skipping the vocals for this date in order to avoid the 20% Federal cabaret bite. Patrons are informed of this via place cards which also urge them to write to their Congressmen to repeal this tax.

Alternating on the bandstand, Marion McPartland, backed by drums and bass, changes pace with smoothly sophisticated piano sounds for conversational background. Herm.

Casino Royal, D. C.

Washington, June 30.

Sam Cooke, Fritzi Burr, Terri & Rossi, Jack French Orch; $3 minimum.

Back in nitery entertaining after about an 18-month lapse, Sam Cooke has developed a performing polish to match the quality of his voice. His initial entry into supper clubs fizzled, but he's ready now, judging by his reception here.

His disclicks (and his "woe-o-o-o") bring heavy mitting, but the crowd also likes his interpretation of songs associated with others, such as "When I Fall in Love" and "Old Man River," the last done in a neat arrangment with a fast beat and strong voice.

Cooke has a pleasing and relaxed manner of presenting his songs, and he chooses the type of ballads everyone likes for most of the act, stepping up the rhythm now and then for variety. He's young and should be around the fancier cabarets for a long time.

Fritzi Burr, who separates her jokes with a song line, "Make 'Em Laugh," has both good and bad gags, but knows how to put them across. A couple of all-male large tables with men in town for a sewing machine meeting let off a steady barrage of cracks during her performance. But she was always up to the situation and was reminded of appropriate jokes to stimulate loud yocks.

The young dance team of Terri & Rossi worked their feet to various rhythms and invited members of the audience to dance with them. Jack French orch does a fine job. Carp.

365 Club, San Francisco

San Francisco, June 30.

Marc Antone & Jackie Curtiss, Marquis Family (Gene Detroy and 4 chimps), Moro-Landis Dancers (10) with Robert Bruce, Bill Clifford Orch (9); $1-$1.50 cover.

Marc Antone & Jackie Curtiss are hard-working young singing comics, apparently trying to cast themselves in the Martin & Lewis mold. They haven't quite found the mold, yet.

They come on with a couple of hoary sight gags, and Curtiss then does a series of takeoffs on singers, with pratfalls in between. Antone sings "That Lucky Old Sun" seriously and nicely and Curtiss returns with a drunken airline pilot bit, the funniest material of their half-hour onstage. Pair wind up kidding a couple of duets.

Trainer Gene Detroy's chimpanzees are surefire, whether riding unicycles, smoking cigarets, rollerskating, or riding a small motorcycle. Detroy also furnishes some fair patter.

Moro-Landis Dancers, with emcee Robert Bruce singing, do pair of pleasant numbers and Bill Clifford orch accompanies very well. Show runs through July 15. Stef.

Press Agents' Own 1st, 2d Night Lists

Non-Standard, Laissez Faire Policy May Trigger Shubert Disapproval

Broadway pressagents have decided to revert to non-standardized first and second night press lists this season. The decision could trigger a battle with the Shuberts, who last summer were responsible for the establishment of standard rosters by the pressagents and theatreowners.

The Shuberts last year gave the publicists a temporary headache by sending them new press lists, which eliminated a number of those regularly on the first and second nite rosters. The cuts made by the Shuberts were subsequently modified and lists were agreed upon at a meeting of the pressagents and theatreowners.

It was also stipulated at that time that the lists be amended each year. However, at a recent meeting of the N.Y. pressagents chapter of the Assn. of Theatrical Pressagents & Managers, it was decided that the makeup of the first and second nite press lists be determined by the individual p.a. and attraction.

JAZZ, KITT, BALLET MARK CLEVE'S POPS

Cleveland, July 7.

Guest-artists scheduled for pops concerts by Cleveland Summer Symphony Orchestra will range from Modern Jazz Quartet July 15 to Eartha Kitt July 30. Herb Shriner appears Aug. 8, the Ballet Espanol Aug. 30 and the Albeneri Trio Aug. 29.

Louis Lane is conducting the orchestra from Severance Hall in its 21st season starting July 8 in air-conditioned civic auditorium. Pianist Eunice Podis and violinist Ernest Kardos, concertmaster of ensemble, are being spotlighted in opener of Tchaikovsky-Rachmaninoff music, backed by 65 voice chorus.

The 15-evening series includes a Cole Porter festival July 11 by Beverly Bower, Barbara Ashley, Richard Miller, John Tyers and chorus; Dave Brubeck quartet Aug. 5; Cleveland pianist Dorothy Humel Aug. 27. Orchestra of 75 pieces is saluting Jerome Kern July 25, George Gershwin Aug. 15, Rodgers and Hammerstein Aug. 22.

Guest conductors will include Arthur Fiedler, Aug. 27, Maurice Leving leading the Eartha Kitt show and Gustave Haenschen conducting the Shriner concert.

2 Bennett-Cook Shows At Chicago's Drury Lane

Joan Bennett and Donald Cook are teaming up this summer for an 11-week strawhat hike in packages of "Anniversary Waltz" and "Once More With Feeling." The vehicles are being produced by Violla Rubber and Floyd Ackerman.

The supporting cast for "Waltz" has been cast by Chicago's Drury Lane Theatre, which will be the first house to play the comedy. The presentation begins a two-week stand at the theatre July 14 and then continues for another three weeks at the Northland Playhouse, Detroit; Bristol (Pa.) Playhouse and the Hunterdon Hills (N. J.) Playhouse.

Except for the costars, it's the first show to be completely packaged in Chicago since Luther Adler toured with the Studebaker Theatre edition of "View From the Bridge" early in 1957. Chi actors in the package are Sidney Breese, Dorothy Konrad, Mickey Vinson and Bonnie Jo Glatt. Jim Monos is directing the play and Paul Stickles will be advance director.

Following the "Waltz" trek, Miss Bennett and Cook will switch to "Feeling," in which they'll costar for six weeks. The trek will include single stanzas at the Kennebunkport (Me.) Playhouse, the Tappan Zee Playhouse, Nyack, N. Y.; the Capri Theatre, Atlantic Beach, L. I., and three weeks at the Paper Mill Playhouse, Millburn, N. J.

George Marcy, appearing in "West Side Story" as the leader of Puerto Rican gang, was hurt recently during a rumble scene and is in N.Y. Medical Hospital. He'll be laid up for about two months.

Mark Twain Musical Up

Hollywood, July 7.

Harold Sherman's musical revolving around the life of Mark Twain as a Mississipppi river pilot, which was halted when Victor Young died is on its feet again. Ferde Grofe is completing the score and the pair hopes to have the show ready for Broadway this winter.

Musical is called "Swing Your Partner."

COPYRIGHT-DICTATED CHANGES IN 'SMILES'

London, July 7.

First-nighters at the Coliseum opening of "The Land Of Smiles" on Thursday (9) may be shocked to find that the lyric of late Richard Tauber's click song, "You Are My Heart's Delight," has been changed. Christopher Hassall, who has made the new adaptation of "Smiles," ran into copyright difficulties over the original Harry Graham song. So the "You are my heart's delight, and where you are I long to be" will now be "Love let me dream again, for when I dream I dream of thee." The operetta is now being set in 1911 and it's being given the fairy-tale treatment to cover certain anachronisms.

The show originally ran at Drury Lane in 1931 and has been revived twice in the West End. This version stars Charles Craig, June Bronhill and Peter Grant and is being presented by the Sadler's Wells Company.

Nutmeg Troupe to West

San Francisco, July 7.

Peter Davis, representing American Shakespearean Festival Theatre and Academy at Stratford, Conn., has set Shakespeare troupe for two-week run at the Curran, Frisco, in December, to be followed by two weeks at the Biltmore, Los Angeles.

Full 15-week tour will start in October and, in addition to the four Coast weeks, will include two weeks in Philadelphia, week in Baltimore, two in Detroit, two in Chicago, two in Washington, D.C., one in Dallas and one in Florida, split between Miami and Palm Beach.

Plays in repertory will be "Measure for Measure," "Midsummer Night's Dream," "Merchant of Venice" and "Romeo and Juliet."

Anti-Nazi Play

though, the play's the top success of the local theatre. Comment of local German newspapers is that maybe it's a good thing that former SS men and Nazi party members can laugh at their own stupidities, just as a couple of years ago these people in the audience at "Diary" wept as they remembered their mistreatment of the Jews.

Brecht wrote "Schweyk" in 1943 while in exile (his plays were banned by Hitler as being "immoral.") It's based on the well-known novel, "Good Soldier Schweik," by Jaroslaz Hasek, and concerns the German occupation of Czechoslovakia. Main character is the apparently simple Czech, Schweyk, who manages to arouse the Nazi leaders and poke fun at them. Like several other Brecht writings, this play criticizes war, big business and dictatorships.

Poking fun at the British, at the mass production and at the Nazi leaders, Schweyk goes on his happy way. Finally tossed into jail, he is released by the Gestapo chief who wants a dog stolen for him.

"Germans dearly love dogs," Schweyk adds solemnly, always bringing a roar from the audience.

Drama has caused city-wide discussion, but it still is a big grosser.

Play was brought to Frankfurt's city-financed theatre largely through the efforts of the chief of the Frankfurt theatres, Harry Buchwitz, who has long favored producing Brecht plays here.

Neff Denuded

The Sky." According to Miss Neff she saw the sequence in Hamburg while syncing her voice for the German version. Miss Neff apparently blew her top.

The scene involves the star exiting from a shower with a bath towel around her and the towel drops to the ground. She claims she agreed to do it sans bikini on the understanding that she was in the picture only down to her shoulders. A few hours after the scene was shot, insists Miss Neff, she heard that a British newspaper had been offered nude pix of her. She demanded that the negatives should be burned, and they were.

The actress claims that, unknown to her, the producer switched to a wide-angle lens that photographed all of her. Both producer Sydney Box and his director wife, Muriel, deny Miss Neff's allegation. Said Box: "The lens was unchanged throughout. The production company supplied copies of the film for foreign distribution and Miss Neff is not shown in the nude in any of the copies I have seen."

Added Box tartly: "I am very surprised at Miss Neff's attitude in view of her lack of inhibition. She appeared in three previous films in the nude. But she is not seen in the nude in this one."

Many-Angled-and-Angeled Tour Of 'The Visit' With Lunt-Fontanne

The upcoming road tour of "The Visit" represents an unusual demonstration of cooperativeness by various elements of legit. It also involves a four-way profit-participation setup, which takes in the backers, the play's costars, the original Broadway producing firm and the sponsor of he touring presentation.

The road offering is the initial venture of the production unit created by the Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society and the Council of the Living Theatre to increase the supply of touring shows. Alfred Lunt and his wife, Lynn Fontanne, will costar in the roles they played on Broadway. They're in for a 20% cut of the profits, as is the producing unit, which will kick back any coin earned into a fund for future productions.

Two Coast theatre operators, Louis R. Lurie (Curran and Geary Theatres, San Francisco) and James Doolittle (Biltmore Theatre, Los Angeles), are responsible for putting up working capital of $30.000 in return for a 40% share in the production. Approximately $20.000 more for bonds has been guaranteed by Theatre Guild executive Lawrence Langner, who's waived sharing in any profits on the project.

The Producers Theatre, which presented the play in New York, is in for the remaining 20% slice of the profits. The touring production will be presented by the TG-ATS and the COLT producing unit under an agreement with the play's authors rather than a contract

Name Thesps as Bait For B.O. in the Barns; 50% of Preems Have 'Em

Strawhat tryouts this summer are relying heavily on stars and semi-name performers for b.o. insurance. That's evident in the casting of established actors in approximately half of the some 30 professional preems skedded for the semester.

The come-on casting, although consistent with the overall present-day pattern of summer theatre production, is also apparently designed to offset the general reluctance of the silo trade to gamble on plays unknown to them. It's been indicated in the past that when non-name productions are ininvolved, summer theatre patrons are more likely to shy away from a preem than a onetime Broadway click.

Those hitting the rustic trail in tryouts include Helen Hayes in James P. Davis' "A Adventure," David Wayne in William Gunn's "Marcus in the High Grass," Celeste Holm in "What a Day," a revue by Manya Starr and Max Wilk (sketches) and Paul Rosner and Claire Richardson (songs); Shelley Winters in Frank Corsaro's "Piece of Blue Sky," Joan Fontaine in Gerald Savory's "Hilary," Gloria Swanson and Buddy Rogers in Andrew Rosenthal's "Red Letter

Legit Tickets as Stamp Premiums Spreads to K.C.

Kansas City, July 7.

The addition of legit tickets as an exchange item for supermarket trading stamps has spread to this city. Stamps given to customers at the Safeway Stores and Milgram Food Stores in return for purchases made by them can now be redeemed for Monday night tickets to the Starlight Theatre's outdoor productions in Swope Park.

A premium plan, enabling shoppers to redeem trading stamps for Broadway legit shows, record albums, books and other forms of entertainment, was launched last April in approximately 300 Food Fair supermarkets along the Atlantic seaboard.

Canada's Theatre Hope

Ottawa, July 7.

Ottawa Board of Trade and 60 other organizations sent reps to a meeting at Chateau Laurier Hotel here recently to discuss forming a National Capital Centre for the Performing Arts.

Idea was sparked by Theatre Foundation of Ottawa, whose prexy, City Controller Sam Berger, is forming a representative committee to study situation and report in fall. Four sites for proposed theatre-concert hall are being considered.

Hartford's Next: Bahama Legiter

A 2.200-seat theatre is part of a resort development planned by Huntington Hartford for Hog Island, off Nassau City in the Bahamas. Practically the entire island has been purchased by the Broadway producer, Hollywood theatre owner, art patron, dramatist, model agency head and grocer.

The theatre, which will be designed by Palm Beach architect John Volk, will be divided into separate houses for dramatic, musical and sporting events. The island project, which is being built around Paradise Beach, will also include a private beach club, hotel, tennis courts, golf course, yacht dockage and seaside cabanas.

It was revealed last year that Hartford owned A&P stock valued at an estimated $95,000,000. He's the grandson of George Huntington Hartford, the late founder of the chain store. Hartford is married to legit actress Marjorie Steele.

VICTORIA WOODHULL AS MUSICAL HEROINE

Hollywood, July 7.

A musical, based on the life of 19th Century character, Victoria Claflin Woodhull, the first female presidential candidate in the U.S., is planned for Broadway production by Robert Breen and Stanley Chase. The scripting contingent hasn't been set yet for the tuner, which will be titled "An Amazing Woman."

A straight play by Frederick Schlick, titled "The Incredible Woodhull" and dealing with same individual, was announced in 1957 as a prospect for Broadway production by Gant Gaither. Breen and Chase are also involved as director and producer, respectively, of the forthcoming production of "Free and Easy," skedded for Broadway during the 1960-61 season after a six-month tour of Europe.

Anne Rogers Takes Over 'Fair Lady' London Lead

London, July 7.

Anne Rogers will take over from Julie Andrews in "My Fair Lady" on Aug. 10. Miss Andrews' contract was skedded to end on Aug. 8 but she originally agreed to stay on for two months to enable Miss Rogers to convalesce after having her baby. But her recovery has been so quick that it is now possible to stick to the original date for the changeover.

However, it came as a surprise to Miss Rogers and she has had to cancel a vacation in Spain and also bow out of a Chicago cabaret stint.

Theatre party agent Ivy Larric and her artist-husband, James Kevlin, leave New York today (Wed.) for a four-week European trip to see plays in London and Stratford, Eng., and to tour Scotland and Ireland. They return Aug. 4.

LONDON CRITICS' 17-TO-1 VOTE

By HAROLD MYERS

London, July 7.

With only one dissenting vote, "West Side Story" emerges as "best new foreign musical" of the year in VARIETY's check of London's first string drama critics. It had a 17-to-one victory over "Irma La Douce." Jerome Robbins, who staged the Broadway tuner in London, was voted the "best director."

"Valmouth" was chosen the best British musical, with a score of eight; the runner-up being "Chrysanthemum," with three votes. Four other nominations got only one vote apiece.

"Five Finger Exercise" had a substantial lead as the best new British play, with twice as many votes as the runner-up, "The Long and the Short and the Tall." Peter Shaffer, who authored "Five Fingers," also got the nod as the most promising playwright, with a score of seven-and-a-third. Willis Hall, who wrote "The Long and the Short and the Tall," was again runner-up, with four votes. "Long Day's Journey Into Night" had a walk-away victory as the best new foreign play, with 13 votes, followed by "The Rose Tattoo" with three.

Patrick McGoohan just topped the poll for the best male lead in a straight play, with five votes for his performance in "Brand" with Zero Mostel just behind at four-and-a-half votes for his interpretation of Bloom in "Ulysses In Nighttown." Gwen Ffrangcon-Davies had a definite lead for the best performance by the femme lead in a straight play ("Long Day's Jour-

SCIENCE TEACHER AS SUMMERTIME PRODUCER

Atlanta, July 7.

Stagestruck from his earliest days, Joseph E. Kennedy, a science teacher at Joseph E. Brown High School, is one of Atlanta's most violent devotees of the legitimate theatre. As such, he is determined to do something about it.

So he turned play producer.

Marking his third summer season of star stock, Kennedy's new Arena Playhouse in downtown Atlanta, opened Friday (3) with "Fair Game," starring Veronica Lake, Philip Sterling and John Hallow. Stanley Phillips is the director. Opening play is scheduled to run for 10 performances, with 350-seat house scaled at $3, $2.50 and $2. It isn't exactly round theatre since seats in the erstwhile night club are arranged on three sides.

After Atlanta date "Fair Game" will take to the summertime road with the same cast, with Chicago scheduled as first stop.

After first production, nine more are scheduled, with "Fair Game" to be followed by "Personal Appearance," starring Corinne Calvet. This will be presented by a resident stock company under the leadership of Canadian Director Raphel Kelly. Stars will be imported for each show.

Kennedy, a native Atlantian, was graduated with a B.S. degree at Alabama Polytechnic Institute (Auburn). After some World War II Navy service he got his masters in dramatics at Columbia and there followed a couple of years at Pasadena Playhouse. He once wrote a play called "Headaches and Heartaches" and sold it to Samuel French, play publishers, for $300. Prior to this season Arena Playhouse productions were showcased in dining room of Atlanta Woman's Club.

Joe Reed's Bad Spill

Paris, June 30.

Joseph Verner Reed, former legit producer and currently assistant to the American Ambassador in France, is at the American Hospital here in serious condition. Fell of a horse.

Docs say he'll be okay, but it's a toughie.

Broadway and London 'Togetherness' Stronger Via Alex Cohen's Project

By JESSE GROSS

Differences between Broadway and London West End legit continue to diminish. An increased display of similar interests in the two major theatrical areas has been reflected in recent years, not only by the upbeat in the production of New York-originated plays in London and vice versa, but also in the number of successful transplantations.

The latest indication of this trans-Atlantic "togetherness" is the formation of The London Co. by Broadway producer Alexander H. Cohen. The firm has been organized to option West End properties and, conversely, to acquire the foreign rights to hit Broadway shows for presentation in London.

In another vein, but also reflecting the Broadway-West End tieup, was the formation recently in London of a new legit producing firm, FES (Plays) Ltd., which plans presenting shows in Britain for limited engagements and then transferring them to the U. S. with casts and sets intact. The production outfit was organized by British actor Michael Redgrave, American director Fred Sadoff, George Hume, former general manager of the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre, and B. M. Fournier.

The preeming of Broadway-targeted plays in London has also been getting increased play in recent seasons principally because production costs on the West End are considerably less than in New York. Regarding the London preems, several upcoming entries in that category are by American scripters. Among those is "The Dancing Heiress," a musical by Murray Grand and Jack Fletcher. It's skedded for production by

Small Town Minds Still

Stratford, Ont., July 7.

Despite all the business the Shakespeare Festival here has brought this little railroad town in its seven seasons, city authorities refused to allow the usual cast banquet after second show ("Othello") opening.

Banquet licenses lose effect at 11:30 p.m., and the authorities refused to extend the time—even, it's reported, threatening a police raid if it was held. So the party was dispersed among private homes.

'Raisin' Tops 200% Profit in 18 Weeks

"Raisin in the Sun" has passed the 200% profit mark. The Lorraine Hansberry play, currently in its 18th week at the Barrymore Theatre, N. Y., had netted $187,297 as of June 27. Profit in the week-and-a-half since then is figured to have raised that amount to over $200,000.

The Philip Rose-David J. Cogan production, which recouped its entire $100,000 investment by the end of its sixth week on Broadway, has been clearing around $11,500 weekly on capacity business. The profit divvy, following repayment of the original investment, thus far totals $152,000. Of that amount, $100,000 has gone to the backers and $52,000 to the management.

The producers, who share equally in the profits with the investors, get another $48,000 when that amount, representing the balance of the income due from Columbia Pictures on its purchase of the film rights to the play, is paid by the picture company. The film rights were sold for $300,000, with the production's 40% share totaling $108,000 after the deduction of 10% for commissions.

Of the $60,000 already paid to the productoin by Columbia, $54,000 is included in the profits distributed to the backers. The remaining $6,000 went to the management, whose share of the film coin will also be $54,000 when the $48,000 balance is paid.

Besides the film income and weekly operating profit, the net earnings thus far reflect $7,500 as an advance on the sale of the British rights to John Shubert, who's producting the play in London with Jack Hylton.

D.C.'S THRIVING ARENA IN DEMOLITION PATH

Washington, July 7.

Arena Stage, resident in-the-round theatre company here, has finished its most successful season, with a total attendance of 91,054 in 32 weeks with eight plays, topping the previous season's (which had been the record holder) 73,990 attendance.

Arena, under producing director Zelda Fichandler and general manager Cay Knockey, will have its 10th season in its present quarters (hospitality hall of an old brewery), but faces eviction next summer when work will start on a new Potomac River bridge in that location. Housing problem remains unsolved.

Each of eight plays produced this year showed a profit, with only one of them getting thumbs down from Washington critics. That was the combination of three one-act plays, William Saroyan's "Once Around the Block," "Tennessee Williams' "The Purification" and Arthur Miller's "A Memory of Two Mondays." It was the Williams play which particularly displeased the critics.

Spring sale of subscriptions for next season also set a new record, with 3,600 sold.

Gilbert Miller Plans Production in Paris Of 'Raisin in the Sun'

A Paris production of "A Raisin in the Sun" is planned by Broadway producer-theatre owner Gilbert Miller. French author Emmanuel Robles has adapted the Lorraine Hansberry play, which Miller intends presenting in Paris with a local producer as soon as a theatre can be booked.

A house may not be available for several months since the French capital is involved in a legit booking jamup similar to that on Broadway. The Parisian edition of "Raisin" will be directed by Raymond Rouleau, who staged Miller's Broadway production of "Gigi," which opened during the 1951-52 season. Robles, incidentally, is the original author of "Montserrat," which Lillian Hellman adapted for Broadway production during the 1949-50 season.

A British production of "Raisin" is also scheduled to open Aug. 5 in London, under the production auspices of John Shubert and Jack Hylton, by arrangement with the Broadway producers, Philip Rose and David J. Cogan. "Raisin," the N. Y. Drama Critics award-winner as the best American play of the 1958-59 season, is currently in its 17th week at the Barrymore Theatre, N. Y.

Ga. Amphitheatre Spruces Up for Six-Week Season

Atlanta's Theatre Under-the-Stars, which took a b.o. beating last summer, has made some physical improvements for its upcoming six-week season (July 14-Aug. 23) in the 7,000-seat Chastain Memorial Park Amphitheatre.

Numerous complaints in recent seasons about insufficient parking space have resulted in the parking area being expanded to accommodate 1,500 cars. A new sound system has also been installed in the amphitheatre. M. B. ("Bromo") Seltzer is president of the municipal non-profit operation.

CASTING NEWS

If, as reported, it cost maestro Guy Lombardo and moneybags Leonard Ruskin half-a-million to bring in "Song of Norway" last year, it looks every farthing of it. In fact, it looks like a million. The Jones Beach Marine Theatre (8,200) with those NatureScope waterways and CinemaScope stages is ideal for the Beach's second-season reprise of the operetta inspired by the life and music of Edward Grieg. It's big and it's beautiful, certainly too super-super and razzly-dazzly for the 21-inch screens; and as a spectacle it is a hearty and happy combination of the best elements of musicomedy, circus, hippodrome, aquacade, ballet, ice show, opera comique and you-name-it-this-show-has-it.

Although the property dates back 15 years, to Edwin Lester's theatre production, in this vast marine setting "Song of Norway" is brought to its fullest potential. There have been better books, but it's hard to beat the Grieg music with the "pop" lyrics; and ditto the mountainous settings, the eye-arresting costumes and the other trappings that are strictly class. Every one of the craftsmen (see credits) comes out heroic-sized, as does the cast. Credit also Zachs Bay for a massive fillip.

"Song of Norway" is a stylish-stout click under superlative staging by Richard Barstow, one of the true DeMilles of the living theatre; the lyricking and musical adaptation by Robert Wright and George Forrest; the dances and musical sequences by Frank Westbrook; scenery and lighting by George Jenkins, and costumes by J. Michael Travis; and Frederick Dvonch leads the orchestra letter-perfectly.

Even on a fog-shrouded premiere night the show went off without a hitch. There was a token crowd, to be sure, stemming from the rainy afternoon and the threat of elements at nightfall, but it was an enthusiastic audience that tipped off the hosannas to come when good weather and packed houses prevail. At $4.80 top, this superdooper is in the large economy size.

There are a few cast changes over last year, but holding over in the principal roles are Brenda Lewis, Helena Scott, Muriel O'Malley and Joseph Kallini. Miss Lewis is her old belting self in the upper reaches and an extra-competent comedienne in the rich Countess Giovanni part.

Miss Scott is an attractive actress with a splendid soprano and an engaging manner. Her vis-a-vis, Grieg, is new this trip in John Reardon, who sings better than he emotes, although truth to tell, the role is corny and somewhat false, in the antique operetta tradition.

Sig Arno, who's been in most versions of the piece, including the longrunning legiter on Broadway and on the Coast, is back after a season's gap giving dash and sophistication to the role of Count Peppi, the "get lost" hubby of diva Giovanni.

William Olvis is superb as the poet Nordraak, Grieg's bosom pal, and there are other fine performances by Miss O'Malley, Kallini, Truman Gaige, David Kurlan and William Linton.

The singers and dancers in the huge cast reflect painstaking rehearsal; the flotillas, including reproduction of a Viking ship, come majestically into view to punctuate and entrance the action, and the finale innings include a smash ice skating number, done before a miniature but towering iceberg, by the team of Ruth Harrison & Estanislao Rossi, enacting the Spirit of Norway and the Spirit of Grieg. All this, fireworks and Jones Beach too. Trau.

Queen Congrats

She wore a $300,000 tiara; drop earrings, necklace and bracelets in diamonds. Her shoes and handbag were of silver. Prince Phillip was in black tie but the gentlemen sitting in the sourrounding red-cushioned chairs were resplendent in regimental dress uniforms, the kilt and many decorations; their womenfolk were dressed to the nines in mink, formal gowns and jewelry.

During the first act of "As You Like It," with a single 15-minute intermission, the audience paid more attention to the reactions of the Queen, with Phillip highly enjoying himself and a tired Queen Elizabeth drowsy but perking up after the intermission preceding the second act. At the finish of the play, with Elizabeth and the Prince walking across the theatre-in-the-round to disappear backstage, the audience burst into vociferous handclapping.

After congratulating the players, the Royal pair made their way to their limousine, with the audience still remaining seated, to further cheers from the crowds awaiting outside, plus a fireworks display across the Avon River, this disturbing the swans who hissed with all the venom of the critics later in print.

However, most of the audience had come to see the Queen rather than the Bard's pastoral comedy—and the bad reviews of the drama critics.

Road Shrinking to Four Shows; 'West Side' $35,500 in 5, Denver

Receipts slipped for most road shows last week, but business remained generally healthy. Only two of the eight touring entries registered meagre grosses. The close of "Bells Are Ringing" in San Francisco last Saturday (4) reduced the road list to seven shows this stanza.

The withdrawal of another three offerings at the end of this week will leave only four shows in the touring lineup. "Once More With Feeling" and "Romanoff and Juliet" close in Frisco Saturday (11) and "Sunrise at Campobello" lays off following the windup that day of a six-week Washington run. The entries remaining include "Music Man," which is berthed in Chicago, and "My Fair Lady," "Two for the Seesaw" and "West Side Story," all playing the Coast.

Estimates for Last Week

Parenthetic designations for out-of-town shows are the same as for Broadway, except that hyphenated T with show classification indicates tryout and RS indicates road show. Also, prices on touring shows include 10% Federal Tax and local tax, if any, but as on Broadway grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes. Engagements are for single week unless otherwise noted.

CHICAGO

Music Man, Shubert (MC-RS) (21st wk) ($5.50-$6.60; 2,100; $71,458). Almost $59,700. Previous week, $68,100.

DENVER

West Side Story, Municipal Aud., (MD-RS) ($6.60; 2,250). Began post-Broadway tour here last Wednesday (1); over $35,500 for first five performances of 10-performance stand.

LOS ANGELES

My Fair Lady, Philharmonic Aud., (MC-RS) (5th wk) ($5.75-$6.50; 2,670; $79,800) (Michael Evans, Diane Todd). Almost $79,600. Previous week, $79,400 with Civic Light Opera subscription.

Romanoff and Juliet, Hartford (C-RS) (4th wk) ($5.40-$6.50; 1,024; $36,500) (Peter Ustinov). Over $31,700. Previous week, house record at $36,527.

SAN FRANCISCO

Bells Are Ringing, Curran (MC-RS) (5th wk) ($5.75-$6.90; 1,758; $59,000) (Judy Holliday). Over $59,000 with Civic Light Opera subscription. Previous week, $58,800 with subscription. Closed last Saturday (4).

Once More With Feeling, Alcazar (C-RS) (4th wk) ($4-$4.50; 1,147; $33,000) (Fernando Lamas, Marjorie Lord). About $13,500. Previous week, $18,000. Closes next Saturday (11).

Two for the Seesaw, Geary (CD-RS) (6th wk) ($4.30-$4.85; 1,550; $39,000) (Ruth Roman, Jeffrey Lynn). Almost $13,400. Previous week, $16,800.

WASHINGTON

Sunrise at Campobello, National (D-RS) (5th wk) ($4.95-$5.60; 1,650; $46,200) (Ralph Bellamy). Almost $36,200. Previous week, $44,500. Lays off following the evening performance next Saturday (11) and resumes Sept. 10 at the Hartman Theatre, Columbus.

Stratford (Conn.) Fest Takes Modest $31,000

Stratford, Conn., July 7.

The American Shakespeare Festival, scaled to a $5.75 top, grossed a moderate $31,000 last week for four performances of "Merry Wives of Windsor," three performances of "Romeo and Juliet" and one performance of "Midsummer Night's Dream." The previous week's take at the 1,453-seater here was $41,000 for three performances of "Romeo," two performances of "Dream" and three preview performances of "Wives."

Seven performances of "Dream" have been added to the repertory schedule because all previously announced performances of the comedy have been sold out in advance. The production will substitute for dates previously assigned to the other repertory offerings during August and September.

Stockbridge (Mass.) Barn

Stockbridge, Mass., July 7.

"Time Remembered," starring Cathleen Nesbitt, opened the season at the Berkshire Playhouse here last week with a light $4,500 gross for nine performances. The 480-seater is scaled to a $3 top.

"Diary of Anne Frank" is current.

'DIARY' HOT $7,917

Opening Week Record For Saratoga Slio

Saratoga, N.Y., July 7.

"Diary of Anne Frank," grossing a sock $7,917, established an opening-week record for the 574-seat Spa Summer Theatre here last week. The barn is scaled to a $3.50 top weekday nights and a $4 top Friday and Saturday evenings.

The cast was headed by Jacob Ben-Ami. Incidentally, Ben Hammer, who appeared in the presentation, was inadvertently omitted from last week's VARIETY rundown of cast members who had appeared in the play on Broadway. "Nina," with Shirley Booth and Douglas Watson, is current.

'Wish' Gets Fair $35,100 In Second Dallas Week

Dallas, July 7.

Business for the State Fair Musicals season at the 4,126-seat Musical Hall here continued to build last week with "Wish You Were Here" hitting $35,100 in the second stanza of a fortnight's stand. The take, although still so-so for the local operation, was $1,200 higher than the previous frame's gross.

"Vagabond King," with Burgess Meredith, Richard Torigi, Lee Venora and Jean Sanders, is current.

Robert Lavin, an American, and FES.

U. S. Scripts Due In

A flock of American-authored properties is also scheduled for London production this season by Gene Paul. They include Andy Rosenthal's "Horses in Midstream," Joel Schenker's "In This House," Norman Mailer's dramatization of his novel, "Deer Park," and "Innocent as Hell," a musical by Rosenthal, which Paul will co-produce with Toby Rowland. "Deer Park" will be presented by Paul in partnership with Joy Thompson.

Anent the London Co., it will not produce plays but will develop properties and then turn them over to a producing organization. The company, however, will participate financially in the productions, which will include, initially, "At the Drop of a Hat," the two-man British revue opening next Oct. 8 at the Golden Theatre, N.Y.; Mark Van Doren's "The Last Days of Lincoln" and Robert Graves' musicalization of "Solomon and Sheba." The three properties are on Cohen's production agenda.

The London Co. will have headquarters in New York and offices in London, with Derek Glynne and Warren Tute handling the overseas operation. Cohen leaves for London next week for meetings in connection with the acquisition of new properties by the London Co. Incidentally, trans-Atlantic hopping by Broadway producers for a looksee at overseas legit product has become almost routine in this quickie ocean-crossing era.

The situation, in fact, is becoming increasingly competitive with producers racing against one another to get first call on a promising foreign property.

'Visit'

with the Broadway producing firm. The production unit's deal with the Producers Theatre is only for the original physical setup and services until the tour gets underway next Sept. 16 in Wilmington.

Re Producers Theatre

The Producers Theatre does not share in gross income but, in addition to the profit participation arrangement, also gets a fee for its services, plus office expenses. Incidentally, the billing on the touring edition of the Maurice Valency adaptation of Friedrich Duerrenmatt's play, will be the American Theatre Society, under the auspices of the Council of the Living Theatre, presents the Producers Theatre production of "The Visit."

The Dramatists Guild has also okayed an arrangement whereby the authors have agreed to certain royalty concessions in the event of overbearing operational costs. The heavy production will carry 30 performers, including the costars, and will use the same set, design and lighting as the Broadway presentation.

The tour will run 23½ weeks and cover 15 cities, with all, but a split-stand in Salt Lake City, on TG-ATS subscription. Warren Caro, executive director of ATS, is exec producer of the production unit, with Jerry Leider as managing producer. The road edition of the play will be directed by Lunt.

The Broadway production of "The Visit" closed last Nov. 29 after a 24-week run, which was interrupted by a summer layoff.

'King' Robust $8,575 In Single Wk., Corning, N. Y.

Corning, N. Y., July 7.

"The King and I," starring Irene Manning, grossed a nifty $8,575 last week at the Corning Summer Theatre. The take was the second highest in the spot's eight years of operation.

"Who Was That Lady I Saw You With?" is current.

B'way Blitzed, But Six Sellouts; 'Flower' House Record at $63,338, 'Redhead' $58,200, 'Destry' $58,100

Broadway held to form last week, with grosses dropping drastically for most shows. The cave-in reduced the lineup of capacity entries to six and receipts for the weaker offerings toppled to marginal or below-breakeven level. It's figured the slump, which is expected to continue through the hot-weather period, will force the closing of some of the shakier shows.

Last week's sellouts were "Flower Drum Song," which also established a house record for the St. James Theatre, "Gypsy," "La Plume de Ma Tante," "Majority of One," "My Fair Lady" and "Raisin in the Sun." There are only 13 Main Stem entries on tap this week. "Redhead" is laying off for the frame and "La Plume" began a four-week vacation following the evening performance last Saturday (4).

Estimates for Last Week

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), MC (Musical-Comedy), MD (Musical-Drama), O (Opera), OP (Operetta).

Other parenthetic designations refer, respectively, to weeks played, number of performances through last Saturday, top prices (where two prices are given, the higher is for Friday-Saturday nights and the lower for weeknights), number of seats, capacity gross and stars. Price includes 10% Federal and 5% City tax, but grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes.

Redhead, 46th St. (MD) (22d wk; 172 p) ($9.20; 1,297; $62,410) (Gwen Verdon). Over $58,200. Previous week, $63,100. Laid off following the evening performance last Saturday and resumes next Monday (13).

'TWENTIETH CENTURY' 8G

Sluggish Opener For Indpls. Tent Theatre

Indianapolis, July 7.

The Avondale Playhouse here got off to a slow start last week, with the season's opener, "Twentieth Century," grossing about $8,000. Ann Corio and Allen Jenkins costarred in the play at the 1,000-seat canvastop, which charges $2.75 for all tickets.

K. T. Stevens and Hugh Marlowe are current in "Once More With Feeling." The Avondale season runs 10 weeks.

'VIEW' SHARP $20,500 IN PHILLY PARK FRAME

Philadelphia, July 7.

The Playhouse in the Park here, continuing at a healthy pace, grossed a big $20,500 last week with Luther Adler in "View From the Bridge." The previous week's take for "Fallen Angels," costarring Nancy Walker and Margaret Phillips, was $17,300.

"Howie," with Leon Ames, is current.

'Blondes' Thin 35G, K.C.; Rained Out One Night

Kansas City, July 7.

The weather was against "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," which grossed a slim $35,000 last week at the 7,600-seat Starlight Theatre here. One performance was rained out and the weather other nights was threatening. The outdoor musical presentation, with Iva Withers heading the cast, ran through last Sunday (5). The previous week's take for "Firefly," with Anna Maria Alberghetti and Webb Tilton, was $50,000.

"Tom Sawyer," with Virginia Gibson and Randy Sparks repeating the roles they originated in the musical's preem here last summer, is current.

Toledo Indoorer Starts

Toledo, July 7.

Toledo Summer Theatre Assn. begins its six-week season next Monday (6) in the airconditioned Stratford Theatre in Walbridge Park. John Aronson is managing director of the operation, which is employing a company of 11 Equity members.

Production staff also includes Don Jensen, scenic designer; George Vogel, stage manager; Marshall Kievit, technical director and Ann Gee, in charge of costumes.

Two of the plays, "Pygmalion" and "The Importance of Being Ernest," will be directed by Roy Irving.

Irene Mayer Selznick, has withdrawn as co-sponsor of the forthcoming Broadway production of "L'Hurluberlu," which will be presented independently by Kermit Bloomgarden.

Saint Subber has optioned Peter Sourian's "Beyond Paris."

The Phoenix Theatre, N.Y., has enrolled more than the 9,000 subscribers required to get two subsidies of $75,000 over a three-year period from the Avalon and Old Dominion Foundations. The operation plans to get its 1959-60 season underway Oct. 5 with Eugene O'Neill's "The Great God Brown."

An off-Broadway production of 'Johnnie Nobody," by Bill Barrett, is planned for next fall by Scotti D'Arcy.

Robert Mayberry has taken an eight-week leave of absence from the Stage and Arena Guild of America to become resident director of the Myrtle Beach (S.C.) Playhouse. SAGA, incidentally, is sending out strawhat packages of "Personal Appearance," starring Corinne Calvet and "Once More With Feeling," starring Betty Furness.

Mr. (John P.) John, women's fashion designer, will make his debut as a legit actor in "There's Always a Murder" next week at the Cedar Grove (N.J.) Playhouse.

Gene Gross is appearing as Otto Frank in "Diary of Anne Frank" this week at the Sharon (Conn.) Playhouse.

"Bells Are Ringing," with Pamela Britton, launched the season at the Aqua Theatre, Seattle, last night (Tues.). The musical is in for a five-day run. "Most Happy Fella," with Martha Wright and Gene Hollman, is booked for July 21-25 and Al Sheehan's "Aqua Follies" moves in July 30 for a 14-day run.

Leslie Vega, daughter of Jose Vega, production staffer for Talent Associates, is an apprentice at the John Drew Theatre, East Hampton, L.I.

Gloria Vanderbilt will tour the stock circuit for three weeks in a revival of Michael Arlen's "The Green Hat," which will be sent out by Gus Schirmer Jr., as a test run for a possible off-Broadway presentation next fall.

James Biondo is a resident company member with the Barnstormers, Tamworth, N.H.

ney") with 11 votes, with Gerry Jedd ("Two For the Seesaw") in second place with two votes. Keith Michell ("Irma La Douce") got the nod for the best male performin a musical and Chita Rivera ("West Side Story") and Elizabeth Seal ("Irma La Douce") deadheated for the best femme performance in a musical. 13 actors were nominated for the best male supporting performance and Ian Bannen ("Long Day's Journey") just made it with three votes. Joan Greenwood ("Grass Is Greener") had a more substantial lead for the best female supporting role with a score of five. Peter O'Toole ("Long and the Short and the Tall") was named most promising new actor and Frances Cuka ("Taste Of Honey") most promising actress.

The Observer was not invited to participate in the poll as during Kenneth Tynan's leave of absence as guest critic of the New Yorker the London Sunday sheet has not had a permanent drama reviewer. There have been changes at approximately two-monthly intervals. (Tynan was invited to comment in the New York check, but ducked —Ed.)

As is usually the case, there were several differences among the critics as to some of the categories covered in the poll.

THREE-BARN PARLAY FOR TOURING UNITS

Indianapolis, July 7.

An arrangement for the co-op booking of star-packages has been worked out between the Avondale Playhouse here, the Cherry County Playhouse, Traverse City, Mich., and the Cincinnati Summer Playhouse. The touring units are being lined up for the three-barn spread when possible.

Packages booked under the co-op arrangement include Mona Freeman in "Who Was That Lady I Saw You With?" Pat O'Brien in "Loud Red Patrick" and Joe E. Brown in "Father of the Bride."

Queenie, Julie Haydon Among Seattle Guesters

Seattle, July 7.

Queenie Smith is starring in "Mrs. Gibbon's Boys," now at the Cirque Playhouse here, only legitimate Equity house in the Pacific Northwest. Play runs through July 18.

Set to come in on the Cirque's visitings stars program for the summer are Julie Haydon, who will star in Anita Loos' "Happy Birthday" in August, to be followed by Edward Everett Horton in "Not In The Book."

Balance of parts in plays are handled by the Cirque Resident company, with Gene Keene, Cirque boss, also handling direction.

Other entries on this season's tryout slate, include Dot DeCamp's "Alter Ego," Pat Hale's "Voice of the Whirlwind," Robert Lane's "Divide by Two," Jack Kelly's "The Lady Has Ideas, Donald Fowle's "As Any Lady Should," Roland Wolpert's "Green Plateau," Robert and Chaunce Skilling's "Fable for Two," Harold Heagy's "Suffer Li'l Children," Lawrence Weiner's "In the Counting House," Muriel and William Bolton's "Oh Genevieve," Lionel Hale's "Gilt and Gingerbread." Sylvia Leigh's "Dark Halo" and J. I. Rodell's "Mr. Mother Goose."

A Possibility

A possibility for presentation at the Barter Theatre, Abingdon, Va., is Charles Best's "The Kids," earmarked for Broadway production by George Hamlin and John W. Caldwell. Of the other tryouts several have also been announced as prospects for Broadway and in, at least, one case off-Broadway.

A number of the tryouts are imports and in line with that several Agatha Christie plays, presented in London but not on Broadway, are among the strawhat production entries. They include "The Hollow," "Spider's Web," "Towaards Zero" and "The Mousetrap." A Broadway-targeted revival of "Cabin in the Sky' is planned by tent producer St. John Terrell, who's also putting together a canvastop edition of "The Ziegfeld Follies," using sketches and songs from other shows and possibily some new material.

Joanna Hill will appear in three plays at the Hampton (N.H.) Playhouse.

Tragic Cocoanut Grove fire in Boston will be subject of book, "Holocaust" (Holt) by Paul Benzaquin, Boston Globe reporter. Holt also has signed Oscar Fraley to do "Bill Stern Story" and bio of Jerome Kern by David Ewen. Arthur Mann is editing Bill Corum's "Off and Running" for Holt. A bio of Louis B. Mayer, called "Hollywood Rajah," is also on Holt's fall list.

Carlton Fredericks, WOR's nutrition expert, has "Cook Book for Good Nutrition" on Lippincott's list; Edward Weeks' account of his long association with Atlantic Monthly, "In Friendly Candor" (Little, Brown); H. O. Brunn's "Story of Dixieland Jazz Band" (Louisiana State Univ. Press); "Agee on Film," Volume 2 to last year's publication of film essays and criticism (McDowell, Obolensky); "Christmas With Ed Sullivan," recollections of columnist's experiences with Cole Porter, Marilyn Monroe, Helen Hayes, etc. (McGraw-Hill); Tyrone Guthrie's "A Life in the Theatre" (McGraw-Hill) and "The Higher You Climb," autobiography of former Mayor William O'Dwyer, with references to show biz names (Messner).

Oxford will issue Emmet Crozier's "American Reporters On Western Front, 1914-18" (tales of Heywood Broun, Floyd Gibbons, Richard Harding Davis, Harry Hansen and others who covered World War I"); Simon & Schuster are set with "Cole Porter Song Book" carrying a Moss Hart foreward. S&S also will distribute Kay Thompson's "Eloise in Moscow" and "The Joy of Music," Leonard Bernstein's book based on seven scripts from the "Omnibus" tv programs. Ives Washburn made a deal with Hal Holbrook to publish "Mark Twain Tonight!" selections from actor's one-man show of Twain's writings plus account of the research that went into creation of performance.

First Miss In 128 Years

For the first time in its 128 years of operation, the Harrisburg Patriot, only morning daily in the state capital, was forced to miss an issue over a dispute in manning, on Thursday, July 2.

Problem was the result of a dispute as to the number of pressmen on duty, which is currently under arbitration. There was no problem of wages or hours involved. The presses did not roll when it was found that the crew was one man short of what the union considered a full complement.

The Evening News, also a Newhouse newspaper, was printed on schedule, and the Patriot came out on schedule Friday (3).

'TV This Week' Folds

TV This Week, nine-year-old Northern California television weekly, announced it would fold this month and that TV Guide's Frisco edition would take over its subscription obligations after July 17.

TV This Week published in Frisco, had its principal strength in California's Central Valley. Over a year ago TV Guide started a Central California edition, focused in Fresno, and this hurt its much smaller competitor.

Management of TV This Week conceded TV Guide's competition, with both Frisco and Fresno editions, was main reason for the fold.

Quick followup to her first book Diana Manners' No. 2 Autobiog of memoirs, "The Light of Common Day," by Lady Diana Cooper, is due via Houghton Mifflin this fall.

Former actress Diana Manners (later Diana Cooper) called the first volume of her autobiography, "The Rainbow Comes and Goes."

Inside Stuff—Legit

Collection of legit theatre programs of the 1892-1911 period is being exhibited by Alan J. Levitt at Actors Workshop in Boston. One is of James O'Neill, father of the playwright Eugene O'Neill, at the Worcester Theatre, Sept. 16, 1892, in "Fontenelle," written by Harrison Grey Fiske and Minnie Maddern Fiske.

Collection contains Maurice Barrymore, Ethel Barrymore in "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines," and photos of her mother and Ethel, John and Lionel as children.

A program note on Ethel Barrymore reads: "Ethel Barrymore, the only daughter of Maurice Barrymore, the granddaughter of the late Louisa Drew, and niece of the popular John Drew, had already enjoyed the honor of the greatest social success any American actress ever had in London. Last year, when she made her London debut at the Adelphi in 'Secret Service,' in the little part of Miss Kittredge, which Mr. Gillette wrote up a little for her, she was entertained in some of the smartest houses, and was invited to Marlborough House. Indeed, it is generally understood that the young actress might have been a duchess if she had wished."

Not every actor sounds off on being severely criticized. Ruth Warrick, in title role of "The King and I," wrote Mavor Moore, Toronto Telegram critic, after he'd panned her performance at Music Fair in Buffalo: "Certainly it was not to my taste. Your very harsh criticism has given me courage to make changes . . ." In his review of same show at Music Fair in Toronto, two weeks later, Moore, while still somewhat critical, wrote, "I surrender! You were as good as your word."

One of the schools for acting in Manhattan, the Dramatic Workshop, will make an event of being 20 years old in 1960. American Academy of Dramatic Arts has lately been tooting its 75th anni. Since last week Saul Colin, the multilingual former European, is owner of the Workshop, buying out Maria Piscator. The founder, in 1940, Erwin Piscator, returned to Europe nearly a decade ago. Latest innovation of Colin regime is nightly performances of its studio group plus a weekly broadcast Tuesdays over radio station WEVD. Colin is now overseas.

While film showmen in Australia go to the local wailing wall on cue over major boxoffice drop, flesh-and-blood operators here are reaping a bumper boxoffice harvest at top admissions.

"My Fair Lady" is set for at least an 18 months' run at Her Majesty's, Melbourne, under the J. C. Williamson banner. Capacity trade is also being garnered by "Roar Like a Dove" at the Royal, Sydney, with John McCallum and Googie Withers costarred. Garnet Carroll, indie operator, also has a solid winner with "Auntie Mame."

COAST'S 'SAY, DARLING'

Kirk, Bean, Desmond, Cowan Head Doolittle Show

A Coast edition of "Say, Darling" is being produced for an Aug. 11 getaway at the Biltmore Theatre, Los Angeles, by James Doolittle, who operates the house. The musical, with Lisa Kirk, Orson Bean, Johnny Desmond and Jerome Cowan in lead roles, is scheduled to play three weeks in L. A., and another three-to-four weeks at the Geary Theatre, San Francisco.

The tuner will staged by David Clive, who planes from New York to the Coast tomorrow (Thurs.) to begin work on the production.

Free performances by the Merry-Go-Rounders, a dance theatre for children, will be presented Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday mornings in the East River Park Amphitheatre, N.Y.

Stagehand Shortage

Denver, July 7.

With many legitimate shows opening in Denver and nearby tourist centres during July an acute shortage of stagehands has developed locally.

All the first run motion picture houses are required to have one or two men each, while the "West Side Story" opening at the Municipal Auditorium uses 30, the Red Rocks Theatre will require a normal complement, likewise the Central City Play Festival and the annual Denver Post opera presentation in Cheeseman Park.

There just aren't enough IATSE members to go around.

Off-B'way Review

The Drunkard

Amulet Productions presentation of a two act (12 scenes) temperance play by W. H. Smith and "a gentleman;" Adapted and directed by E. W. Smith; Sets by Don Werner; Lighting, Richard Nelson; music, Robert Proctor; lyrics, Caroline Kellogg; at the Gate Theatre, N.Y. Opened June 23, '59. $2.90 top. Cast; Ruth Volner, Grace Chapman, Matt Conley, Frank Echols, Robert Menge, Norma Justin, Charles Caron, Alan Bruce, John Miranda, Maurice Edwards, pianist, Robert Proctor.

"The Drunkard," one of the most durable pieces of American theatrical merchandise, is back in New York after an absence of 25 years. There's a sprightly cast, and some incidental music added.

Audiences at the Gate Theatre, including members of a generation unborn the last time it came to town, are getting their chance to hiss the villain, cheer the hero, and add other asides at appropriate times.

"The Drunkard," attributed to W. H. Smith and "a gentleman," is believed to have had its first performance at the Boston Museum, Feb. 26, 1844. A short time later it was presented in the "large room" of the City Hotel in Brooklyn instead of the regular weekly lecture on temperance. Then, in 1850, it had its first Manhattan run at the then National Theatre.

Thereafter "The Drunkard" joined "Uncle Tom's Cabin" as a standard in America's storehouse of native stuff and remained so until the turn of the century. Hypocrisies of Prohibition made it a natural for revival on Dec. 30, 1929 at the MacDougal St. Playhouse and, in 1931, at the avant garde precincts of Carmel, Calif.

In all, "The Drunkard" has showed in 41 states since that first production in Boston. On July 6, 1933 it opened a 20-year, 7,572 performance run at the Hollywood Theatre Mart, being converted to a musical retitled "The Wayward Way," in 1953, without losing a performance. It's still running, with the count reaching 9,409.

Matt Conley, who plays Edward Middleton, the man who rises from the degradation of drink to financial redemption, has set something of a record in the show himself. Last summer while playing the part at his Thousand Islands Playhouse in upstate New York, he stepped onstage for the 1,000th time as Middleton. As evidenced by the current show he still takes pleasure in what he's doing, particularly in the melodramatic moments on the Bowery.

Grace Chapman carries on nobly as his long suffering wife, fending off the advances of lawyer Cribbs, the villain, played with fiendish ardor by Frank Echols. Echols, booed and hissed at every entrance, takes time out to hiss back back at the audience occasionally.

New music by Robert Proctor and Caroline Kellogg, which bridges the gaps between scenes, is not particularly hilarious for the most part, but is in tune with the temper of the play. The songsmiths are in form with a Salvation Army style marching song "Pass the Hat and Save a Sinner," which reminds you of "Follow the Fold" from "Guys and Dolls."

An upright piano, front removed to expose the keys, is at the side of the stage and Proctor appears to play it attired in bowler hat, striped basque shirt and trousers supported by loud suspenders. Adding to the informality, seating is on a first come, first serve basis, with the entire house $2.50, the price going to $2.90 on Friday and Saturday evenings. Nedi.

It's being used by the Westport (Conn.) Country Playhouse for the current season.

Summertime and the Muses

Bert Lahr's Arrow Gets Lost to Climax a Madhouse Of Late-and-Wrongo Stagecraft at Rosecroft Tent

By LES CARPENTER

Washington, July 7.

Opening two new summer theatres in the Washington area on two successive nights caused many things to happen, including a hilarious ad libbed scene (involving the seat of Bert Lahr's pants).

The new theatres are John A. Schaefer's Rosecroft Music Circus (a tent) at Oxon Hill, Md., eight miles away, which began with Lahr in "DuBarry Was a Lady," and William P. Pullinsi's downtown Candlelight Playhouse (restaurant theatre) which made its debut with Mimi Benzell in "Paris."

Neither Miss Benzell nor her theatre had noticeable trouble, but Lahr and his tent had it heaps.

No one's sense of humor was helped by the fact that the opening curtain at the Rosecroft tent had to be held one hour while carpenters finished construction of the stage and electricians completed installation of the lights. Then there were the loud speaking system which didn't work all evening and three sections of the tent without any seats, although tickets had been sold.

Jumping Arrow

But everyone could laugh—and did—after the Dauphin (John Call) shot Louis XV (Lahr) in the rear with an arrow. Lahr was brought onto the stage on a stretcher, lying face down and arrow straight up. The arrow fitted into a gadget under his coat. Lights on. Arrow falls off. "Blackout!" roars Lahr. Lights out. Lights out. None of the four people can find the arrow. It was in the orchestra pit or somewhere. Located finally, on go the lights again.

The arrow continues to fall over—or off. Finally DuBarry (Jacqueline James) makes her entrance, as the arrow makes the last of several falls to the floor. Cast and audience are yocking.

"Let an old pro fix this," declares Miss James. She tries to reinsert it into the socket of the gadget which is supposed to hold it. Having trouble, she comments: "I have an idea—but I'm not sure it will work!" More laughs. Lahr turns around and roars: "Honey, if you can't find a hole, DRILL one!" It made the evening worthwhile for the two-thirds of the audience who stayed beyond intermission.

Only first night problem Candlelight Playhouse had was an out-of-date play on the elevated stage (with customers sitting at tables surrounding it). Plot and gags of 30-odd year old musical play are tired, but there is a high point. Miss Benzell leaves Cole Porter (who wrote the music for "Paris," including the still lively "Let's Do It") to perform part of her night club act in mid-play. This offering includes such non-Porter music as La Boheme's "Musetta's Waltz," Rodgers and Hart's "Lover" and the French lyrics of "Autumn Leaves." Local critics turned thumbs down on "Paris" as worth presenting in 1959.

Candlelight's bar, food and service all rate good.

Rosecroft has a bar and buffet for its customers.

Washington's other two summer showplaces, Olney Theatre operated by Catholic University alumni in nearby Olney, Md., and the Carter Barron Amphitheatre run by Irvin and Israel Feld are again presenting shows this summer, too.

'FRENCH POSTCARDS' NOT FOR STRAWHATS

Plans for a strawhat tryout of "French Postcards," adapted by Mawby Green and Ed Feilbert from Jean de Letraz's French play, "La Betise D'Cambray," have been dropped. The comedy had been announced for July 21-26 presentation at the New Hilltop Theatre, Owings Mills, Md.

The authors are attempting to arrange a touring production for next fall or winter a la the setup on "Pajama Tops," which they adapted from de Letraz's "Moumou." "Tops," which was tried out by the old Hilltop Theatre in March, 1954, was sent out on the road later that year by H. Clay Blaney and Rex Carlton, with Diana Barrymore as star.

Green and Feilbert are planning to leave New York for the Coast in mid-July and may work out some production deal there.

Chi's Gt. Northern Gets Stay From Wreckers

Chicago, July 7.

Great Northern Theatre, formerly under Shubert lease and recently purchased by the U.S. Government to make way for a new federal courthouse, may relight this fall for one or more season. General Services Administration, a government agency, is offering the property on a year's lease beginning Aug. 1 and continuing after July 1960 on a month to month basis until the building is razed.

GSA will be taking bids on the theatre through July 24, hoping to find a lessor to arrange short term theatrical bookings.

TWO SETS OF SINGERS ALTERNATE 'BABY DOE'

Denver, July 7.

Frank H. Ricketson Jr., president of the Central City Opera House Assn., reveals that 10 full days ahead of the opening of "The Ballad of Baby Doe" at the famous summer theatre near Denver that every ticket for every performance during the entire engagement through July 25, had been sold.

The opera, based on the Colorado legend of Baby Doe Tabor, had its premiere two summers ago in the famous mining town and is being repeated as one of the Festival's presentations this year. It has since been in N. Y. City Center repertory.

Appearing in the leading roles are Laurel Hurley, Judith Raskin, Frank Guarrera and Clifford Harvout, alternating in their parts as Baby Doe and H. A. W. Tabor.

Equity Ruling Eliminates Adrienne Allen in N.Y.

London, July 7.

When "Five Finger Exercise," successful first play by Peter Shaffer, hits Broadway at the end of the year one of its cast of five will be missing, because of an American Equity ruling. The axe will fall on Adrienne Allen, who plays the mother. Reason for the decision is that it is thought Miss Allen's role will be the easiest to fill in Gotham.

"Five Finger Exercise" will be presented by Frederick Brisson and the Playwrights Co.

OBITUARIES

WILSON JARDINE

Wilson (Jack) Jardine, 65, musical director of the Toronto Skating Club and the Granite Club there since the early '30s, died July 1 in Toronto. He became known as the foremost conductor of figure-skating music in Canada, adapting this to skating routines rather than hitherto vice-versa and sat in with the choreographers.

He directed music for his 60-piece orchestra, accompanying the Toronto Skating club four-night carnivals in the 12,000-seater Maple Leaf Gardens before such travelling U. S. spectacles as "The Ice-Capades" and "The Ice Follies" put the Toronto amateurs out of business.

He conducted the standby musicians for Canadian engagements and it is said that Sonja Henie tried several times to lure him to the U. S. during her heyday but he refused, preferring to remain in Toronto where he was maestro of the two snooty clubs.

Jardine was musical director of Ottawa-born Barbara Ann Scott, former Olympics champion and holder of the world's figure-skating title when she turned pro and headed her own show of "Skating Sensations" in her 1950-51 tour of the U. S. and Canada.

Jardine was a Scotsman who settled in Chicago some 35 years ago and did theatre work there. Later he took over as pianist-conductor of the Palais Royale, Toronto, before joining the Toronto Skating Club to conduct their annual carnival. He also conducted the U. of Toronto dance sessions until his illness 14 months ago.

Unmarried, he left no known survivors.

ALFRED J. McCOSKER

Alfred J. McCosker, 72, former prexy and board chairman of WOR, Newark, died July 1 in Miami Beach. He contributed considerably to the promotional color and rambunctious programming content of WOR in the early '20s when the station was allied with the promotion and advertising dept. of L. Bamberger & Co., Newark dept. store.

IN LOVING MEMORY

Of My Dear Husband

HANS BARTSCH

who passed away July 10th, 1952

Always in my thoughts.

Wife, IRENE PALASTY BARTSCH

McCosker started with WOR as a publicity man after news reporting assignments on the New York American, the Denver Times and the Rocky Mountain News. He joined WOR in 1924 as publicity man and was upped to director and general manager of the station two years later.

Subsequently he became prexy and before retirement in 1947 had been chairman of the Mutual Broadcasting System, the first since its inception in 1934. He was also a director and former prexy of the National Assn. of Broadcasters and chairman of the radio committee of the New York World's Fair in 1939.

McCosker spearheaded the battle by MBS against RCA and NBC charging them with antitrust law violations. FCC subsequently revised the structure of the industry and ordered NBC to get rid of one of its two major webs.

McCosker was also active in community and charitable endeavors. One of his pet projects was the establishment of the McCosker-Hershfield Home (now the New York Cardiac Center) for heart disease sufferers. In this project, he was aided by humorist Harry Hershfield.

His wife and a daughter survive.

HARRY D. KLINE

Harry D. Kline, 80, a veteran theatrical manager, died July 3 in Dallas, Texas. During his career, he was associated with Charles Dillingham, Brock Pemberton, John Golden and other leading Broadway producers.

Lady Godiva

let the animals be counted as performers, although they did nothing more than walk onstage.

So, intent upon obeying Atlanta's fingerprinting law to the letter, Lady Godiva rode her palomino (Melody Lady by name) to police station. Riding ladylike (side saddle), she steered her steed up police station steps. A police lieutenant came dashing to door shouting "Whoa! Halt! Stop!" and Melody Lady came to a standstill. Lady Godiva explained to gendarme that she merely was bringing her partner with her so she could be hoofprinted at the same time she was fingerprinted. Copper said she could come in, but Melody Lady would have to stay outside.

News and television cameramen were on hand to record the incident for posterity and Aubrey Morris, roving reporter for WSB Radio, gave a blow-by-blow description of the event.

Melody Lady was duly tethered outside police station while Miss du Bay went inside, was fingerprinted and paid her $3, protesting all the while that filly was part of her act and a performer in her own right since she helped her to "disrobe," as she put it. Police were adamant, however, and if Melody Lady should commit some crime while in Atlanta, it is unlikely that police would be able to pin it on her since her hoofprints are not on file—and it would serve them jolly well right because they had their chance and muffed it.

REBIRTH OF FILM AGGRESSION

See Road Facing Crucial Season; Only Smashes, Tryouts May Survive

By JESSE GROSS

The road may be in for the most critical season in its history.

Continuance of the brushoff by the hinterland public of moderately-touted touring shows may bring the disappearance of such productions. Most producers are already reluctant to send out anything but powerhouse entries and if last semester's unhealthy situation is repeated this season, road activity in the future is likely to be confined to pre-Broadway tryouts and blockbuster touring productions.

Regarding tryouts, a pattern of expanded break-in runs appears to be emerging. Several upcoming productions have set lengthy warmup tours similar to "The Warm Peninsula" and "Third Best Sport" road hikes last season. These include "Mighty Man Is He," starring Nancy Kelly; "Pink Jungle," starring Ginger Rogers; "Odd Man In," starring Ann Sheridan, and "Goodbye Charlie," costarring Lauren Bacall and Sydney Chaplin.

"Mighty Man" is slated to launch a 19-week trek Sept. 25 on the Coast. "Jungle," set for a Coast getaway Oct. 6, is due to travel three months before opening in New York. "Odd Man" is scheduled to begin a 25-to-30 weeks' tour Aug. 10 in La Jolla, Cal., and "Charlie" begins an eight-week, five-city breakin run Oct. 19 in Pittsburgh.

The booking jam on Broadway is responsible, in some cases, for the extended tryout runs. On the longer hops, the producers are apparently hopeful of earning a profit on the hinterland warmup as did "Peninsula." In any case,

ASCAP's Idea of Utopia: Italy Where Even Home Parties Gotta Pay for Music

Rome July 14.

A person who plays records while entertaining friends at a party in his own home must pay performance royalties on the tunes played. At least that's what the court of Bologna, Italy, has just ruled.

Case pitted the SIAE (Italian Authors & Publishers Assn.) against Mauro Minelli. Latter gave a New Year's party to which he invited some friends and relatives and during which he played some records. A SIAE man heard the music, dropped in and charged Minelli with avoiding royalties under Italian law.

Court, which charged Minelli with a $5 fine, plus $1.50 in unpaid royalties, ruled that fees must be paid in any case where disks are played to others than the "normal family circle," even if the additional guests are relatives or friends.

Crocodile Doesn't Read Script, Bites Hypnotist

Belfast, July 14.

A female performer attempting to hypnotize two crocodiles was bitten on the face by one of them in a circus here.

Doreen Duggan, 24, was attacked in full view of an audience of 2,000, including the Prime Minister of Northern Ireland and his wife. She had put the first crocodile into a coma, and had taken the second from its case when it snapped at her face.

She was treated at a local hospital, and later allowed to go home. Performer was a member of the Chipperfields' Circus unit.

Lurid Lampoon Of U.S. in Film By Frenchman

Distortions to the point of caricature in a French film about the United States are both amusing and annoying Americans in Paris, United Press International reported from the French capital last week. Title of the picture is "J'Irai Cracher Sur Vos Tombes" (I'll Spit On Your Graves) and its loose plot deals with the flight of a Negro and a white woman towards the Canadian border.

Pic is based on a novel by Boris Vian, who'd never been to the States. He died last week of a heart attack as he was watching the film.

POPE'S LETTER WARNS ON PIX, RADIO, TV

Rome, July 14.

Local observers attach considerable importance to the fact that the first Encyclical Letter, issued this week by Pope John XXIII, should again treat the subject of radio, films and television.

Growing Catholic Church preoccupation with various facets of the entertainment world is also evidenced in the Pontiff's warning against shows and broadcasts which, in distorting the truth, become instruments of corruption, especially dangerous as these "new inventions" can be seen and heard "within domestic walls."

These means, however, can become instruments of good—the Encyclical letter adds—just as they can tempt the evil, and will eventually become for man an honest diversion.

STUDIOS FIGHT FOR THE PAYOFF

By GENE ARNEEL

A resurgence of Hollywood aggressiveness is seen cueing not only intra-industry talent raids but in tv as well. Hunt for top performers and craftsmen stems from a switch in trade conservatism to a "United Artists philosophy" where blockbusters — coupled with Barnum campaigns—have paid off handsomely.

These things are happening: (1), Paramount studio chief (recently appointed) Jack Karp has been given a virtual carte blanche in his quest for new film product; (2) Republic's new boss, Victor Carter, undeniably will steer this company back in to the picture business and (3), Metro, Columbia, Universal and others are endeavoring to continue further in the bidding for new product and on- and off-camera talent.

The net result, as is now promised, should mean the spirited bidding for desirable picture people that the film industry has seen in some time.

Par's execs huddled on the company lot for most of last week, with president Barney Balaban making with the most important private announcement-dropping. In effect he told the studio summit, mainly Karp, that the company was amenable to turning out the biggest production schedule in history. Make all the promising

Catholics Rating Strawhat Shows

Albany, July 14.

In its second annual evaluation of plays to be seen at area strawhats this season, The Evangelist recently listed 13 as "Completely Objectionable," seven as "Partially Objectionable," 16 "For Adults," one "For Family" and 19 with "No Ratings."

The Catholic diocesan weekly, which front-paged the story under the caption, "Summer Theatre Offerings Evaluated," explained that the productions without ratings were either "on Broadway before a system of moral evaluation was set up, or because they never had Broadway runs."

It cited as an example of the latter, "Hilary," a current production at the Sacandaga Summer Theatre, billed as "a new comedy on 'test run' before Broadway." This stars Joan Fontaine and features Philip Bourneuf.

The Evangelist used the "moral evaluations" of "The Sign," national Catholic periodical of Passionate Fathers of New Jersey.

Ex-President Truman's Guest-Shot on Benny TV

Hollywood, July 14.

Harry S. Truman will guest on one of Jack Benny's regular Sunday half-hour television shows some time in October or November. It will probably be taped or filmed in advance.

Seymour Berns, Benny's director, who is flying to New York from Hollywood on other business, intends stopping over Friday (17) in Kansas City to discuss the format with the former President of the United States. Truman and Benny have teamed before at various Democratic dinners, etc., but never on commercial video.

Soviet Exhibition at the N. Y. Coliseum, which runs until Aug. 10, is pyramiding its pull from 40,000 to 50,000 admissions a day, at $1 a head. Children are half-price but the draw is chiefly adult. The fashion shows at 2:30 and 8 p.m. are particularly SRO, with result that four-a-day showings are being scheduled.

Publicist Dave Jacobson (ex-CBS and ABC), was enlisted by the U.S. State Dept. to pressagent the Soviet show.

RUTH ST. DENIS, 81, RAPS 'PISTOL DRAMA'

Boston, July 14.

Ruth St. Denis now 81, took a swipe at television, playwrights and Hollywood, in a talk at Boston U. Religious Drama Workshop here last week.

"As a civilization, we have degraded the art of acting into the entertainment business," she opined citing tv as prime case of "using art for ignoble purposes."

She said of television: "Six out of seven begin with a pistol. Drama has sunk and sunk and sunk. But let's leave the subject, I snarl."

Miss St. Denis deplored the lack of playwrights "with convictions in their souls." She warned them to "wake from the dream of themselves, their plays, their money, and think of the responsibility they hold for civilization." Writers, she thought, should do something about the present regime of pistol dramas.

Theatre-Supplying Union Carbide Explains Its 'Mr. Tennis' Burglund

Union Carbide Corp., which through National Carbon Co. is one of the largest suppliers of carbons to motion picture theatres, this week disassociated itself from any views that may privately be held by Wilfred Burglund, its assistant public relations chief, currently in need of better public relations himself.

Burglund has been getting national hot-water drenching in the wake of his refusal to permit Ralph J. Bunche Jr. to join the West Side Tennis Club in N. Y. Burglund told the boy's father, United Nations Under-Secretary for Special Political Affairs, that the club accepted neither Negroes nor Jews for membership. The U.S. tennis championship matches and the Davis Cup challenge rounds are played at the Forest Hills club to public admission and international notice.

Spokesman for Union Carbide said, first, that Burglund had been speaking for the board of directors of the club rather than for himself. He then said Union Carbide did not subscribe to any discriminatory views or policies and that it did employ persons of the Jewish faith. He added that no policy existed blocking the employment of Negroes.

Ellington, Dankworth Click in 'Music-in-Round' Tent Show for Terrell

Lambertville, N. J., July 14.

St. John Terrell, a man who isn't afraid to try something new, looks like he has a winner with "jazz in the round" at his Lambertville Music Circus.

A large, enthusiastic audience greeted his preem of his week-long jazz concert featuring Duke Ellington and his colorful crew of veterans and young Johnny Dankworth and his British brand of big band jazz.

Other tented theatres are presenting jazz attractions this summer, but mainly on off nights, Terrell decided to go all the way and book a full week of jazz.

He scheduled Louis Armstrong at Lambertville and Ellington at Brandywine, Pa., and Neptune, N. J., two tents run by his chain. Ellington filled in for Satchmo when the trumpeter fell ill in Italy.

The tented theatre provides a dramatic setting for the presentation of jazz. Terrell seated the orchestra "in the round" on the circular stage.

The various sections are seated facing each other. Soloists and vocalists have some difficulty when they face the mike. They have to revolve slowly as they per-

Best of 10 State-Subsidized Companies, Soviet Music-Dance Fest Wows M. Sq.

Madison Square (and later selected arenas around the U.S.) can honestly advertise a show of showstoppers. Organized as a side-attraction and a talent fillip to the Russian Exhibit at the N.Y. Coliseum, the present melange is supersensational Russian revue. For comparison one must go to nature and speak of a hurricane of undiminishing force.

Sol Hurok (solo billing this time, no sharing with ANTA as on Bolshoi) may not have a sellout of the previous proportions for the Moisyev and Bolshoi invasions but in midsummer the airconditioned big halls ought to be pretty packed. The customers get solid entertainment. There are two small quibbies only about such "arena showmanship—patrons complain their heads off about no programs (they're sold at 75c) and their tails off about no seat cushions. The show has got to be good.

The ingredients of the present "Festival" are derived from the previously-seen Moiseyev, Beryozka and Bolshoi companies. Boris Pekrovsky of Bolshoi, who put the show together, with advice of counsel Hurok, roamed wide in the Soviet Union, borrowing talents from the Kiev State Ballet and Opera, the Georgian State Dance Company, the Kazakhstan State Dance Company, Armenian, Uzbekistan and Leningrad ballets and most of all the amazing Piatnitsky Folk Choir of Moscow.

There is presented to Americans once more the best of the subsidized entertainers of the USSR, ranging in type from Orientals and Mongolians to pink-cheeked bassos. It is of the essence that these singers, dancers, musicians, acrobats and choristers are professionals who make a life-work of

Merchants Subsidize Burg's Sole Filmery, Essential to Trading

Mohall, N. D., July 14.

The local Communiy Club, comprising business and professional people, and the town's merchants generally have pledged their help and cooperation for the shuttered Grand Theatre so that it can reopen and operate under the mayor's management.

Among other things, the club and stores will finance free Wednesday night unreelings. Every store will buy a stipulated number of theatre tickets which they'll distribute to their customers in any way they see fit.

Mayor Ernest Nelson, who'll manage the showhouse without extra compensation, points out that merchants feel that their business had suffered from the Grand's closing and that its reopening will help to put the town "back on the map."

DOLORES DEL RIO FINE

Health Okay—Admits To 53—Berates Today's 'Plots'

Dallas, July 14.

Mexican star Dolores Del Rio paused in Dallas with some nice words about Texas doctors—and some disparaging ones about Hollywood.

Star, who will be 53, next month and admits it, stopped at Love Field en route to her Mexico City home from Temple, where she has been under treatment at Scott White Clinic for a virus infection.

Star was given routine clinical examination at the famed Texas clinic and also underwent minor surgery.

She was high in her praise of the M.D.'s here who have given her a clean bill of health. She had harsher words about the trend of movies in Hollywood—a trend she said forced her to leave the capital 14 years ago and take up her career in Mexico, where she has been ever since.

"The stories have not kept up with the technical developments of films," she said. "The producer must not think the public is very choosy or intelligent. I think most of the plots are terrible."

Miss Del Rio was accompanied here by her American-born Mexican producer, Lewis Riley, who also went with her to Scott White for a checkup.

London Gearing For News Strike

London, July 14.

Threat of a shutdown of London newspapers because of a general strike and ink shortage has placed show biz here in a spot simlar to that faced in New York last winter when all papers failed to publish in a union dispute. Particularly worried are film houses and distributors about to launch new pictures. Space shortage has given the go-ahead to alternative publicity gimmicks.

Unlike the situation in New York, where distribs could snap up all the available radio and tv time, British showmen are faced with the BBC, a government radio monopoly which abhors commercials. Television is limited to one commercial network which is

Lullabye for Patterson

Ingemar Johannson, new heavyweight champion, is being given the pop tune treatment in his native Sweden with the help of a U. S. tunesmith, Moe Jaffe. Latter's song, "Ingemar," written shortly after Johannson knocked out Floyd Patterson, was acquired by Clas Dahlgren, Swedish Metronome Records' N. Y. rep. Olle Bergman cut it for Metronome with Swedish lyrics in time for a big blowout for the new champ at Tivoli Amusement Park in Stockholm.

Metronome's affiliated publishing firm, Multitone, acquired Scandinavian rights to the tune from Jaffe's firm, General Music. Metronome plans a U. S. version of the tune as well.

AFTRA Merger Wishful Thinking Sez SAG Board

Hollywood, July 14.

Assumption by some that a merger between Screen Actors Guild and the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists is "inevitable and will be accomplished within a few months" is described by the SAG National Board as "wishful thinking."

Board, clarifying its stand on the merger situation in the first issue of the Guild's new magazine, Screen Actor, also emphasized that it "can neither recommend endorsement nor rejection of merger until a specific plan has been prepared and studied."

Editorial stating the board's position was prompted by two assumptions, which, according to the board, are not based on fact: (1) that the national board has endorsed the proposed merger and (2) that a merger is inevitable and will be accomplished within a few months.

Board states its position by using the analogy of two friendly families living in separate houses with members constantly exchanging visits. Merger is compared to a proposal that both families could operate more efficiently, be more comfortable and save money by moving into a single larger house which has not yet been built.

"As the responsible heads of one of the two families, we are not

Barnes-O'Connor-Fowler's John Barrymore Package

Howard Barnes, independent tv and film producer, has acquired all rights to Gene Fowler's bestseller biography of John Barrymore, "Good Night, Sweet Prince." The work is now being adapted by Barnes and Richard O'Connor. The author's son, Will Fowler, will act as associate producer on the offerings.

The only member of the cast selected at this date is Gene Wesson, who was Fowler's choice for the leading role of Barrymore. According to Barnes, the tv and screen adaptations of "Prince" will stress the subtitle of the work, "The Life, Times and Loves of John Barrymore." It will be a period piece, centering largely on the great actor's career in the theatre.

Jack Green of Associated Booking Corp. is acting for Barnes, formerly film and drama critic of the N.Y. Herald Tribune. O'Connor is the author of several books and tv scripts. His latest novel, "Wild Bill Hickok," will be published by Doubleday later this month.

'Baby Doe' Poses Question: Just What Constitutes U.S. Folklore

By LUCIUS BEEBE

Central City, Colo.

The revival here, and a very successful one too, both from the aspect of prestige and boxoffice, of Dr. Douglas Moore's Rocky Mountain opera, "The Ballad of Baby Doe," poses a number of relevant questions as to just what constitutes American folklore and how does it get that way.

An interesting commentary on Colorado's regional solidarity, in the face of a deliberate and contrived rival to "Baby Doe," in the form of a production of "The Girl of The Golden West" at nearby Red Rocks, may be found in the circumstance that Red Rocks this season is a failure. Not only does the carriage trade from Denver and Colorado Springs instinctively and of old established loyalty head for Central City; so do music lovers and the less socially elite of the region. The advance sales in Central's Eureka Street have been the best in the quarter century of revivals here, according to Davis Moore, treasurer for the Central City Opera Assn. and not to be confused with the musical Douglas Moore who wrote "Baby Doe."

It is to be doubted if the score of "The Ballad of Baby Doe" is musically a serious rival to Puccini's well established score for "The Girl of The Golden West." Neither does the regional opera, with its single season on Broadway at the Civic Center, enjoy the prestige lent over the decades to "The Girl" by such headliners as Caruso. But the b.o. fact remains that the solid if not brilliant story of Colorado's most celebrated if not most exalted romance continues to knock the spots off an established operatic classic.

"Baby Doe" opened in Central City three years ago on July 7, 1956 with Martha Lipton and Walter Cassel in the starred roles, settings by Donald Oenslager, with Emerson Buckley conducting. It is no exaggeration that the premiere made Colorado history almost to the extent that its principal characters had made history in the Centennial State almost two generations previous.

The author of this brief commentary was present on that historic occasion and is free to confess himself much moved by the recitation of a saga of silver and its attendant tragedies as well defined in the folklore and matter of the Old West as, say, Buffalo Bill or the Reno Brothers.

The fact that "Baby Doe" was

18% of U.S. Candy Sold at Cinemas

On the basis of statistics which show that 18% of all candy sold in the United States is retailed through the nation's 18,000 film houses, exhibitors are trying to work out an arrangement with the National Confectioners Assn. to get candy makers to prepare special ads and point-of-sale material to highlight this market.

Edwin Gage, member of Theatre Owners of America's concessions committee, has held several conferences with NCA in the hope that he can induce the candy men to follow the lead of Pepsi-Cola and Coca-Cola which last spring ran national magazine ads using drive-ins and conventional theatres as background for the ads.

Hernando Courtright To Build Zeckendorf Hotel At Coast's Century City

Hollywood, July 14.

While the former Beverly Hills Hotel president and managing director, Hernando Courtright, will be very much involved in the Webb & Knapp (William Zeckendorf) new hotel primed for Century City, the ex-banker turned hotelier will have a broader supervisory command in the new venture. It will occupy old 20th-Century-Fox Film studio acreage acquired by Zeckendorf in recent $50,000,000 deal.

It was decided that, rather than lease the ground to a competitive chain for a hotel, Courtright would supervise the erection of the new Zeckendorf hotel on the CC site from the ground up. Century City will comprise apartments, stores and other edifices. Courtright, whom the Bank of America had originally put into the BevHills Hotel many years ago, has top-drawer banking connections for financing same.

Courtright is just back from a flying trip to New York to huddle with the Webb & Knapp interests.

TISCH INTO LOEW'S THEATRES

How Do You Handle 'The Idiot'?

[FROM SOVIET UNION]

Scene: The 20th-Fox screening room in New York.

At the back of the room, a half dozen of 20th's top executives huddle around a girl with a script in her hand. The film being projected is the Russian "The Idiot"—without subtitles. The girl is translating the lines from her book.

It's tough to hear her over the loudspeaker and to watch the picture, too. So a microphone is brought in. It still doesn't work. Finally, the picture is over and the silent group drifts out. "Let's see whether we can swap it," suggests one. The attempt is made, and rejected.

The Americans have bought seven Soviet films and there can be no substitutions. So 20th has to release "The Idiot" whether it likes it or not. "It's not a bad film," said one of the execs pensively. "I just don't know what we're going to do with it!"

British Want Festival Conformity, All Entries Free of Quota & Tax

Berlin, July 14.

A tightening up of festival rules which may lead to a possible restriction on the growing number of such international events is to be considered by the International Federation of Film Producers Assns. when it meets in Vienna in Sept. 8-9.

This was decided at a special session held in Berlin last week, when it was proposed to withdraw recognition from those countries which do not abide by the new rules.

The plan to tighten the rules was introduced by Arthur Watkins on behalf of the British Film Producers Assn., and dealt with three main points. The first proposed that all foreign features entered at festivals should subsequently be free of any local imposts or quotas. They should not be subject to a dubbing loan or tax, should be over and above restricted quotas and should be exempt from other financial obligations.

Watkins' second proposal urged that no films should be invited to a festival without prior consultation with local industry associations. Apparently there has been a recent case in which an invited film was entered at a fest, and the local industry had had no advance information. The third alteration is designed to end a situation in which some of the major producing countries are excluded from the juries. If the proposal goes through, the fest authorities will have to submit their jury nominations to the International Federation for approval.

As all the draft alterations are designed to end abuses in the regulations, it's considered a certainty that they'll be accepted in principle at the Vienna meet.

Alden (RKO) Up $8.73; Tax Break?

Glen Alden Corp., whose principal holding is RKO Theatres, went up $8.37½ per share in trading value on the New York Stock Exchange last week. Further, it was the busiest trading week for any film industry stock issue in recent years, with 548,500 shares being exchanged.

The Alden common closed the week at $28.62 per share, compared with a low of $13.12 for the year.

The fuss about Alden has been stirred by reports of more diversification of the type that will see the corporation helping itself to about $9,000,000 in tax benefits. Additionally, certain Wall Street hipsters have become high, for the time being, at least, on the theatre business.

Rowland V. Lee in N.Y.

Rowland V. Lee arrives in New York from the Coast today (Wed.) in advance of the premiere of his latest production, "Big Fisherman," at the Rivoli Aug. 4.

Feature, which is being distributed by Walt Disney's Buena Vista, will play 10 performances per week on a roadshow basis.

In Berlin, Ignores Fest

Berlin, July 14.

What was called "a real sensation at the Berlin Film Festival" by the local film press was the fact that the American director, Elia Kazan, had come to Berlin without paying any attention to the festival. Kazan had arrived here on Friday, June 26, the day of the film festival opening, but it took the local press nearly four days until it found out (by accident) of his Berlin presence.

Kazan came (from Turkey) to Berlin "just as a tourist." Der Abend, local boulevard paper, scooped with a full-page story about his surprise presence, with photographs (secretly taken) showing Kazan riding the bus, walking down the street, entering the hotel lift, etc.

Industry Execs Psycho-Curious Re Albert A. List

Albert A. List, as head of Glen Alden Corp., along with the RKO Theatres subsidiary, is bewildering to some film industry execs. They can't figure where he's going with his corporate enterprises and diversification moves and they freely admit that his kind of maneuvering is curious to them.

It's not a "foreign" matter to them, of course, for the reason that the RKO chain since way back has been a member of the "industry family." Distributors particularly are concerned because the circuit ranks as one of the most important customers around the country.

Another major consideration is that List seemingly can diversify at ease while the film execs—List is regarded as an "outsider"—feel pressure to develop corporate interests other than films and theatres but are wary of the hazards involved.

List already has the RKO exhibition company enmeshed with coal production, textiles, automotive parts, oil and gas, etc. And he's now working on further diversification. An important film business economist this week asked, "Where's List going and what does he hope to accomplish?"

Geraghty's Credit Suit

Hollywood, July 14.

Disney Productions has been sued for $150,000 damages by writer Maurice Geraghty who claims company promised him screen credit on "Darby O'Gill, Little People," then reneged.

Superior Court complaint alleges Geraghty was hired by Disney in 1945 to do story and screenplay of "The Little People," with contract calling for screen credit.

HOTEL ANGLE AS 'DIVERSIFICATION'

By HY HOLLINGER

Tisch Hotels, the chain that operates the Americana in Miami Beach and the Belmont Plaza in New York among other hotels, is now the largest single stockholder of Loew's Theatres, having acquired approximately 15% of the 2,668,389 outstanding shares within the past few months. The recent Tisch purchases, augmenting its previous longtime holdings in Loew's Inc. (resulting in the acquisition of Loew's Theatres shares following the division into two separate companies), saw the theatre chain's stock hit a new high of 17 on the New York Stock Exchange.

According to Larry Tisch, president of the hotel chain, his company hasn't as yet formulated any definite plans relating to the strong position it now holds in Loew's Theatres. Beyond saying that the Tisch interests considered Loew's Theatres "a good investment opportunity," Tisch stressed that "no ideas on the whole picture" have been considered. He acknowledged, however, the possibility that Tisch Hotels would seek representation on the board of directors, pointing out that it was usual for one with such substantial holdings to be a member of the board.

The Tisch purchases, it was learned, were made with the knowledge of Loew's Theatres' officials. Eugene Picker, president of the theatre circuit, said he had held talks with Larry Tisch and had been assured that the hotel chain planned no changes in the present management.

There was some speculation in Wall Street circles that the Tisch purchases were a forerunner of a possible merger between the two companies. Loew's Theatres, since its separation from Loew's Inc., has been actively seeking a way to diversify. The fact that Picker and Loew's Theatres exec v.p. John Murphy had made frequent trips to Florida recently when Larry Tisch headquartered at the Americana has led to the belief that the Tisch investment is tied up with a diversification move.

The management of Loew's Theatres does not have a strong stock position in the company, a situation that the top brass is attempting to improve. At a board meeting on June 19, the directors approved a restricted stock option plan (subject to the okay of the stockholders) for its key personnel. The plan provides that the company reserve 130,000 shares of common stock, of which options for 85,000 shares were granted. The 15% Tisch interest represents more than 400,000 shares.

Berlin-1959: Awards Disappoint; Fest Still More Biz Than Arty; Freeloaders Hard to Exclude

By HAROLD MYERS

Berlin, July 14.

By putting the emphasis on quantity rather than quality, the Berlin Film Festival imposed a physical strain on the 11-member jury but made their final selections a comparatively easy task. The forecasts along the Kurfurstendamm on the eve of the closure last Tuesday (7) were virtually 100% accurate. The tipsters went wrong on only one score: they favored the Japanese entry "Kakushitoride No Sanakunin" ("Three Rascals In Hidden Fortress") for the best picture award and the French film "Les Cousins" to get the nod as best director. In the event, the awards were reversed.

The results were a bitter blow to the German film industry who anticipated at least two major awards, one for their modern version of "Hamlet," "The Rest Is Silence," and another for their feature length documentary on Israel. Local industryites took the view that if the public poll, abandoned two years ago, had still been in existence the Germans would have collared the two Golden Bear awards.

Apart from winning a prize for a short, the Germans had to be content with the Catholic award for "Paradise and Furnace," the feature documentary. The Japanese, on the other hand, collared the international critics' accolade for the film which had already won them a Silver Bear for best direction.

Not 'Artistic'

By taking virtually anything that is available, the Berlin Festival is displaying little desire to maintain the artistic standards of the other major European shindigs. It has obviously settled down as a trade fair and primarily a market-place for businessmen, rather than an exhibition of the finest in chematic art. Not without some justification the festival authorities boast of the wide international support and the large number of participat-

Deborah's 'Cakes & Ale'

Hollywood, July 14.

Deborah Kerr, who holds the film rights, and George Cukor are partnered in an indie outfit to produce Somerset Maugham's novel, "Cakes and Ale." Negotiations are on with United Artists for release.

Due to pair's other commitments, property cannot be made until Fall of 1960, at earliest.

Astor, Bijou As One Enlarged UA Showcase

Plan is being formulated to remodel the Astor and Bijou theatres on Broadway and West 45th St. and to combine them into a single house seating 1,200. City Investing will do the job, for which blueprints already are drawn.

The new, modern showcase will be under lease to United Artists as are the Astor and the Victoria at the present time. They're being operated for UA by Lopert Theatres.

ESCALATOR PUBLICITY CLAUSE ON 'SPARTACUS'

When Universal agreed to finance Bryna Productions' "Spartacus," it stated in its initial handout that the Kirk Douglas film was a $5,000,000 production. Subsequent handouts referred to the film as first of a $6,000,000 and then a $7,000,000 production.

Last week U publicists were notified that from now on the picture will be called a $9,000,000 production. The film, which has undergone cast and director difficulties, was originally scheduled for October release. However, it's now mid-July and the cameras are still grinding on the U lot.

Kirk Douglas' "The Vikings" for UA underwent a somewhat similar routine.

Suing Howard Hughes, Calls Tool Co. Unable to Meet Its Obligations

Los Angeles, July 14.

In an amended complaint to his April 13 suit against Howard Hughes and Hughes Tool Co., for $2,111,965, Noah Dietrich, for many years a top man in the Hughes empire, asks that Hughes be made personally responsible for entire amount demanded.

Dietrich, suing for payment of asserted back labor and services under a series of previous contracts and agreements, claims in new action that tool company is now insolvent and unable to meet its obligations as they become due. He charges Hughes, sole stockholder in company, has used assets to pay his own expenses, including legal fees, medical bills, entertainment, living expenses and cost of hobbies. Dietrich demands that corporate veil be lifted so Hughes may be made personally responsible for entire action.

One of Dietrich's claims is that Hughes promised him $1,000,000 upon termination of his employment with tool company.

FOX, DETROIT, SEEN LOST

National Out of Nation's Third Largest Film House

Detroit, July 14.

Fox Theatre, third largest in the country after Radio City Music Hall and Roxy in New York, has lost its lease.

Negotiations between Fox-Michigan Inc. and Woodmont Corp., owner of the Fox Building for renewal have failed. National Theatres Inc., owner of the theatre has agreed to continue management for 60 days pending a definite outcome.

It's believed that Woodmont Corp., headed by Donald N. Sweeny, former banker and attorney, will take over operation.

Robert Bothwell, manager of the Fox, is expected to go to another post in Los Angeles.

Sneakiest Sneak Set on 'Ben-Hur'

Metro plans to hold a sneak preview of "Ben-Hur" some time in September in an undisclosed midwestern city. The company's aim is to unveil the film before "a typical, unprepared, American audience, without the usual preview addicts."

M-G officials hope to make the sneak the sneakiest ever and are keeping the time and city under wraps until a few hours before the showing. Because of the necessity of using a theatre with 70m projection equipment, it seems likely that the unheralded preview will be in a key city that has a theatre with the necessary equipment. The official world premiere is scheduled for November at Loew's State, N.Y.

On another front in the "Ben-Hur" launching, a Metro survey has disclosed a resurgance of borrowing from libraries of the Gen. Lew Wallace novel. Many librarians, according to the survey, have ordered additional copies of "Ben-Hur" to meet the new demand which is said to have started last Easter. The book, originally published in 1880, had a second rise when a stage version of the book was produced in the 1900's. Then in 1926, there came another revival of reader interest with the release of the silent film version.

Another aspect of the "Ben-Hur" promotion saw designer Ceil Chapman preview a collection of "Ben-Hur" inspired fashions yesterday (Tues.) at the Hotel Pierre, N.Y. to over 200 key fashion editors who are in N.Y. to size up the fall fashions.

UA in First Six Months of 1959 Racks Up $40,055,000 Globally

Pushing ahead with a brace of strong product, United Artists during the first six months of 1959 hit a record $40,055,000 in worldwide theatrical film rentals, Robert S. Benjamin, UA board chairman, reported this week. Figure represents a 20% increase over the $33,501,000 UA racked up worldwide in 1957.

The 1958 breakdown shows $21,842,000 in domestic rentals, up $3,570,000 from '57, and $18,213,000 in foreign revenue, a $2,984,000 rise over the prior year.

UA's gross in 1958 established a high of $84,072,000 for a net of $3,702,000. UA execs feel that the second half of '59 will equal if not surpass the first half due to the potential of the pictures going into release. Latter include "On the Beach," "The Unforgiven" and "Solomon and Sheba."

Once Night-Dead House In Financial District Thrives on Building

Solom Enterprises, headed by Murray Meinberg, has taken a lease on the 800-seat Tribune Theatre, a pioneer theatre in N.Y.'s downtown financial district.

Located in the old N.Y. Tribune building, the theatre, until recently, enjoyed most of its patronage during normal business hours. However, with the construction of a number of housing projects in the area (with more to come), the house is now getting patronage from the residential population. Due to reconstruction of the Brooklyn Bridge approach and the demolition of the old N.Y. World building, the theatre's lobby had to be moved and was rebuilt on Franklin St. adjoining Park Row.

LIZ TAYLOR'S WALK-ON IN TODD JR.'S 'SCENT'

Madrid, July 14.

Elizabeth Taylor flew from London to Malaga this week for her brief cameo walk-on in "Scent of Mystery," as producer Mike Todd Jr. entered his 16th and last week of shooting. Meanwhile, a second "Scent" unit, helmed by cameraman John Drake, broke through the Smell-O-Vision show's Andalucian confines to pick up footage in Avila, Burgos, Logrona and Pamplona. This unit is currently filming the Pamplona Fiesta of San Firmin.

A third Todd Jr. group is in Madrid dubbing and editing a "Scent" segment which the producer will project next month to exhibs and mag entertainment editors in Chicago as a demonstration of synchronized sight, sound and smell.

Darlington, New Firm, To Roll One on Racing

New production outfit, Darlington Films Inc., has been formed to make a feature with a stock car racing background. It's tentatively titled "The Southern 500."

J. Francis White will produce the picture which will use the Darlington Raceway at Darlington, S.C., as its background. Robert Griffin is prez of Darlington.

Veepcy to E. A. Manning

Edgar A. Manning Jr., head of the Amusement Industries Group of the Bankers Trust Co., New York, since 1958, last week was given vicepresident's epaulets.

Manning began with Bankers Trust in 1945 doing general credit and loan work. As head of the amusements division, he has a key role in negotiating loans with film and telefilm producers and production companies.

Jeanne Moreau to N.Y.

French star Jeanne Moreau ("The Lovers") will tour the U.S. for a month in connection with the opening of the film at the Paris Theatre, N. Y.

"The Lovers" has yet to pass the scrutiny of the N. Y. censors.

Seek 'Orderly Profits'

Detroit, July 14.

United-Detroit Theatres and Northio Circuit managers met with home office officials for an all day business building session. "Orderly Profits" drive was the keynote.

Circuit is launching a program to expand and diversify its picture selling effort with attention to special events revenue hypos.

Millers Prefer Do-It-Yourself On Collections

Hollywood, July 14.

Miller Consolidated Pictures (John and Michael Miller, but no relations), which has clicked with its first package of exploitationers, is setting up its own distribution outfit. As Michael Miller explains it:

"We found we were getting tough deals from distributors with inadequate accounting or no accounting at all. This started us thinking in terms of our own distribution which would give us an honest and competent basis on which to base our production."

Added Miller: "We feel that if we don't go out and give the exhibitor more concrete help in selling our product we might as well get out of the business."

Miller is a comparative newcomer to producers' ranks. After graduating from Yale in '54, he worked for an ad agency, then headed west to break into films. He wound up as associate producer on "My World Dies Screaming" and—with that experience under his belt, teamed with John Miller to set up their production outfit.

'Diary' Goes Grind July 15

July 15 has been set as the starting date by 20th-Fox for opening "The Diary of Anne Frank" on a regular, continuous performance basis.

Several houses, including the Palace, N.Y., have been playing the film that way for some weeks. However, these are situations which started off roadshowing the picture and which switched when it became obvious that "Diary" wouldn't do business that way.

Skouras Touring USSR, Satellites

Spyros P. Skouras, president of 20th-Fox, left N.Y. for Paris last week to start a swing through the Iron Curtain countries. He'll visit Moscow, Warsaw, Budapest, Bucharest, Sofia, Prague, Belgrade, Vienna, Athens and London.

Stated purpose of the Skouras trip is to "survey the motion picture industry as it exists in countries behind the Iron Curtain" and to "seek means of broadening cooperation between motion picture producers of east and west and of the possibility of an exchange of acting and technical talent."

Skouras did not go with a mandate from the other film companies, but went simply for 20th.

FILM-VIDEO MERGER OF COAST CHARITY

Hollywood, July 14.

Motion Picture Permanent Charities and Radio-Television-Recording-Advertising Charities, fund-raising organizations of the various branches of the entertainment industry, will merge. Two groups have agreed in principle, following approval of the general proposal by board of both parties.

Separate campaigns will be conducted this Fall, but provided the legal work can be successfully worked out a consolidated campaign will be held next year.

After Repeated Tries, Dave Lannes Finally Succeeds, Kills His Wife

Chicago, July 14.

An indictment is expected shortly against freelance photographer Dave Lannes, whose clients included several show trade companies and personalities, for the confessed slaying of his ex-wife, Marilyn.

Lannes, a former mental patient, shot and mortally wounded Mrs. Lannes after pulling her from a car in which she had been sitting with her landlord. Latter also was shot (but survived) when he ran to the woman's aid. Mrs. Lannes was employed as a copywriter by the Olian & Bronner ad agency here.

Lannes registered deep remorse after the shooting, explaining his action by saying he "couldn't take it anymore." Police said the couple, divorced last February, had frequently had bitter quarrels. Subsequent to the divorce, Lannes was arrested several times for alleged attempts on his wife's life, but each time went free in court.

Numbered among Lannes' clients were Balaban & Katz theatres and several film distribs. His most recent theatrical assignment was July 1—two days before the killing—when he lensed the world preem festivities of "North by Northwest" for Metro.

After his arraignment, the photog was ordered to undergo a complete psychiatric examination. Two children also survive the victim.

UA Sues P.O. on Cards

Washington, July 14.

United Artists Corp. Monday (13) filed suit in U.S. District court here to prohibit Post Office Dept. from seizing its promotional postcards for "Naked Maja."

Department last March impounded 2,000 cards of Goya masterpiece, calling them obscene and not mailable. UA claimed post office lacked statutory authority to seize cards and had no right "to act as a universal censor of public tastes and morals."

UA argued violation of its constitutional rights.

Bureaucrats Clip Amateur Boxing In Film House

Lewiston, Me., July 14.

Plan of the Lewiston Drive-In here to put on amateur boxing bouts at intermission time during the Saturday shows ran into tax and licensing problems.

The Maine Boxing Commission notified the ozoner that it must have a license to conduct the bouts and must also kick in 30% of the admissions.

According to a law passed by the Maine legislature some years ago, the boxing commission has the legal right to demand licensing of the theatre, as well as payments by boxers, managers, seconds and the referee. Boxers are assessed $6 each and the others $5 each for licenses.

Among Selves, Film Tradesters Gossip Re Gossip Columns

By FRED HIFT

Motion picture people, constantly asked to reevaluate their thinking and their methods, are giving a good deal of thought to the current status and impact of the syndicated newspaper columnists. Question asked is: Do these columnists justify the time and effort that is still expended on "planting" them?

The answers to this question are tinged with the same feeling that colors the film companies' general relations with the scribes—fear. Even the man who has strong opinions on the columnists (as distinct from hard-news journalists) won't allow his name to be used and there's a tendency to drop the voice as if the gossip columnist might be listening over his shoulder.

And yet, even without the accustomed public pronouncements, there is no question that the people whose job it is to promote films have strong doubts about the actual impact of the columnists; and some are even beginning to voice cautious resentment about the casual unchecking, uncaring way in which many columnists gather and print "the news."

It's an area in which it's not at all unusual for items to be completely fabricated, often to suit a particular columnist's current "feud" with a star or some other personality; in which the "blind" item, which means virtually nothing to the public, is commonplace; in which news is rarely "confirmed" and retractions of wrongs are practically nonexistent.

Balanced 'Scoops'

It's a field in which press agents carefully dole out the "scoops" so as not to "offend" rival columnists and in which there are a number of known instances where the "insiders" actually had their column written by outsiders in trade for a strong plug.

The attitude in the film biz towards the columnists differs. On the Coast, the "mention" is all-important and the power of the printed word is exaggerated out of all reasonable proportion. In the East, a somewhat saner attitude prevails, and the more-than-occasional outbursts of viciousness and back-biting in the columns do generate a certain reaction. But in N.Y., too, "the item" still holds magic and a lot is forgiven for its sake.

Rarely, very rarely, will a film company hit back or make any attempt to set the facts straight. In one recent instance, where Dorothy Kilgallen printed a nasty and personal item which was totally false, the pressagent's complaint was primarily that she didn't mention the name of the picture involved. Asked if he had called the columnist to correct the item, he replied: "What for?"

While they have learned to accept the strange ways of some columnists and their occasionally political slants (a la Hedda Hopper who once shocked an exhibitor audience into silence by stating that no person mentioned before a Congressional committee looking into Communism should be permitted to appear on the screen again), the film crowd's immediate concern is with the equation of catering to the gossipists and the payoff.

One view is that the columnists today, partly because of greater public sophistication, are no longer nearly as powerful or as effective as they once were, and that the industry—in pandering to them—is simply following a reflex motion rooted in an attitude of decades ago.

Another view is that the columnists are important, simply because they are read. "If a person reads a column over a period of time, that means that they basically agree with the columnist's 'slant,'" was one opinion. "It means, too, that they consider these writers—whether responsible or not—as people 'in the know.' Therefore, if such a columnist advocates a certain picture, or boosts a certain personality, it's bound to help."

How Important?

Then there is the middle ground view, which holds that the columnists are still important (if for no other reason than that they get into print) but that their ability to influence and to generate interest has diminished a great deal. "Such a flood of gossip is thrown at the public, the individual mention no longer really counts," opined one film man. Yet, he added, "we keep trying to hit those columns because it's visible proof that we're on the job. It helps with the boss!"

There has never been an attempt to gauge the actual impact of the columnists. "It'd be impossible to get an accurate picture," said one promotion topper. "How do you establish what motivates a man to see a film?"

Yet, even without surveys, there's a sixth sense that tells the film people which columnists are slipping and which are not. And the p.r. men no longer shake in their boots when the phone rings and it's so-and-so's office.

They've also learned that there's no premium on accuracy in the columnist biz. A good planter will send columnists five or six items a day and see what happens. One p.r. man admitted last week that he's quite apt to write these "news" bits off the top of his head. He knows that rarely is an invented item checked. Just is it "colorful?"

But the planting business is no longer cultivated as intensely by the companies. Interest today is more in getting out stories in the news sections, where they are more widely read and more generally believed.

Kings' 'Gorgo' to Metro

A deal is about to be closed for Metro to distribute the King Bros.' production "Gorgo," a sci-fi film about a monster that destroys London.

The film is currently before the cameras at Metro's British studio.

'SINGLE BILL SAM' HITS SAFE

TOA Counts 'Em—And Weeps

Theatre Owners of America again states that "the product situation for 1960 still looks pitifully small." TOA's estimate, however, appears at odds with a VARIETY survey (see separate story). The TOA estimate, as well as others relating to the so-called picture shortage, is causing considerable confusion as to exactly how many pictures will be available for release in the near future.

Noting that 18 pictures went before the cameras in the last 30 days, TOA says this is an amount equal to 22% of all the films started in the prior four and half months of 1959. As of June 20, according to TOA, 98 films had been started in 1959, with only 10 more slated to roll by July 20. If production for the first six months could be assumed to continue at the same rate in the July-December period, says TOA, this would mean a total of only about 200 pictures for all of 1959, indicating an even tighter product situation in 1960 than last year or this year.

TOA sets the production picture as of June 20 as follows:

	1959	1958
Allied Artists	4	10
Columbia	16	13
Disney	3	1
Metro	11	13
Paramount	7	9
20th-Fox	16	14
Universal	4	4
Warner Bros.	5	7
Independents	32	44
Total Films	98	115

Trade Continues Big; 'Story' First, 'Murder' 2d, 'Earth' 3d, 'Horse' 4th, 'Hercules' 5th

Business in key cities covered by VARIETY this session is holding up surprisingly well. Big pictures plus fairly mild weather in many spots is helping trade as picture after picture, just released, appears to be catching on with the public.

"Nun's Story" (WB), first last stanza, is holding in No. 1 spot by a wide margin, the length of this opus appearing not to hurt too much wherever it plays. "Anatomy of A Murder" (Col), which was out in only three keys last week, is capturing second position.

"This Earth Is Mine" (U), fourth a week ago, is winding up third. "Horse Soldiers" (UA), second last stanza, is finishing fourth. "Hercules" (WB), which was third a week ago, is capturing fifth place.

"Five Pennies" (Par), fifth last stanza, is taking sixth money. "Say One For Me" (20th) is winding up seventh. "South Seas Adventure" (Cinerama) will be eighth.

"Darby O'Gill" (BV), comparatively new, will take ninth position. "Room At Top" (Cont), long high on the list, is finishing 10th. "Ask Any Girl" (M-G) is placing 11th while "Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) will be 12th.

"Sleeping Beauty" (BV), back on repeat runs currently; "Gigi" (M-G), "South Pacific" (Magna-20th), and "Love Is My Profession" (Kings) are the runner-up films in that sequence.

"Big Circus" (AA) looms as one of the more promising new entries. It is socko in Denver, big in Philly, fine in Washington and good in Balto. "Hole in Head" (UA) shapes as potentially great, being smash in K. C., sockeroo in Chi, hotsy in Boston and big in L.A. "Middle of Night" (Col) also shapes big, being smash in Washington, solid in N. Y., hot in L. A. and great in Philly. "Tarzan's Greatest Adventure" (Par) looks fine in Philly, fair in Denver, and okay in Washington.

"North by Northwest" (M-G), due into N. Y. Music Hall next, is great in Chi and smash in Detroit. "Last Train From Gun Hill" (Par), also new, looks big in K. C., sock in Detroit, fancy in Omaha and good in Minneapolis.

"Hound of Baskervilles" (UA), mild in N. Y. is hefty in Minneapolis. "Some Like It Hot" (UA) still is sickeroo in 15th week at N.Y. State.

"Diary of Anne Frank" (20th), okay in Minneapolis, is capacity in Toronto and big in N.Y. "World, Flesh, Devil" (M-G) is sad in Buffalo.

"John Paul Jones" (WB) is rated okay in Cincy and Chi. "Imitation of Life" (U), now on circuits and in smaller keys, is fine in Louisville.

DOME TO MOSCOW PARK FOR CIRCARAMA TOP

Washington, July 14.

A second (but smaller) geodesic dome has gone up in Moscow's Sokolniki Park to house Walt Disney's Circarama at the American National Exhibition there, State Dept. advises. In-the-round building will house 500.

Sequences taken here and in Ohio, Michigan and California have been added to the film which was acclaimed at the Brussel's World's Fair last year. Eighteen-minute film was produced with aid of Ford Motor Co. Fund.

LONG ISLANDERS SPURN DUALLERS

In a sea of double-feature situations on Long Island, N.Y., a couple of single-feature spots are blossoming. As a matter of fact, they tend to outgross the dualers.

This was related in N.Y. last week by Sam Baker, exhibition vet who, with his sons, now operates the Associated Independent Theatre in the Island. Circuit is expanding. Three new houses were built last year, and two more are opening, one the Deer Park in the Deer Park-Babylon section and the other the Amity at Amityville.

Frankly optimistic about the future of the business, at least in his situations which cater to the ever-growing mass of people emigrating from the city, Baker said he intended to keep building. His houses are modern 600-seaters, capable of maintaining long runs with top pictures. And all of them offer single-bill programs.

"We build a two-hour show, with shorts run along with the feature," Baker said. "Quite often, we outgross the double-feature houses down the street. I'm convinced that people want single features, particularly if the pictures are good."

Double featuring has long been deplored throughout the industry. Argument has always been that most houses would switch to single features provided the competition did the same. Fear is that the public, if given a choice, will take the "most-for-our-money" approach. Baker's circuit is proving that theory wrong.

'Shackles of Royalty-Rental Terms'

Allied States' Tart Commentary; Goldwyn Started With 'Andersen'; Par's Backdown on '10 C's'

Allied States Assn. contends that Paramount has retreated from its initial policy that demanded royalty payments for children at drive-ins exhibiting "The Ten Commandments." This position, exhibitors charged, forced ozoners, which formerly admitted children free, to charge admission for moppets.

According to Allied, Par's new licensing agreement for drive-ins requires royalty payments for children only if the exhibitor maintains an admission charge for children. Abram F. Myers, Allied's board chairman, reiterates that Par's former policy constituted price fixing. Myers adds that when the drive-ins started charging for children "it brought home to the public the extent to which the film companies were controlling the operating policies and prices of theatres throughout the country, regardless of local conditions . . ."

Par's retreat, says Myers, eases to some extent "the shackles exhibitors must wear when playing under the royalty method," but he emphasizes that "it does not relieve the method of its inherent vice and illegality."

Myers accuses film company attorneys of "vapid sophistry" in their arguments that the royalty system does not violate the injunction against price fixing. How can an exhibitor be free to charge what he wants, Myers asks, if he is required to return so much a head for every man, woman and child admitted. He points out, in addition, that under the royalty system exact uniformity of admission prices has resulted in all parts of the country.

Myers accuses Samuel Goldwyn of introducing the royalty system with his "Hans Christian Andersen" several years ago. A Cincy exhibitor, it was charged, was forced to sign an agreement whereby he was required to pay the distributor, RKO at that time, 32c for each adult and 16c for each child.

The Allied official charges that "sworn law offices of the Government willfully refuse to perform their duty to put its (the royalty method) to the test."

Preminger's Sky-Oh-My

Producer - director Otto Preminger was among the 113 occupants of the Pan Am jet which circled Idlewild four hours Saturday (11) before making a desperation landing because of stripped landing gear. Plane had just taken off for London.

Finally made a belly landing without casualties.

Despite the nervous experience Preminger took the next available plane, went off to Britain.

Britain and Italy To Clutch Rent Coin—Per Habit

Complete freedom of remittances in either Britain or Italy, the two key European territories where such freedom is theoretically in sight, is unlikely, competent observers feel. Even if free convertibility should be decreed in either or both countries, films probably will be exempt.

In Italy, such convertibility is being granted on a limited basis, but the U.S. film biz is bound by a three-year Italian film deal under which remittances have been raised (to $7,000,000 annually). In Britain where, as in Italy, the economic situation has improved, those close to the situation strongly doubt a complete liberalization for films.

The respective governments feel that motion pictures are in a different category from other goods,

Check-List on Hollywood Product

Hollywood, July 14.

Hollywood's current product position—standing at 150 features completed, being edited or in production—clarifies the situation as to film shortage. More than 130 features were released by Hollywood companies during the first six months of this year, and in nearly every case the firms presently have in the can or are producing more than their first six months' product. In other words, current backlogs and pix in production can carry majority of companies through their 1959 releasing schedules.

In the overall category of films completed, being edited or in production, Columbia leads with 28, followed closely by United Artists with 25. Paramount has 17, with Metro and 20th-Fox listing 15 each, Warner Bros. and Allied Artists 9 each, Universal-International 8, Buena Vista 7 and American International 7. Various smaller indie companies will bolster Hollywood output, bringing current figure up to the 150 figure.

Product summary herewith:

Columbia—"Porgy and Bess," "They Came To Cordura," "1001 Arabian Nights," "The Last Angry Man," "The Tingler," "The Legend of Tom Dooley," "Once More, With Feeling," "Babette Goes To War," "Battle of the Coral Sea," "Comanche Station," "The Crimson Kimono," "The Flying Fontaines," "Have Rocket, Will Travel," "Idol On Parade," "Juke Box Rhythm," "Killers of Kilimanjaro," "The 30-Foot Bride of Candy Rock," "Man On a String," "The Mouse That Roared," "Satan's Bucket," "Yesterday's Enemy," "Zex" and "The Warrior and the Slave Girl." In production are "Our Man in Havana," "The Franz Liszt Story," "Suddenly, Last Summer," "The Mountain Road" and "Jazz Boat."

United Artists—"10 Seconds To Hell," "Cry Tough," "The Devil's Disciple," "Cast a Long Shadow," "The Woman and the Puppet," "Summer of the 17th Doll," "Wonderful Country," "Day of the Outlaw," "The Unforgiven," "Solomon and Sheba," "Happy Anniversary," "Odds Against Tomorrow," "On The Beach," "The Rabbit Trap," "The Gallant Hours," "Timbuktu," "Pier 5, Havana," "Inside the Mafia," "Take a Giant Step," "Counterplot," "Gunfighters of Abilene," "The Pusher," "The Outcasts" and "Women Confidential." Shooting is "The Fugitive Kind."

Twentieth-Fox—"Blue Denim," "Blue Angel," "A Private's Affair," "Holiday For Lovers," "The Man Who Understood Women," "The Oregon Trail," "Miracle of the Hills," "Alligator People," "Return of the Fly," "Condemned Patrol." Shooting are "The Best of Everything," "A Journey To the Center of the Earth," "Five Gates To Hell," "A Dog of Flanders" and "Condemned Patrol."

Paramount—"But Not For Me," "Career," "Don't Give Up The Ship" (in pre-release), "The Five Pennies" (in pre-release), "The Hangman" (in pre-release), "Heller With a Gun," "The Jayhawkers," "Last Train from Gun Hill," "The Man Who Could Cheat Death," "One-Eyed Jacks," "Tarzan's Greatest Adventure" (in pre-release), "A Touch of Larceny," "That Kind of Woman" and "Visit to a Small Planet." Shooting are "Savage Innocents," "Li'l Abner" and "Olympia."

Metro—"The Beat Generation," "North By Northwest," "The Big Operator," "The Scapegoat," "For the First Time," "Tarzan, the Ape Man," "Girl's Town," "It Started With a Kiss," "Libel," "Ben-Hur," "The Last Voyage" and "The Time Machine." In production are "Home from the Hill," "The Wreck of the Mary Deare" and "Never So Few."

Warner Bros.—"Yellowstone Kelly," "The Bramble Bush," "A Summer Place," "Guns of the Timberland," "Cash McCall," "John Paul Jones" (in pre-release), "The FBI Story," "The Miracle" and "Island of Lost Women."

Allied Artists—"The Big Circus" (in pre-release), "The Rebel Set," "The Bat," "Face of Fire," "Battle Flame," "Surrender—Hell!," "Web of Evidence" and "Calling North Pole." Shooting is "Atomic Submarine."

Universal—"Pillow Talk," "Operation Petticoat," "The Leech," "Born To Be Loved," "The Snow Queen" and "Sapphire." "Spartacus" and "The Private Lives of Adam and Eve" currently are before the cameras.

Buena Vista—"The Big Fisherman" (in pre-release), "The Jungle Cat," "Third Man on the Mountain," "Toby Tyler" and "101 Dalmations," with "The Silver Skates" and "Kidnapped" now in production.

American International—"The Diary of a High School Bride," "Ghost of Drag Strip Hollow," "Sign of the Gladiator," "The Jailbreakers," "The Leeches" (title to be changed), "Colossus and the Golden Horde" and "The Living Dead" (title to be changed).

Lilting Melody Of 'Imitation'

"Imitation of Life," the picture that revitalized Universal, provided the company with another hypo as a result of its showing in the subsequent-run engagement in the Greater New York area.

Henry H. Martin, U's general sales manager, figures that on the basis of the $700,000 scored in the first seven days at 66 theatres, the total gross should hit $1,000,000 for the full run. The picture played the RKO circuit, other chains on the same split, and independent houses.

Booking of the film into the RKO circuit was on a mixed pattern with 22 of the RKO houses opening the picture on Monday (6). This was on U's insistence because it wanted to avoid the July 4 exodus to the beaches and the country. Five of the other key houses, with locked in "South Pacific" dates, did not open the picture until Wednesday (8). The picture is going eight days in 17 houses, and 10 days in five of the theatres. The 10-day bookings are in houses that are in predominantly Negro neighborhoods, the object, of course, being to cash in on the picture's Negro theme.

The Rebel Set

Well-made crime suspense meller for exploitation or programming.

Hollywood, July 10.

Allied Artists release of E. and L. Production. Stars Gregg Palmer, Kathleen Crowley, Edward Platt, John Lupton. Produced by Earle Lyon. Directed by Gene Fowler Jr. Screenplay, Lou Vittes and Bernard Girard; camera, Karl Struss; music, Paul Dunlap; editor, William Austin. Previewed at the studio, July 9, '59. Running time, 72 MINS.

John Mapes	Gregg Palmer
Jeanne Mapes	Kathleen Crowley
Mr. Tucker	Edward Platt
Ray Miller	John Lupton
Sidney Horner	Ned Glass
George Leland	Don Sullivan
Karen	Vikki Dougan
King Invader	I. Stanford Jolley
Lieut. Cassidy	Robert Shayne
Bali Dancer	Gloria Moreland
Rita Leland	Colette Lyons
Policeman	Joe Marsh

After an unpromising start, when "The Rebel Set" strikes an unconvincing attitude as a story on the beat generation, the film gets down to business as a straight crime suspense melodrama and from then on is reasonably taut and absorbing. Gene Fowler Jr. directed with competence for producer Earle Lyon. "The Rebel Set" will lend itself to exploitation or be a satisfactory program picture.

Plot of the screenplay by Lou Vittes and Bernard Girard is concerned mainly with the holdup of an armored truck carrying $1,000,000 in cash. Edward Platt is the mastermind of the crime. His confederates are three young men, an unsuccessful actor, Gregg Palmer; an unpublished writer, John Lupton; and the ne'er-do-well son, Don Sullivan, of a fading film star. The holdup is a success but the getaway isn't. All are killed except Palmer, who escapes when he has a change of heart and wins leniency for his help to the police.

Fowler, who knows editing and the technical uses of film for dramatic purposes as well as any young director around, uses his knowledge well in building and maintaining suspense through inter-cutting and contrasting shots. Karl Struss' photography is realistic but bright. Paul Dunlap contributes one of his good scores, a considerable help. David Milton's art direction is inventive in locations and backgrounds that suggest the mid-western locale of most of the action.

The cast is capable. In addition to Palmer, Platt, Lupton and Sullivan, particularly notable are Kathleen Crowley, Ned Glass, Nikki Dougan and Collette Lyons.

This is a 20th-Fox summertime package, not designed to tax the intellect but not very likely to ruffle it, either. It's a romantic farce traveiog that plays smoothly with a good many solid laughs. There are drags in spots, the plotting is not always smooth, not all the situations play off. But David Weisbart's production has a good mixture of young players salted with veterans, and Henry Levin's direction keeps things lively.

The point of Luther Davis' screenplay, based on Ronald Alexander's Broadway play, is that daughter, not father, knows best. The point may be questioned by some older members of the audience, but with younger fans it will go down like cherry Coke.

Clifton Webb is a Boston psychiatrist confronted with two daughters, Jill St. John and Carol Lynley, who are simultaneously bursting the adolescent cocoon to fall in love. The plot requires Webb and the girls' mother, Jane Wyman, to trek through South America in frustrated chaperonage. All ends happily, in the contemporary American idiom, when dense parents capitulate to siblings' wishes.

The background of the film, chiefly Sao Paulo and Rio de Janeiro, gives a fine opportunity to show a good deal of spectacular South American landscape and skyscrapers. The long shots of Sao Paulo are particularly interesting. This city makes most North American architecture look parochial, and the freshness of this background gives a lift to the story.

Webb, with his customary acerbity, takes a line and pins it to the wall, often managing to make humor seem like wit. There is some tired dialog, too. Approximate sample: "Mother — Our daughter is studying under a famous South American architect." "Father — Please say with not under."

Miss Wyman has only a few opportunities for laughs but these she gets adroitly, otherwise being an attractively young and harried mother. Miss St. John is pretty, but seems confused by some of her dialog. Carol Lynley is a real film find, a cameo beauty who plays beat or sensitive and makes the transition with finesse. Paul Henreid handles his assignment suavely, and Gary Crosby is a strong comedy asset. Others who register include Nico Minardos, Wally Brown, Henry Backus, Nora O'Mahoney, Buck Class, Al Austin and Tom Hernandez. Gardner McKay, Life magazine's new candidate for Eros, is seen briefly in a crowd scene. Jose Greco, in for a specialty at the film's end, gives the production a sock next-to-closing.

Charles G. Clarke's CinemaScope photography in DeLuxe Color is generally fine, although the superimposed scenes of principals against Brazilian backgrounds are not convincing. Color balance is off and the process work is easily discernible. It would have enhanced the film to have gone all the way for locations. This is not Clarke's fault, of course, and his shots of Sao Paulo and Rio are stunning. Lima is inaccurately reproduced.

There's a catchy title tune by Sammy Cahn and James Van Heusen for further exploitation.

The Alligator People

(C'SCOPE)

Good program horror film packaged with "Return of the Fly."

Hollywood, July 9.

Twentieth-Fox release of a Jack Leewood production. Stars Beverly Garland; co-stars Bruce Bennett, Lon Chaney, George Macready, Frieda Inescort, Richard Crane, Douglas Kennedy; with Vince Townsend Jr., Ruby Goodwin, Hal K. Previewed at the studio, July 8, '59. Running time, 73 MINS.

Nurse No. 1	John Merrick
Nurse No. 2	Lee Warren
Dr. Erik Lorimer	Bruce Bennett
Dr. Wayne McGregor	Doug Kennedy

In "The Alligator People" producer Jack Leewood and director Roy Del Ruth have a good program horror film which 20th-Fox intends to package with "Return of the Fly." Dramatically the stronger of the two, "Alligator" should help the bill considerably and the two pix should do okay in their specialized market.

Orville H. Hampton's screenplay is logically developed and provides some good characterizations which actress Beverly Garland and actors Richard Crane and Lon Chaney make the most of.

The story is told in flashbacks. Two psychiatrists are questioning a nurse, portrayed by Miss Garland, who has been put under pentothal. She tells a story which she doesn't remember while conscious.

Her tale, perhaps imaginary, is that her husband (Richard Crane) abandoned her on their wedding night. After a year's search, she arrives at a mansion in Louisiana's bayou country. Near the mansion is a hideway clinic where a physician (George Macready) is trying to discover an antidote to a serum he had developed.

The serum, extracted from alligators, permits humans to regrow damaged body parts just as some reptiles do. An unforeseen aftereffect—the reason the husband so treated fled from his wife—is that the humans gradually acquire the physical characteristics of alligators.

The wife elects to stand by her horribly disfigured husband, but in his anxiety to return to normal he forces the conscious-stricken doctor to use an untried technique involving radioactive cobalt to cure him. The cure backfires and he is transformed into a real human alligator. In grief and terror he flees to the swamp and dies in quicksand while his hysterical wife watches helplessly. The cobalt machine explodes and destroyes the clinic, the doctor, the other "alligator" patients and the drunk, well played by Lon Chaney, who caused the hitch in the treatment.

The psychiatrists, assuming that the shock may have caused amnesia or that it was a delusion best left undisturbed, elect not to treat the nurse who is apparently happy except when under pentothal.

Hampton's script provides plausible explanations for the implausible and injects warmth and humor at points making the horror more horrible. Equipped with well motivated lines, Miss Garland turns in a fine performance. While Frieda Inescort overacts her well written mother role, the rest of the principal supporting cast does well.

The picture lags in the middle stretch—after the girl has arrived at the mansion but before she discovers her husband—which prevents the film from being exceptional, but it's more than good enough for the market at which it's aimed.

Karl Struss' photography, Arthur Cornell's sound effects and Harry Gerstad's editing are decided plusses and Lyle R. Wheeler and John Mansbridge's art direction is masterful, particularly when the budget is taken into consideration.

Return of the Fly

(C'SCOPE)

Inept sequel to "The Fly." Quickie bookings may exploit the original's reputation.

Hollywood, July 9.

Twentieth-Fox release of Bernard Glasser production. Stars Vincent Price; co-stars Brett Halsey, David Frankham, John Sutton, Dan Seymour; features Danielle De Metz, Janine Grandel, Richard Flato; with Barry Bernard, Pat O'Hara, Jack Daly, Michael Mark, Gregg Martell, Francisco Villalobas, Joan Cotton. Directed by Edward L. Bernds. Screenplay by Bernds; camera, Brydon Baker; editor, Richard C. Meyer; music, Paul Sawtell, Bert Shefter. Previewed at studio, July 8, '59. Running time, 78 MINS.

Francois	Vincent Price
Philippe	Brett Halsey
Alan	David Frankham
Charas	John Sutton
Max Barthold	Dan Seymour
Cecile	Danielle De Metz
Mme. Bonnard	Janine Grandel
Dubois	Richard Flato

"Return of the Fly" was conceived and executed as a sequel to "The Fly" in order to cash in on the latter's reputation as a grosser. On the title alone, it should make back its relatively modest budget and may turn a small profit.

Word-of-mouth will injure the film's chances, however, because, with justice, it will be unfavorably compared with the first, which was a superior horror film.

The sequel's amateurishly contrived plot picks up at the death of the inventor's widow, who had been acquitted of murdering him. Vincent Price, the only actor carried over from the original, explains to the inventor's now-grown son, played by Brett Halsey, the plot of the other picture.

Halsey's mother, Price explains, had actually crushed his father in a high-pressure press at the man's request. The inventor had botched an experiment which resulted in his head and right arm being replaced with those of a fly. He chose suicide because the fly's instincts were beginning to rule him.

It's typical of writer-director Edward Bernds' script that this incredible and dreadful tale, told to the loving son himself on the day of his mother's funeral, should be made to seem almost banal for a lack of imaginative dialog and absence of appropriate tempo in the scene. What follows is one unmotivated episode after another, loosely tied to the theme that the son, in following in his father's footsteps, will come to the same bad end. An obnoxious reporter is featured in initial scenes but simply doesn't appear in later scenes, although he was clearly being set up for some horrible demise.

Suspense is attempted by making the son's assistant a traitor who is trying to steal the secret of the "matter transmitter." Horror is achieved when the assistant uses the device to scramble a policeman's corpse with a guinea pig and to scramble the inventor's scientist son with a fly.

Halsey, with a fly's head and limbs, kills the assistant and his confederate but these deeds are not depicted as the crimes they certainly are. Ultimately, Halsey is unscrambled and co-eds will be relieved to see his handsome face again; their dates will appreciate his girlfriend Danielle De Metz. John Sutton is wasted in the Herbert Marshall role. Dan Seymour does a good characterization of the slimy confederate and David Frankham does his best with the assistant role. Considering the

Berlin, July 14.

Serena Film (Rome) (Romano Dandi) production. Stars Maurizio Arena, Giovanna Ralli. Directed by Paolo Heusch. Screenplay, Fausto Tozzi; camera, Roberto Gerardi; music, Carlo Rustichelli, Piero Umiliani. At Zoo Palast, Berlin. Running time, 95 MINS.

An interesting theme has been smoothly developed in this Berlin festival entry. The subject has a boxing background, and the central male characters are the champ who is beginning to slide from the peak, and the novice who is starting to climb.

Careers of the two men are viewed through the eyes of the women in their lives. The champ has married the novice's sister at the height of his career, and she has to suffer the subsequent humiliation and misery of poverty.

Although the development is somewhat uneasy, the overall effect yields a holding entertainment. The two femme roles are filled by lookers, and acting all round is okay.

(JAPANESE—C'SCOPE)

Berlin, July 14.

Toei (Hiroshi Okawa) Motion Picture Co. (Tokyo) production and release. Stars Tatsuya Nakadai, Hitomi Nakahara, directed by Miyoji Ieki. Screenplay, Kazutoshi Himuro, Kaneto Shindo; camera, Giyu Miyajima; music, Yasushi Akutagawa. At Zoo Palast, Berlin. Running time, 85 MINS.

A pleasant disarming tale of a young lover's tiff, "The Naked Sun" is a competently made pic which has basic entertainment ingredients, but no outstanding qualities to hypo it in Western markets.

The two principal characters in the story are a young couple who deny themselves the little luxuries so that they can save to get married. Then, impetuously, the boy lends all their savings to a friend, and the girl is furious. But she relents later when she learns the money was needed to help someone undergo surgery.

Both the stars play their respective roles with a measure of charm. Direction is smooth, and handled. CinemaScope lensing is fine.

DeLuxe Film Distributoris (Calcutta) production and release. Stars Bharati Devi and Monju Adhikary. Directed by Debaki Kumar Bose. Camera, Bimal Mukherjee; screenplay, Premen Mitra and Bose; music, B. C. Boral. At Zoo Palast, Berlin. Running time, 90 MINS.

A modest production, obviously intended primarily for local consumption, "The Holy Island" hardly merited a late night screening at an international film fest. It's a slow, tedious subject, naively acted and directed, with no chances whatsoever in Western markets.

This is a story of a childless widow, shipwrecked while en route to the Holy Island, who rescues a brat of a girl, and finds herself developing maternal instincts towards the child, against her better judgment. It's virtually a two-character yarn and is related in a pedestrian way, without warmth, without humor and without shading. Inadequate lighting robs the pic of its scenic values, too.

(BRAZILIAN—COLOR)

Berlin, July 14.

Carlos Hugo Christensen production. Directed by Christensen. Camera (Agfacolor), Anibal Gonzales Paz; screenplay, Pedro Bloch. At Berlin Film Fest. 116 MINS.

The Girl	Suzana Freyre
First Man	Fabio Cardoso
Second Man	Jardel Filho
Third Man	Domingo Alzugaray

As a feature film, this has little if any value. However, as a documentary about the Brazilian capital, it's an appealing item. Pic offers a number of excellent shots of the "world's most beautiful city." If properly cut to about 80 to 90 minutes, "Rio" stands a good commercial chance on the European market.

The story line that goes through the whole thing is harmless but occasionally very amusing. It concerns a young Argentinian girl, who has won a trip to Rio de Janeiro on a tele quiz. Three young men—a pilot, a playboy and a journalist—fall in love with her. With each of them, she experiences the excitement of this city. The Agfacolor camera exploits the latter substantially.

(MEXICAN)

Berlin, July 14.

Cinematografica Latino Americana, Mexico (Alallo Rubio Jr.), production and release. Stars Jack Palance, Maria Felix, Pedro Armendariz and Juanito Musquiz. Directed by Roberto Gavaldon. Screenplay, Edwin Blum, Julien Silvera from a novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez; camera, Gabriel Figueroa; music, Gustavo C. Carrion. At Congress Hall, Berlin. Running time, 100 MINS.

Althoug it has Jack Palance as a name for the marquee, this Mexican film, which was the windup presentation for the Berlin Festival, is a sub-standard entry with mild entertainment values and limited commercial chances. It's naive, sentimental and unsophisticated to a degree.

Palance plays the heavy, the role of an American adventurer who returns to a Mexican fishing village and meets up again with the girl he once loved. She's married to a wealthy fisherman and her husband soon suspects—with justification—that the visitor is the father of the boy he believed to be his own child. Leisurely direction and indifferent scripting are matched by casual performances. Maria Felix plays the woman, Pedro Armandariz, the husband and Juanito Musquiz, the son.

A remake of a famous silent film, this Swedish production is arty-type pic with a somewhat involved and confusing story-line. Slow in development, it is nicely photographed and directed. Commercially, its prospects must be restricted, but it will have some appeal to ardent cinema patrons who respect and admire the current Swedish trends in film-making.

The plot is based on the old legend about the last person to die on New Year's eve. The victim is George Fant. Once he's dead, he looks back on a miserable past of suffering and drunkenness. It's largely an essay in despair and hope, but thanks to a fine cast is occasionally very moving.

This drama about love, honor and duty shapes mainly a local Spanish bet. It offers good acting, some suspense plus a number of nice dialog sequences. However, the theme and an overdose of pathos and passion makes this an item that's not of much interest outside of Spain.

A Spanish officer has been sentenced to death but is granted a leave before the execution. First, he intends to flee with his girl but later decides to remain a man of honor and choses death. Direction is somewhat slow. Technical credits are fair.

The title character in this Finnish production is an historic figure of the Finnish-Russian war of some 150 years ago. He's a sort of good soldier Schweik, but without the cunning and guile of the legendary Czech soldier.

The war scenes are capably handled, with an adequate amount of action. This is counterbalanced by a deft light touch, introducing a humorous note at the right moment. There's not much subtlety in the plot. However, the femme star (Salme Karppinen is an attractive, well-developed blonde with an easy thesping style. Her costar, Veikko Sinisalo, is an able actor and realistically suggests the simpleton soldier.

BLUENOSES FASHIONABLE IN CHI

Wave of Shock Hits Churches

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

When the U.S. Supreme Court recently ruled that New York State unreasonably denied license to the French film based on D. H. Lawrence's novel, "Lady Chatterley's Lover," the decision cited that the right to advocate unpopular viewpoints and theories was implicit in the Bill of Rights. That sounded routine enough. But the Court then spelled it out more explicitly: among the viewpoints which were unpopular, but not unconstitutional, was advocacy of adulterous relations in some circumstances.

This was the jolt that rocked the church world. It had to. The very idea would be repugnant. Moreover "Thou Shalt Not Commit Adultery" is one of the 10 Commandments. Hence a predictable wave of shock has passed cross-country and is echoing in many a state legislation. not to mention the United States senate.

One reader of VARIETY called to urge that this publication canvass the clergy of the various Christian and Jewish bodies to see what they had to say. But why? It is simply not possible to imagine any cleric having a pro-Court comment. Of course all moral elements are of one mind if approval of adultery seems involved. A canvas of opinion could be written in advance.

The situation involving "Chatterley" is loaded in the way the old courtroom question, "Have you stopped beating your wife?" is loaded. An issue of the licensing authority and of the right to delete or deny dramatic situations has been tied to another can of worms entirely. As the critics have since pointed out, the cause of this remarkably snarled-up controversy, the film itself. now that it has been shown in public, seems singularly oldfashioned and in no way different from many another "triangle" plot.

General comment at the present time is that a new tidal wave of attempted censorship has been exploded by the adultery-advocacy-is-a-right bomb. The echoes are readily predictable in the fall and winter to come.

Manchester Bum-Raps Film Ads

'They Could Not Print Any Copy, and Spare Themselves Apologies'

Manchester, N.H., July 14.

Manchester Union-Leader, New Hampshire's largest newspaper, has admitted that imposing its own censorship on film theatre advertisements is not an easy task.

When a reader wrote to the newspaper, complaining about a recent ad, the newspaper replied: "Strict orders have been given to the advertising staff not to accept any advertisements such as the one referred to, but once in a while one gets by. It is almost a full-time job to censor and clean up the moving picture advertisements being offered this newspaper. 'We have repeatedly turned down theatre advertisements involving considerable amounts of money, rather than publish obscene advertisements."

Film theatre operators in this area are thoroughly weary of the Manchester Union-Leader's holier-than-thou slant on ticket-selling copy. One comments, "They take the money, don't they? Maybe they could refuse all film ads and save themselves the embarrassment of their apologies."

It is not denied that the newspaper has refused ads and probably settled for smaller space or no space in some instances. What riles show business is that the paper incessantly sides with the pious carpers. They are always "justified" in their complaints and the film industry is always "guilty" in its practices.

To the showmen of the territory the film industry is consistently bum-rapped by the newspaper to court favor with the bluenoses, of which the area is not believed to have any undue proportion.

Space Age Role Of Films, Video

Role of films and tv in the space age will be the theme of the 86th semi-annual convention of the Society of Motion Picture and Television Engineers in N. Y. Oct. 5-9.

Various papers to be read at the convention will concern themselves with the application and development of techniques to be used in space travel.

Convention will feature an exhibit of the latest film and tv equipment.

Knickerbocker News Raps 'Naked Maja' Postcards, Defends Postoffice Ban

Albany, July 14.

U. S. Postoffice recent ruling that reproduction of the famous painting "Maja Nude" by Francisco de Goya "may not pass through the mails in the form of a postcard sales pitch for a motion picture in which the traditional title of the painting has been changed to 'The Naked Maja.'" was editorially defended (9) by Gannett's Albany Knickerbocker News. "This may look like censorship of a great masterpiece, but it isn't that sort of censorship," asserted the paper. This, of course, is the United Artists ballyhoo for the Ava Gardner feature.

P.O. via its judicial officer, Charles D. Ablard, had gone into the question, pending for more than three months. "not only with a view to protecting its own integrity but incidentally preserving the dignity of an art treasure marked for exploitation and debasement," the editorial continued.

"The ruling sets forth that use of the painting with its revamped title was not just in bad taste, but obscene," The Knickerbocker News observed. "It not only plugged a motion picture under that title, but also one called 'Some Like It Hot.'"

The paper doubted if "the purveyors of this sort of thing will find much, if any, support among artists, for a very good reason . . . study of the nude figure is one of the indispensable fields of serious art study . . . nakedness is not, and the difference in the terms is well recognized in any studio that pretends to be devoted to art."

The editorial concluded: "It doesn't take an artist, nor even an art student, to discern the purpose of Hollywood in substituting the new title for the widely accepted old one. The connotation is clear and the general public can feel its repellent nature, as would Goya. Here is an instance where Shakespeare's remark about 'a rose by an other name' goes into the reverse."

A censored form was used to advertise "The Naked Maja" in both Albany dailies.

STUDY HARD TO STAY ARCHAIC

Chicago, July 14.

The city last week finally submitted its promised revision of the motion picture censorship ordinance, intended to restore to the police the power to limit films to adult audiences. At present, the censors can't issue restrictive permits but instead must ban a film outright if it displeases them.

Revised code differs from the current one only by reducing the juvenile age top from 21 to 18. Power to limit features to adults was ruled unconstitutional several months ago when Paramount won in the courts the right to show "Desire Under the Elms" here without permit restrictions. Corporation Counsel John Melaniphy, however, said he thought the revision, virtually sure of adoption, would stand up in court tests.

At the same time, the City Council resurrected a measure that would plain eliminate censor scrutiny provided the picture is exhibited only for adults. Films intended for general audiences, though, would still require censor board approval and a permit.

No one, not even its author, independent Ald. Leon Despres, expects this proposal to pass. Its only conceivable hope would be press pressure in the extreme, and that's most unlikely.

But while Chi's censorship code with the proposed revision would not basically alter blue pencil authority, sentiment appraisers close to the police commissioner and the censors believe it would be applied henceforth with much the same effect sought by the drastic Despres bill. Basis for the feeling is that Chi censorship is now at its groggiest from court blows, latest setback being over Otto Preminger's "Anatomy of a Murder" (see separate story).

America's Worse?

More vigorous critics of local picture censorship claim it's the most archaic extant in America, and high city officialdom is pictured by insiders as juggling a "hot potatoe" it can't, or doesn't know how to, dispose of. One of the unhappiest, it's said, is Police Commissioner Timothy O'Connor. He gets it enough from the press anent crime syndicate doings, without the added discomfiture of editorial needles on his censorship posture.

Mayor Daley, a most politic gent, has kept pretty much aloof from the censorship hassling, refusing to upset decisions of the six widows who sit in picture judgment. He tends to view the squabbles as small concern against the weightier problems of administrating a big city; but it's understood he would support, at least privately, a sensible (in the judgment, i.e., of censor foes) overhaul of the censorship structure. Subject is the more sensitive at this time because of efforts to re-shape the image of Chicago as a progressive town, a world seaport with plenty of culture to offer.

The Adultery Issue

Washington, July 14.

How the Supreme Court decision on "Lady Chatterley's Lover" is being adopted as a moral issue of the day was evident in an air debate over American Forum of the Air, the Ted Granik panel show, for Westinghouse stations.

Senator Sam Ervin of North Carolina: "The right of freedom of speech is not absolute and does not contemplate that people preach adultery and encourage its practice."

Senator Jacob Javits of New York: "The Court is not encouraging adultery. All it is saying is that the public has the right to buy or not buy as it chooses, and that is what a free America is about."

Majors Benefit From Censor Battles But Let Indies Bear Whole Brunt

Paradox of U.S. Courts: Curb Censors as Persons But Leave Censorship

Unwillingness on the part of the U.S. Supreme Court to rule on the basic constitutionality of pre-release censorship of motion pictures has, in effect, put the courts into the position of becoming censors themselves.

Situation was pointed up again in Chicago recently when Judge Julius H. Miner, after viewing "Anatomy of a Murder," reversed the ban of the Chicago police censor on the picture, but affirmed the city's right to refuse a license to films which are either obscene or immoral. "Taken as a whole, the film cannot be placed in the category of the obscene or the immoral because its dominant effect does not tend to excite sexual passion or undermine public morals."

What appears to be happening is that, in the absence of some final ruling on the constitutional legality of pre-release censorship, it'll be up to individual Federal judges —or to the Supreme Court itself— to determine on their own whether or not a censor board erred in banning a given picture. Since the question involved is largely one of degree, and no amount of "defining" of terms can change this, the judges' final decision must inevitably root in his views and attitudes as an individual rather than a legalistic analysis.

Some of the justices on the U.S. Supreme Court appear to be aware of this. Filing their concurring opinions in the "Lady Chatterley's Lover" case recently, Justices William O. Douglas and Hugo Black minced no words. "Censorship of movies is unconstitutional since it is a form of 'previous restraint,'" they wrote, adding that it was "at war" with both the First and Fourteenth Amendments. The justices noted that the Constitution did not provide for "reasonable" regulation of communications media. But, they said, the language of the First Amendment, in absolute terms, "is utterly at war with censorship."

Censorship experts feel that, while Black and Douglas have sympathizers among their colleagues on the High Court, none of the rest want to go as far as these two, and there is no likelihood of any early negative ruling that would pronounce prior censorship unconstitutional. Thus, future censorship cases will have to be fought up to the Court, which will judge each case on its merits and—depending on the contents of the film—will either reverse the censors or sustain them.

While the prospect of having judges act as censors doesn't appeal to film people, some of them prefer this to a new and drastic situation in which censorship would be outlawed, to be replaced by a mushrooming number of over-zealous police boards.

COLUMBIA SHOOTS 8, MAJORITY OVERSEAS

Hollywood, July 14.

Columbia Pictures this week has eight films currently before the cameras, a new high. Five are shooting overseas.

Starting yesterday at studio were George Sidney's "Who Was That Lady?" produced by Norman Krasna from his own play, and Philip A. Waxman's "The Gene Krupa Story." Charles Schneer likewise launched "Gulliver's Travels" in Spain, for Columbia release.

Pair of William Goetz productions are locationing, "The Franz Liszt Story," in Germany, and "The Mountain Road," Arizona. Three other films for Columbia release are lensing in London: Sam Spiegel's "Suddenly, Last Summer"; Carol Reed's "Our Man in Havana"; Warwick's "Jazz Boat."

The major companies were accused last week of failing to support—financially and morally—the anti-censorship fights of the independents.

Edward L. Kingsley, whose Kingsley-International fought the "Lady Chatterley's Lover" case up to the U.S. Supreme Court and won, said the Motion Picture Assn. of America was guilty of "neglect" in not coming to the aid of an outfit like his own when it's engaged in battling the censors.

"After all, they benefit from it later on," Kingsley said. "We pave the way for them and they reap the benefits. But when it comes to helping a small company fight it out, they turn the other way."

Kingsley noted that, with American films becoming more candid and frank, the question of censorship was bound to loom more importantly as time went by.

Most of the important censorship decisions have come over foreign films. Jean Goldwurm and Kingsley have been in the forefront of the indies who've fought it out with the bluepencillors. MPAA, while active in the censorship field, hasn't come out openly to support the indies. One of the reasons for this, it's said, is that MPAA finds it embarrassing to support a foreign film if its own Code wouldn't issue a seal to the picture.

Kingsley stressed the importance of a new indie organization (now forming) in actively opposing film censorship. "You can't ask individual small companies to carry the burden," he said. Estimated cost of Kingsley-International in fighting the "Lady Chatterley" case to the High Court—$20,000.

Revise Paramount Plan for Canada

In a new setup brought about by George Weltner, Paramount global distribution v.p., the Paramount subsidiary, Paramount Film Service Ltd. of Canada, will utilize the management services of Par's domestic distribution organization. In other words, the Canadian organization will now put to use personnel and facilities of Par Film Distributing Corp. in connection with distribution and promotion of Par promotion of Par product in the Dominion.

Management services and supervision will be under the direction of Sidney Deneau, who'll also continue as v.p. of the western domestic distribution end of Par. Gordon Lightstone will continue as general manager of Par of Canada.

According to Weltner, the new move is designed to enable the Canadian operation, which is comprised of six branches, to be of greater service to Canadian exhibitors in the area of sales planning, advertising and exploitation.

Meeting of the Canadian Par execs with homeoffice brass anent the new setup is scheduled for tomorrow and Friday (16-17) in New York.

DIVERT THE KIDS SO MOTHERS MAY SHOP

Northfield, Minn., July 14.

Merchants in this college town are having the only film theatre here do the joint baby-sitting job for parents throughout the area summer Saturday afternoons.

The storekeepers are sponsoring Saturday afternoon free shows for children of 12 and under at the Grand theatre for the next 10 weeks.

Idea is to have the parents park their offspring in the theatre while they go Saturday shopping in the stores. Films are chosen for their special juvenile appeal and appropriateness.

Playhouse (T-L) (458; $1-$1.80)—"Middle of Night" (Col) (2d wk). Smash $13,000 following $15,000 opener. Stays on.

Chi OK; 'Murder' Wham 46G; 'North' Boff 35G, 'Story' Hot 29G, Both 2d, 'Horse' Stout 27G, 'Hole' Sock 28G

Chicago, July 14.

Comfortable weather and blockbuster array continue to keep deluxer biz here on hep side despite a few soft spots. "Anatomy of a Murder," abetted by the censor row which it won in court, looms giant $46,000 on Woods preem. Monroe's "Riot in Juvenile Prison" plus "Guns, Girls, Gangsters" shape nice $5,000.

"North by Northwest," after notching great world preem stanza, sights boff second round at United Artists. In ditto frame, "Nun's Story" looks nice at the Chicago.

"John Paul Jones" is good at Roosevelt for second. Garrick's "Darby O'Gill and Little People" shapes nice in second.

"Horse Soldiers" still is solid in third round at State-Lake. Oriental's "Hole in Head" shapes socko in fourth session.

"Five Pennies" is dandy at the Esquire in third. "Al Capone" is rated brisk in 10th round at Todd's Cinestage. "Gigi" is trim again in 20th session at the Loop.

Lone hard-ticketer, "South Seas Adventure," pushed to stout $20,000 in 42d round at Palace.

'Train' Fast $10,000 In K.C.; 'Girl' 8G, 'Story' 7G, 'For Me' Loud 8½G

Kansas City, July 14.

Two newcomers are chalking up big figures, to join a long list of holdovers. "Last Train from Gun Hill" at Paramount is big. "Ask Any Girl" is giving the Midland a good week. "Nun's Story" at Missouri in second week, and "Say One for Me" at Roxy in third week both are stout. "Go, Johnny, Go" new in three Fox Midwest houses is pleasant. "Horse Soldiers" for third week at Plaza is satisfactory.

Estimates for This Week

Capri (Durwood) (628; $1.50, $2.25, $2.50) — "South Pacific" (Magna) (16th wk). Steady $6,000. Last week, $7,000.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

'Earth' Wow 15G, Toronto; 'Room' 8G

Toronto, July 14.

Among newcomers, "This Earth is Mine" is wham, with "Shake Hands with the Devil" okay. Of the holdovers, "Five Pennies" is hefty but "Sleeping Beauty" is disappointing in five-house tiein, both in second stanzas. "Horse Soldiers" just okay in third frame. However, "Diary of Anne Frank" in fourth stanza, and "Room at Top" in seventh frame, show no change at the wickets over last week.

Estimates for This Week

Towne (Taylor) (695; 75-$1.25)—"Room at Top" (Cont) (7th wk). Lusty $8,000. Last week, ditto.

Uptown (Loew) (2,745; 75-$1.25) —"This Earth Is Mine" (U). Wow $15,000 or near. Last week, "Mysterians" (M-G) (2d wk), $4,500 for 5 days.

'STORY' SOCKEROO 12G, OMAHA; 'TRAIN' BIG 7G

Omaha, July 14.

Thanks to a pair of strong new entries, biz is soaring at downtown first-runs this round. "Nun's Story" is boffo at Orpheum, Tri-States flagship, and figures to hold. "Last Train from Gun Hill" looms big at the Omaha. "Sleeping Beauty" is good in fourth stanza at State. Remarkable hard-ticket "South Pacific" remains bangup in 38th week at the Cooper.

Estimates for This Week

Cooper (Cooper) (708; $1.50-$2.20) — "South Pacific" (Magna) (38th wk). Heatthy $6,300. Last week, $6,000.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,066; 75-$1) — "Last Train from Gun Hill" (Par). Big $7,000. Last week, "Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) (2d wk), $6,000.

'Story' Rousing $19,000, Pitt; 'Hercules' Brisk 12G, 'For Me' Loud 9G

Pittsburgh, July 14.

Holdovers are playing at all five downtown houses with "Love is My Profession" at the nabe Squirrel Hill the only new entry. It's boff. Biggest sock in town is "Nun's Story" at Warner, now in second week. "Hercules" cooled down a little but still was comparatively big in second stanza at Stanley. "Horse Soldiers" is rated fair in third week at Penn. "Say One For Me" stays strong in third at Harris. "This Earth Is Mine" also is solid in third Fulton session.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,635; 85-$1.50)—"This Earth Is Mine" (U) (3d wk). Solid $6,000. Last week, $6,600.

Harris (Harris) (2,100; $1-$1.50) —"Say One For Me" (20th) (3d wk). Hefty $9,000. Last week, $9,500.

'Earth' Mighty $18,000 in Hub; 'Murder' $21,000

Boston, July 14.

Heat is still slugging the boxoffice here, but opening of department stores Saturday (11) helped some. Holdovers predominate but the two new entries, "Anatomy of Murder" at Gary and "This Earth Is Mine" at Memorial, both are smash. "Hole In Head" leads the holdovers, being smash in second week at State. "Hercules" shapes great in second at Pilgrim. "Nun's Story" is still big in third round at Metropolitan.

"Five Pennies" looks okay at Paramount in third. "Horse Soldiers" is still bright in third week at Orpheum. "Ask Any Girl" is lively at the Saxon in fourth week.

"Room at Top" is longest run grind in Hub in ninth frame at Kenmore and still amazing.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (B&Q) (1,381; $1.25-$1.50) —"Don't Give Up Ship" (Par) (2d wk). Smash $10,000. First week, $13,000.

N.Y. Holds Up Despite No New Films; 'Murder' Boffo 75G, 2d, 'Story' Hotsy 160G, 4th, 'Porgy' Capacity $37,000

Despite the lack of newcomers, Broadway first-run trade is holding up well in current session. Compartively mild summer weather plus some rainy days, is proving a plus factor. Biggest coin for straight-filmer is going to "Anatomy of A Murder," with a mighty $51,500 for second stanza at the Criterion and great $23,500 or over for second at the arty Plaza.

Greatest coin total continues to go to "Nun's Story" with stageshow at the Music Hall with a smash $160,000 in fourth session at the Music Hall. "Porgy and Bess" still is capacity $37,033 for second round at the Warner.

"Horse Soldiers" is heading for smash $36,200 in current (3d) week at the Astor. "This Earth Is Mine" with stageshow looks fair $44,000 in third-final round at the Roxy, where "Big Circus" opens next Friday.

"Five Pennies" is heading for fine $32,000 in fourth week at the Capitol. "Say One For Me" looks to hit nice $31,000 in fourth at the Paramount. "Some Like It Hot" is winding up the final (15th) week of 10 days at the State with a big $35,000 or close. "Hole in Head" replaces today (Wed.) though "Hot" could have continued. But the distrib wanted to get it out on N.Y. circuits.

"Middle of Night" hit lively $14,000 in fourth stanza at the Forum and big $11,500 for same week at the arty Trans-Lux 52d Street where day-dating. "Hound of Baskervilles" looks lean $12,500 in second round at the Victoria, with "10 Seconds To Hell" replacing next Friday.

"Diary of Anne Frank" continues to thrive on continuous-run at the Palace with a potent $16,000 for 17th frame and second on current pop-scale policy. "John Paul Jones" looks only thin $7,500 in fourth week at the Rivoli. "The Fisherman" is due in Aug. 5.

"Gigi" held with a wham $16,900 in 36th stanza at the Sutton while "Room At Top" was great $13,800 in 15th session at the Fine Arts. "Grand Illusion" looks to hold with sock $9,300 on reissue run at the Baronet.

Philadelphia, July 14.

Biz shapes good at many local first-runs this session, with some new entries helping the over-all total, and many holdovers coming through with amazing trade. "Big Circus" looks solid opening week at the 1,200-seat Goldman but not as big as hoped for. "Middle of Night" is rated great at the Trans-Lux.

"Say One For Me" still is sockeroo in second at Arcadia. "Nun's Story" looms boffo in third Randolph round. "This Earth Is Mine" looks smash in third at Stanton. "Horse Soldiers" shapes very big in third at the Fox.

Estimates for This Week

'HORSE' HEFTY $8,000, PROV.; 'HERCULES' 7½G

Providence, July 14.

Weather is always a factor hereabouts in the summer, a dull, rainy Sunday will help the main houses this week. Majestic with "Hercules" holdover and State's second with "Horse Soldiers" are both still fairly active. Second of "This Earth Is Mine" at RKO Albee is just okay. "Don't Give Up Ship" moved into Strand after "Sleeping Beauty" fell part in second.

Estimates for This Week

Editor, VARIETY:

Regarding the statement in VARIETY that "Great Is My Country" is "the first Soviet picture to play on Broadway since 1943," note that on Sept. 27, 1945. "The Fall of Berlin" opened at the Victoria. This was a feature-length documentary, produced by the Central Documentary Film Studios of Moscow, and directed by Yuri Reisman. The two previous Soviet films on Broadway also played the Victoria: "They Met In Moscow" (opened 6/6/1944) and "The City That Stopped Hitler—Heroic Stalingrad" (9/4/1943).

SOLLY BAIANO REJOINS WB AS TALENT EXEC

Hollywood, July 14.

Solly Baiano, longtime Warner Bros. talent exec, this week returned to the studio after an eight-month stint with Screen Gems, Columbia's vidpix subsid. At Screen Gems, Baiano was in charge of scouting new talent for pilot films, but deal didn't work out.

Baiano will return to the same post he held at Warners for 20 years previous, in charge of scouting and signing new talent. Duties will cover both pix and tv, since Warner termpacts require its stars to work in both media.

'Diary of Anne Frank' to Moscow

George Stevens Film (20th) Is State's Choice— Runs 'Out of Competition'

The U.S. State Dept. has picked George Stevens' "The Diary of Anne Frank" to represent the U.S. at the Moscow film festival in August. The picture will be shown out-of-competition.

Five titles in all were submitted to the State Dept. by the film companies as possible choices for Moscow. They included, besides "Diary," "Black Orchid," "The Big Circus," "A Hole in the Head" and "The Mating Game." Final choice of "Diary" was made by an interdepartmental committee in Washington Monday (13).

Although the 20th-Fox film deals with a young Jewish girl and her family in Nazi-occupied Amsterdam, the State Dept. nevertheless felt that the picture had the kind of artistic merit which qualified it as the best available Yank entry. Decision to send "Diary" was made with the approval of the Motion Picture Export Assn., even though MPEA took no part in the selection of the film. Two shorts also will be shown in Moscow. They'll be picked in anotherr week.

This is the second time that "Diary" runs out-of-competition. It was shown the same way at the Cannes film fest earlier this year. The Moscow festival is skedded Aug. 3-17.

There is a possibility that a second American film may be invited for showing in Moscow. Whether, in such a case, the Government would allow this to be done is unclear. Washington isn't at all happy about the affair in the first place. It's staying clear of the competitive part of the festival, partly because it feels that the Soviets arranged the affair to detract attention from the American Exhibition in Moscow.

Decision on whether or not the Americans will participate at any festival, and how, is made by a committee in Washington under Turner B. Shelton, film chief of the U.S. Information Agency. Shelton is the Government's liaison man with the film biz when it comes to dealings with the Communist bloc.

One interesting aspect of "Diary" and the Soviets is that, for a long time, the Russians wouldn't allow the play to be performed in the Soviet Union. Reason given was that the piece represented "passive resistance." While the "villains" in "Diary" are obviously the Nazis, the picture carefully underplays the anti-German angle and concentrates on Anne Frank and her companions in the attic hideaway.

By keeping the American entry out of the competition, the U.S. skips fest rules providing for the subsequent exhibition of fest pictures in the Soviet Union.

'OUR MAN IN HAVANA' NEARING COMPLETION

By HALSEY RAINES

London, July 14.

Americans celebrated the Fourth of July week-end by shooting in the streets of London. The shooting was of a non-violent nature, it was done with a big Mitchell camera, and the Americans concerned were Maureen O'Hara and Columbia's new 19-year-old star, Jo Morrow.

So that the schedule of activities at the Shepperton studios would not be disturbed, exteriors for Carol Reed's "Our Man in Havana" were made on the week-end along Burlington Gardens and on Great George Street, off Parliament Square. Alec Guinness and Noel Coward took part in the sequences, along with the two American femme stars.

Multi-star feature, one of Columbia's all-time biggest, is rolling along smoothly, with another four weeks of studio work here required to wind up a four-months' schedule. Ralph Richardson, who began work on his part last week, will carry along the dual assignment of reporting at 8 a.m. each day at Shepperton, 20 miles outside London, and leaving there by 4:30 p.m. in time to motor back to London, have dinner and get to Globe Theatre for the 7:30 p.m. curtain of his current play, "The Complaisant Lover."

Taxes and Fruit Flies

Washington, July 14.

Federal departments are patting themselves on the back for response to their recent documentary films.

Internal Revenue Service reports that more than 40 million persons have seen the new 27-minute "Since the Beginning of Time," which shows what makes the world's largest tax organization tick. It has also been selected for entry in the International Film Festival in Edinburgh in August.

The Dept., of Agriculture's "Rise and Fall of the Medfly," depicting the successful Florida campaign against the Mediterranean fruit fly, is an official government entry at the International Exhibition of Scientific-Didactic Films being held at the University of Padua, Italy, Oct. 30.

Theatres Under Fed Minimum Of $1-$1.25 an Hr.?

Washington, July 14.

Motion picture theatres would be brought under the Federal minimum wage law at $1 per hour (stepped up to $1.25 after four years for houses grossing over $750,000 annually) under a bill approved Friday (10) by the Senate Labor Subcommittee.

Next step for it is a vote by the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, the subcommittee's

Zanuck Has Two Film Properties Ready For Prod. Overseas in Fall

Paris, July 14.

Darryl Zanuck now has two properties ready to go in October and November in Corsica and Israel, with five others nearing completion. Zanuck told VARIETY that new locales and fresh approaches were needed in Yank pix akin to the so-called "new wave" of production here.

Zanuck opined that the "new wave" had brought offbeat subject matter back into films, but this had been gone through in the U. S. when he started the early downbeat gangster cycles in America.

Zanuck feels that the star system was now overrated and that the story was the thing. A good film sans stars could make it but, naturally a good one with stars was still a bigger item. However, the new trends in filmgoing made an ordinary picture with big stars a chancey entry.

Zanuck's two pix ready to go are "The Fish Don't Bite," a comedy drama written by John Fanti, and "The Dangerous Ones," a tale of Israeli youth today, penned by Meyer Levin, a longtime Israeli resident. Zanuck added that Levin's penchant for suing had him sign a contract with Levin in which the latter promised not to sue no matter what changes were made in the script.

Zanuck looks to keep his headquarters in Europe. He is also looking-seeing the Hollywood productions of his son, Richard Zanuck. Zanuck opined that the good showing of "Compulsion" (20th), sans any big stars, bore out his point regarding story and stars.

Roof Fire Loss 50G's

Mercedes, Tex., July 14.

Roof of the Rio Theatre was damaged by a fire that destroyed a building adjacent to the theatre. The total loss to both structures was reported to be near $50,000.

Rio had closed for the night when the fire broke out.

'Six Widows' as Chicago Censors; Preminger Defeats Their Prudery On 'Anatomy of Murder' Dialog

Chicago, July 14.

Otto Preminger is the latest filmite to kayo Chicago's motion picture censor board. As generally expected, his "Anatomy of a Murder" was greenlighted in court last Wednesday (8) and opened a few hours later at the Woods Theatre, where it originally was slated to bow July 2. City lawyers said no appeal was planned.

Censors had ruled the Columbia release "obscene and immoral." Ordered to make cuts before a permit would be issued, Preminger refused and sued in Federal District Court here for a permanent injunction. Two days of hearings early last week resulted in Judge Julius H. Miner declaring the city had exceeded its constitutional authority.

"Taken as a whole," said the court, "the film cannot be placed in the category of the obscene or the immoral because its dominant effect does not tend to excite sexual passion or undermine public morals."

The jurist had viewed the picture, with his family, at a private screening.

It developed after his decision that only one of the six widows comprising the censor board had stood firm for refusing a permit. Mrs. Honey Fischman, whose husband had been a Cook County (Chi) commissioner, city alderman and Democratic committeeman, claimed she still was right in her judgment, "though I realize I wouldn't have been upheld in the Supreme Court."

Legalites thought the city's unwillingness to press the issue indicated there was little or no hope of getting Judge Miner reversed. His decision, in fact, had plenty of precedent in higher courts. U.S. Supreme Court had already established, for one thing, that obscenity charges must attach to a picture as a whole and not just to some part of it.

The censors were upheld first by Police Comr. Timothy J. O'Connor, then by Mayor Richard J. Daley on appeal by Preminger and his Chi attorney Hubert Will. O'Connor, after viewing the pic, suggested that some of the franker language be eliminated, notably the words "rape" and "contraceptive."
